G E N T L E M E N,

WH E N I resolv'd to publish these Sermons, there could be no dispute to whom I should dedicate them They do of right belong to you, being most of them first preach'd among you; besides my great obligation to you for your constant respects to me, both in the favourable acceptance, and in the generous encouragement of my labours, ever since I had the honour and happiness to be related to you. In a thankful acknowledgment whereof I humbly present this small part of them to you, hoping that by the blessing of God they may be of some use for the promoting of true piety and vertue, which is the sincere wish and aim of

Your most obliged and faithful Servant,

THE PREFACE.

I Shall neither trouble the Reader, nor my self, with any Apology for the publishing of these Sermons. For if they be in any measure truly serviceable to the end for which they are design'd, to establish men in the Principles of Religion, and to recommend to them the practice of it with any considerable advantage, I do not see what Apology is necessary; and if they be not so, I am sure none can be sufficient. However if there need any, the common heads of excuse in these cases are very well known; and I hope I have an equal right to them with other men.

I shall chuse rather in this Preface, to give a short account of the following Discourses, and as briefly as I can to vindicate a single passage in the first of them from the Exceptions of a Gentleman who hath been pleas'd to honour it so far as to write a whole Book against it.

The Design of these Discourses is fourfold.

First, To shew the unreasonableness of Atheism, and of scoffing at Religion; which I am sorry is so necessary to be done in this Age. This I have endeavour'd in the two first of these Discourses.

Secondly, To recommend Religion to men from the great and manifold advantages which it brings both to publick Society and to particular persons. And this is the argument of the third and fourth.

Thirdly, To represent the excellency, more particularly, of the Christian Religion; and to vindicate the practice of it from the suspicion of those grievous troubles and difficulties which many imagine it to be attended withal. And this is the subject of the fifth and sixth.

Fourthly, To persuade men to the practice of this holy Religion, from the great obligation which the profession of Christianity lays upon men to that purpose; and more particularly, from the glorious rewards of another life; which is the design of the two last Discourses.

*Having given this short account of the following Discourses, I crave leave of the Reader to detain him a little longer, whilst I vindicate a passage in the first of these Sermons, from the assaults of a whole Book purposely writ against it. The Title of the Book is Faith vindicated from the possibility of Falshood. The Author Mr. J. S. the famous Author of Sure-footing. He hath indeed in this last Book of his, to my great amazement, quitted that glorious Title. Not that I dare assume to my self to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinc'd him of the fantasticalness of it. No, I despair to convince that man of any thing, who after so fair an admonition does still persist to maintain, * That first and self-evident Principles not only may, but are fit to be de-* † Ibid. p. 11. monstrated; and † that those ridiculous identical Propositions, that Faith is Faith, and a Rule is a Rule, are first Principles in this Controversy of the Rule of Faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about Rule or Faith. But there was another reason for his quitting of that Title, and a prudent one indeed: He hath forsaken the defence of Sure-footing, and then it became convenient to lay aside that Title, for fear of putting people any more in mind of that Book.

*I expected indeed after his Letter of Thanks, in which he * tells us, he intended to throw aside the rubbish of my Book, that in his Answer he might the better lay open the Fabrick of my Discourse, and have nothing there to do, but to speak to solid Points; I say, after this, I expected a full Answer to the solid Points (as he is pleased to call them) of my Book; and that, (according to his excellent method of removing the rubbish, in order to the pulling down of a building) the Fabrick of my Book would long since have been demolish'd and laid even with the ground. But especially, when in the conclusion of that most civil and obliging Letter, he threatn'd never to leave following on his blow, till he had either brought Dr. Still. and me to lay Principles that would bear the test, or it was made evident to all the world that we had none: I began (as I had reason) to be in a terrible fear of him, and to look upon myself as a dead man. And indeed who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of Demonstration, this Prince of Controvertists, this great Lord and Professor of First Principles? But I perceive that great minds are merciful, and do sometimes content themselves to threaten when they could destroy.*

*For instead of returning a full Answer to my Book, he (according to their new mode of confuting Books) manfully falls a nibbling at one single passage in it, pag. 118. wherein he makes me to say (for I say no such thing) that the Rule of Christian Faith, and consequently Faith it self, is possible to be false. Nay in his Letter of Thanks, * he says it is an avow'd Position, in that place, that Faith is possible to be false. And to give the more countenance to this calumny, he chargeth the same Position (in equivalent terms) of the possible falshood of Faith, and that as to the chiefest and most fundamental Point, the Tenet of a Deity, upon the forementioned Sermon. But because he knew in his conscience, that I had avow'd no such Position, he durst not cite the words either of my Book or Sermon, lest the Reader should have discover'd the notorious falshood and groundlesness of this Calumny: Nay he durst not so much as refer to any particular place in my Sermon, where such a passage might be found. And yet this is the Man that has the face to charge others with false citations, to which charge, before I have done, I shall say something, which (what effect soever it may have upon him) would make any other man sufficiently ashamed.*

But yet I must acknowledge, that in this Position which he fastens upon me, he honours me with excellent company, my Lord Faulkland, Mr. Chillingworth, and Dr. Stillingfleet; Persons of that admirable strength and clearness in their Writings, that Mr. S. when he reflects upon his own style and way of reasoning, may blush to acknowledge that ever he has read them. And as to this Position which he charges them withal, I do not know (nor have the least reason upon Mr. S's word to believe) any such thing is maintained by them.

As for my self, whom I am now only concern'd to vindicate, I shall set down the two Passages, to which I suppose he refers.

In my Sermon, I endeavour (among other things) to shew the unreasonableness of Atheism upon this account: Because it requires more evidence for things things than they are capable of. To make this good, I discourse thus : Aristotle hath long since observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of Proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Mathematical things being of an abstracted nature, are only capable of clear Demonstration. But Conclusions in Natural Philosophy, are to be prov'd by a sufficient Induction of experiments ; things of a Moral nature, by Moral Arguments, and Matters of Fact by credible Testimony. And though none of these be strict Demonstration, yet have we an undoubted assurance of them, when they are prov'd by the best Arguments that the nature and quality of the thing will bear. None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an Island in America as Jamaica ; yet upon the Testimony of credible persons, and Authors who have written of it, I am as free from all doubt concerning it, as from doubting of the clearest Mathematical Demonstration. So that this is to be entertain'd as a firm Principle , by all those who pretend to be certain of any thing at all, that when any thing is prov'd by as good Arguments as that thing is capable of, and we have as great assurance that it is, as we could possibly have supposing it were , we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing. Now to apply this to the present case. The Being of God is not Mathematically demonstrable, nor can it be expected it should ; because only Mathematical matters admit of this kind of evidence. Nor can it be prov'd immediately by sense, because God being suppos'd to be a pure Spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. But yet we have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be prov'd is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have, supposing that he were.

Upon this passage it must be (if any thing in the Sermon) that Mr. S. chargeth this Position (in equivalent terms) of the possible falshood of Faith, and that as to the chiefest and most fundamental Point, the Tenet of a Deity. And now I appeal to the Reader's Eyes and Judgment, whether the sum of what I have said, be not this, That though the existence of God be not capable of that strict kind of Demonstration which Mathematical matters are, yet, that we have an undoubted assurance of it. One would think that no man could be so ridiculous as from hence to infer, that I believe it possible, notwithstanding this assurance, that there should be no God. For however in many other cases an undoubted assurance that a thing is, may not exclude all suspicion of a possibility of its being otherwise ; yet in this Tenet of a Deity it most certainly does. Because whoever is assur'd that there is a God, is assur'd there is a Being whose existence is and always was necessary, and consequently is assured that it is impossible he should not be, and involves in it a contradiction. So that my Discourse is so far from being equivalent to the Position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. And he might with as much truth have affirm'd, that I had expressly, and in so many words said that there is no God.

The other passage is in pag. 118. of my Book , concerning the Rule of Faith. I was discoursing that no man can shew by any necessary argument , that it is naturally impossible that all the Relations concerning America should be false. But yet (say I) I suppose that notwithstanding this, no man in his wits is now posselt with so incredible a folly, as to doubt whether there be such a place. The case is the very same as to the certainty of an ancient Book, and of the sense of plain expressions : We have no demonstration for these things, and we expect none ; because we know the things are not capable of it. We are not infallibly certain, that any Book is so ancient as it pretends to be ; or that it was written by him whose Name it bears ; or that this is the sense of such and such passages in it ; it is possible all this may be otherwise: But we are very well assur'd that it is not, nor hath any prudent man any just cause to make the least doubt of it; For a bare possibility that a thing may be, or not be, is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. It is possible all the people in France may dye this night, but I hope the possibility of this doth not incline any man in the least to think it will be so. It is possible that the Sun may not rise to morrow morning; yet for all this I suppose that no man hath the least doubt but that it will.

To avoid the cavils of this impertinent Man, I have transcrib'd the whole Page to which he refers. And now where is this avow'd Position of the possible falshood of Faith? All that I say is this, That we are not infallible either in judging of the antiquity of a Book, or of the sense of it; by which I mean (as any man of sense and ingenuity would easily perceive I do) that we cannot demonstrate these things so, as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction; but yet that we may have a firm assurance concerning these matters, so as not to make the least doubt of them.

And is this to avow the possible falshood of Faith? And yet this Position Mr. S. charges upon these words; how justly I shall now examine.

Either by Faith Mr. S. means the Doctrine revealed by God, and then the meaning of the Position must be, that what God says, is possible to be false; which is so absurd a Position as can hardly enter into any man's mind; and yet Mr. S. hath the modesty all along in his Book to insinuate that in the forecited Passage I say as much as this comes to.

Or else Mr. S. means by Faith, the assent which we give to Doctrines as reveal'd by God; and then his sense of infallibility must be either, that whoever assents to any thing as reveal'd by God, cannot be deceiv'd, upon supposition that it is so reveal'd; or else absolutely, that whoever assents to any thing as reveal'd by God, cannot be deceiv'd. Now altho' I do not, in the Passage forecited, speak one syllable concerning Doctrines reveal'd by God, yet I affirm (and so will any man else) that an assent to any Doctrine as revealed by God, if it be revealed by him, is impossible to be false. But this is only an infallibility upon supposition, which amounts to no more than this, That if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. And yet the principal design of Mr. S's Book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny. But if he mean absolutely, that whoever assents to any Doctrine as reveal'd by God, cannot be deceiv'd, that is, that no man can be mistaken about matters of Faith (as he must mean, if he pretend to have any adversary, and do not fight only with his own shadow,) this I confess is a very comfortable assertion, but I am much afraid it is not true.

Or else, lastly, By Faith he understands the Means and Motives of Faith. And then the plain state of the controversy between us is this, Whether it be necessary to a Christian belief to be infallibly secur'd of the means whereby the Christian Doctrine is convey'd to us, and of the firmness of the Motives upon which our belief of it is grounded. This indeed is something to the purpose; for tho' in the passage before-cited, I say not one word concerning the Motives of our Belief of the Christian Doctrine, yet my Discourse there was intended to be apply'd to the means whereby the knowledge of this Doctrine is convey'd to us. However, I am contented to joyn issue with Mr. S. upon both these Points.

1. That it is not necessary to the true nature of Faith, that the Motives upon which any man believes the Christian Doctrine should be absolutely conclusive, and impossible to be false. That it is necessary, Mr. S. several times affirms in his Book;

THE P R E F A C E.

Book; but how unreasonably, appears from certain and daily experience. Very many Christians (such as St. Austin speaks of, as sav'd not by the quickness of their understandings, but the simplicity of their belief) do believe the Christian Doctrine upon incompetent grounds, and their belief is true, though the argument upon which they ground it be not (as Mr. S. says) absolutely conclusive of the thing: And he that thus believes the Christian Doctrine, if he adhere to it, and live accordingly, shall undoubtedly be sav'd; and yet I hope Mr. S. will not say that any man shall be saved without true Faith. I might add, that in this Assertion Mr. S. is plainly contradicted by those of his own Church.

For they generally grant, that General Councils, though they be infallible in their Definitions and Conclusions, yet are not always so in their Arguments and reasonings about them. And the Guide of Controversies* expressly says, ^{P. 35.} that it is not necessary that a Divine Faith should always have an external rationally infallible ground or motive thereto (whether Church-Authority, or any other) on his part, that so believes. Here is a man of their own Church avowing this Position, That Faith is possible to be false. I desire Mr. S. who is the very Rule of Controversie, to do justice upon this false Guide.

I must acknowledge that Mr. S. attempts to prove this Assertion, and that by a very pleasant and surprizing Argument, which is this. The profound Mysteries of Faith (he tells us†) must needs seem to some, (viz. those ^{† Faith vind. P. 89.} who have no light but their pure natural Reason, * as he said before) impossible to be true; which therefore nothing but a Motive of its own nature seemingly impossible to be false can conquer so as to make them conceit them really true. What Mr. S. here means by a Motive of its own nature seeming impossible to be false, I cannot divine, unless he means a real seeming impossibility. But be that as it will; does Mr. S. in good earnest believe that a Motive of its own nature seeming impossible to be false, is sufficient to convince any man, that has and uses the light of natural Reason, of the truth of a thing which must needs seem to him impossible to be true? In my opinion these two seeming impossibilities are so equally matched, that it must needs be a drawn Battel between them. Suppose the thing to be believed be Transubstantiation; this indeed is a very profound Mystery, and is (to speak in Mr. S's phrase) of its own nature so seemingly impossible, that I know no argument in the world strong enough to cope with it. And I challenge Mr. S. to instance in any Motive of Faith which is, both to our understanding and our senses, more plainly impossible to be false than their Doctrine of Transubstantiation is evidently impossible to be true. And if he cannot; how can he reasonably expect that any man in the World should believe it?

2. That it is not necessary to the true nature of Faith, that we should be infallibly secur'd of the means whereby the Christian Doctrine is convey'd to us; particularly of the Antiquity and Authority of the Books of Scripture, and that the expressions in it cannot possibly bear any other sense. And these are the very things I instance in, in the passage so often mention'd. And to these Mr. S. ought to have spoken, if he intended to have confuted that passage. But he was resolv'd not to speak distinctly, knowing his best play to be in the dark, and that all his safety lay in the confusion and obscurity of his talk.

Now that to have an infallible security in these particulars is not necessary to the true nature of Faith, is evident upon these two accounts; because Faith may be without this infallible security, and because in the particulars mention'd it is impossible to be had.

1. Because

The P R E F A C E.

1. Because Faith may be without this infallible security. He that is so assur'd of the Antiquity and Authority of the Books of Scripture, and of the sense of those Texts wherein the Doctrines of Christianity are plainly deliver'd, as to see no just cause to doubt thereof, may really assent to those Doctrines, though he have no infallible security. And an assent so grounded I affirm to have the true nature of Faith. For what degree of assent, and what security of the Means, which convey to us the knowledge of Christianity, are necessary to the true nature of Faith, is to be estimated from the end of Faith, which is the ^{the}salvation of mens souls. And whoever is so assur'd of the authority and sense of Scripture, as to believe the Doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be sav'd. And surely such a belief as will save a man hath the true nature of Faith, though it be ~~not~~ infallible. And if God have sufficiently provided for the salvation of men of all capacities, it is no such reflection upon the goodness and wisdom of Providence, as Mr. S. imagines, that he hath not taken care that every man's Faith should arrive to the degree of infallibility; nor does our Blessed Saviour, for not having made this provision, deserve to be esteem'd by all the world not a wise Lawgiver, but a mere Ignoramus and Impostor, as * one of his fellow Controversitists speaks with reverence.

* Labyrinthus Cantuariensis, p. 77.

Besides, this assertion that infallibility is necessary to the true nature of that assent which we call Faith, is plainly false upon another account also; because Faith admits of degrees. But Infallibility has none. The Scripture speaks of a weak and a strong Faith, and of the increase of Faith; but I never heard of a weak and strong Infallibility. Infallibility is the highest perfection of the knowing faculty, and consequently the firmest degree of assent upon the firmest grounds, and which are known to be so. But will Mr. S. say, that the highest degree of assent admits of degrees, and is capable of increase? Infallibility is an absolute impossibility of being deceived; now I desire Mr. S. to shew me the degrees of absolute impossibility; and if he could do that, and consequently there might be degrees of Infallibility, yet I cannot believe that Mr. S. would think fit to call any degree of Infallibility a weak Faith or assent.

2. Because an infallible security in the particulars mention'd, is impossible to be had; I mean in an ordinary way, and without miracle and particular revelation; because the nature of the thing is incapable of it. The utmost security we have of the antiquity of any Book is human Testimony, and all human Testimony is fallible for this plain reason, because all men are fallible. And though Mr. S. in defence of his beloved Tradition is pleas'd to say that human Testimony in some cases is infallible, yet I think no man before him was ever so hardy as to maintain that the Testimony of fallible men is infallible. I grant it to be in many cases certain; that is, such as a considerate man may prudently rely and proceed upon, and hath no just cause to doubt of; and such as none but an obstinate man or a fool can deny. And that thus the learned men of his own Church define certainty, Mr. S. (if he would but vouchsafe to read such Books) might have learnt from* Melchior Canus, who speaking of the firmness of human Testimony in some cases, (which yet he did not believe to be infallible) defines it thus, Those things are certain among men, which cannot be deny'd without obstinacy and folly. I know Mr. S. is pleas'd to say, that certainty and infallibility are all one. And he is the first man that I know of that ever said it. And yet perhaps some body may have been before him in it, for I remember Tully says, That there is nothing so foolish but some Philosopher or other has said it. I am sure Mr. S's own Philosopher Mr. Wh. contradicts him in this most clearly, in his Preface to Rushworth's Dialogues; where explicating the term Moral certainty, he tells us, that some understood by it such such a certainty as makes the cause always work the same effect, though it take not away the absolute possibility of working other ways; and this presently after he tells us, ought absolutely to be reckon'd in the degree of true certainty, and the Authors consider'd as mistaken in undervaluing it. So that according to Mr. White true certainty may consist with a possibility of the contrary, and consequently Mr. S. is mistaken in thinking certainty and infallibility to be all one. Nay, I do not find any two of them agreeing among themselves, about the notions of infallibility and certainty. Mr. Wh. says, that what some call moral certainty, is true certainty, though it do not take away a possibility of the contrary. Mr. S. asserts the direct contrary, that Moral certainty is only probability because it does not take away the possibility of the contrary. The Guide in Controversies * differs from them both, and makes moral, certain and infallible all one. I desire that they would agree these matters among themselves before they quarrel with us about them. P. 135.

* De lo. Theol. lib. 11. c. 4. Certa apud homines ea sunt, quae neque line pervincacia, & stultitia non possunt.

The P R E F A C E.

In brief then, though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently us'd for a firm and undoubted assent to a thing upon such grounds as are fit fully to satisfy a prudent man; and in this sense I have always us'd this Term. But now infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. And there are but two ways for the understanding to be thus secur'd; either by the perfection of its own nature, or by supernatural assistance. But no humane understanding being absolutely secur'd from possibility of mistake by the perfection of its own nature (which I think all mankind except Mr. S. have hitherto granted) it follows, that no man can be infallible in any thing, but by supernatural assistance. Nor did ever the Church of Rome pretend to infallibility upon any other account, as every one knows that hath been conversant in the Writings of their Learned men. And Mr. Cressy in his * Answer to Dr. Pierce hath not the face to contend for any other infallibility but this, that the immutable God can actually preserve a mutable creature from actual mutation: But I can by no means agree with him in what immediately follows, concerning the Omniscience of a creature; that God, who is absolutely omniscient, can teach a rational Creature all truths necessary or expedient to be known; so that though a man may have much ignorance, yet he may be in a sort omniscient within a determinate sphere. Omniscient within a determinate sphere; is an infinite without a finite sphere; and is not that a very pretty sort of knowing all things, which may consist with an ignorance of many things? Of all the Controvertists I have met with (except Mr. S.) Mr. Cressy is the happiest at these smart and ingenious kind of reasonings. P. 88, 89.

As to the other Particular of the sense of Books, it is likewise plainly impossible that any thing should be deliver'd in such clear and certain words as are absolutely incapable of any other sense; and yet notwithstanding this, the meaning of them may be so plain as that any unprejudic'd and reasonable man may certainly understand them. How many Definitions and Axioms, &c. are there in Euclid, in the sense of which men are universally agreed, and think themselves undoubtedly certain of it? and yet the words in which they are express'd, may possibly bear another sense. The same may be said concerning the Doctrines and Precepts of the H. Scriptures; and one great reason why men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, is because the interests, and lusts and passions of men are more concern'd in the one than the other. But whatever uncertainty there may be in the sense of any Texts of Scripture, Oral Tradition is so far from affording us any help in this case that it is a thousand times more uncertain and less to be trusted to; especially if we may take that to be the Traditional sense of Texts of Scripture, which we meet with in the Decretals of their Popes, and the Acts of some of their Councils; than which never was any thing thing in the whole world more absurd and ridiculous: And whence may we expect to have the infallible Traditional Sense of Scripture, if not from the Heads and Representatives of their Church?

This may abundantly suffice for the vindication of that Passage which Mr. S. makes such a rude clamor about, as if I had therein deni'd the truth and certainty of all Religion; but durst never trust the Reader with a view of those words of mine upon which he pretended to ground this Calumny. But the world understands well enough, that all this was but a shift of Mr. S's for the satisfaction of his own Party, and a pitiful Art to avoid the vindication of Surefooting, a Task he had no mind to undertake,

*And yet the main design of this Book which he calls Faith vindicated, &c. is to prove that which I do not believe any man living ever denied, viz. That what is true is not possible to be false: Which though it be one of the plainest Truths in the world, yet he proves it so foolishly, as would make any man (if it were not evident of it self) to doubt of it. He proves it from Logick, and Nature, and Metaphysicks, and Ethicks, &c. I wonder he did not do it likewise from Arithmetick, and Geometry, the Principles whereof, he * tells us are concerned in demonstrating the certainty of Oral Tradition. He might also have proceeded to Astrology, and Palmistry, and Chymistry, and have shewn how each of these lend their assistance to the evidencing of this Truth. For that could not have been more ridiculous, than his† Argument from the nature of Subject and Predicate, and Copula in Faith-Propositions; because forsooth whoever affirms any Proposition of Faith to be true, affirms it impossible to be false. Very true. But would any man argue, that what is true is impossible to be false, from the nature of Subject, Predicate and Copula? for be the Proposition true or false, these are of the same nature in both, that is, they are Subject, Predicate and Copula.*

But that the Reader may have a taste of his clear style, and way of reasoning, I shall for his satisfaction transcribe Mr. S's whole Argument from the nature of the Predicate. His words are these. Our Argument from the Copula is particularly strengthened from the nature of the Predicate in the Propositions we speak of; I mean in such speeches as affirm such and such points of Faith to be true. For True means Existent in Propositions which express only the Aneſt of a thing, as most Points of Faith do; which speak abstractedly, and tell not wherein the nature of the subject it speaks of consists, or the Quid est. So that most of the Propositions Christians are bound to profess are fully express'd thus, A Trinity is existent, &c. and the like may be said of those Points which belong to a Thing or Action past; as, Creation was, &c. For, Existent is the Predicate in these two, only affixt to another difference of time; and 'tis equally impossible such Subjects should neither have been nor not have been, or have been and have not been at once, as it is that a thing should neither be nor not be at present, or both be and not be at present. Regarding then stedfastly the nature of our Predicate [Existent] we shall find that it expresses the utmost Actuality of a Thing; and as taken in the posture it bears in those Propositions, that actually exercis'd, that is, the utmost Actuality in its most actual state; that is, as absolutely excluding all manner or least degree of Potentiality, and consequently all possibility of being otherwise; which is radically destroyed when all Potentiality is taken away. This Discourse holding, which in right to truth I shall not fear to affirm (unconcern'd in the drollery of any Opposer) to be more than Mathematically demonstrative, it follows inevitably, that whoſo is bound to profess a Trinity, Incarnation, &c. is or was existent, is also bound to profess that 'tis impossible they should be not Existent, or which is all one, that 'tis impossible these points of Faith should be false.

The same appears out of the nature of distinction or division applied to our Prædicate Existent, as found in these Propositions: For could that Prædicate bear a pertinent distinction expressing this and the other respect, or thus and thus, it might possibly be according to one of these respects, or thus considered, and not be according to another, that is another way considered: But this evasion is here impossible; for either those distinguishing Notions must be more Potential or Antecedent to the Notion of Existent, and then they neither reach Existent, nor supervene to it as its Determinations or Actuations, which differences ought to do; nor can any Notion be more Actual or Determinative in the line of Substance or Being, than Existent is; and, so fit to distinguish it in that line; nor, lastly, can any determination in the line of Accidents serve the turn; for, those suppose Existence already put, and so the whole Truth of the Proposition entire and complete antecedently to them: 'Tis impossible therefore that what is thus affirmed to be True, should in any regard be affirmed possible to be false: the impossibility of distinguishing the Prædicate pertinently excluding here all possibility of divers respects.

The same is demonstrated from the impossibility of distinguishing the Subjects of those Faith-Propositions; for those Subjects being Propositions themselves; and accepted for Truths, as is supposed, they are incapable of Distinction, as shall be particularly shewn hereafter. Besides, those Subjects being Points of Faith, and so standing in the Abstract, that is, not descending to subsuming respects, even in that regard too they are freed from all pertinent distinguishableness.

The same is demonstrated from the nature of Truth, which consists in an Indivisible; whence there is nothing of Truth had, how great soever the conceived approaches towards it may be, till all may-not-bees, or Potentiality to be otherwise, be utterly excluded by the Actuality of Is or Existence; which put or discovered, the light of Truth breaks forth, and the dim twilights of may-not-bees vanish and disappear.

I have here (Reader) presented thee with a Discourse which (if we may believe Mr. S.) is more than Mathematically demonstrative. A rare Sight indeed! And is not this a pleasant Man, and of good assurance? I now find it true, which he says elsewhere, That Principles are of an inflexible genius, and self-confident too, and that they love naturally to express themselves with an assuredness. But certainly the sacred names of Principles and Demonstration were never so prophand by any Man before. Might not any one write a Book of such Jargon, and call it Demonstration? And would it not equally serve to prove or confute? If he intended this stuff for the satisfaction of the People, he might as well have writ in the Coptick or Slavonian Language: yet I cannot deny, but that it is very suitable to the Principles of the Roman Church; for why should not their Science as well as their Service be in an unknown Tongue? that the one may be as fit to improve their knowledge, as the other is to raise their devotion. But if he design'd this for the Learned, nothing could be more improper; for they are far less apt to admire nonsense than the common People: And I desire that no man (how learned soever he may think himself) would be over-confident, that this is sense. I do verily believe, that neither Harphius nor Rusbrochius, nor the profound Mother Juliana, have any thing in their writings more senseless and obscure than this Discourse of his, which he affirms to be more than Mathematically Demonstrative. So that if I were worthy to advise Mr. S. he should give over this pretence to Science; for whatever he may think, his Talent certainly does not lye that way; but he seems to be as* well made for a Mystical Divine, as any man I know. And methinks his Superiors should be sensible of this, and employ him to write about the Deiform Fund of the Soul, the super-essential life, the method of Self-annihilation, and the passive unions of nothing with nothing: These are profound Subjects, and he hath a Style peculiarly fitted for them. For even in this parcel of stuff which I have now cited, there are five or six words, such as may-not-bees, potentiality, actuality, actuation, determinative, supervene and subsume, (which if they were but well mingled and discreetly ordered, and brought in now and then with a that is, to explain one another) would half set up a man in that way, and enable him to write as Mystical a Discourse as a man would wish. But enough of this. And I have trespass'd not a little upon mine own disposition in saying thus much, though out of a just indignation at confident Nonsense.

It is time now to draw towards a conclusion of this debate. I shall only leave with the Reader a few observations concerning this Book of Mr. S's, and his Doctrine of Infallibility.

First, That the main drift of his Book being to prove that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes no body that I know of in this matter.

Secondly, That in asserting Infallibility to be necessary to the true nature of Faith, he hath the generality of his own Church his professed Adversaries. The Church of Rome never arrogated to her self any other Infallibility but what she pretends to be founded upon Christ's promise to secure his Church always from Error by a supernatural assistance, which is widely different from Mr. S's rational infallibility of Oral Tradition. Mr. S. surely cannot be ignorant, that the Divines of their Church (till Mr. Rushworth and Mr. White found out this new way) did generally resolve Faith into the infallible Testimony of the Church, and the infallibility of their Church into our Saviour's Promise; and the evidence of the true Church into the Marks of the Church, or the Motives of credibility which Motives are acknowledg'd to be only prudential, and not demonstrative.

 Bellarmin says, that the Marks of the Church do not make it evidently true, which is the true Church, but only evidently credible; and that (says he) is said to be evidently credible which is neither seen in it self, nor in its Principles; but yet hath so many and so weighty Testimonies, that every wise man hath reason to believe it. Becanus † to the same purpose, that the Motives of credibility are only the foundation of a prudent, but not of an infallible assent. I know very well that Mr. Knott and some others would fain persuade us, that an assent in some sort infallible, may be built upon prudential Motives, which is as absurd as it's possible; but if it were true, yet Mr. S. would not accept of this sort of infallibility; nothing less will serve him than demonstrative Motives, and such as are absolutely conclusive of the thing. Stapleton (as Mr. Cressy tells us) expressly says, that such an infallible certitude of Means is not now necessary to the Pastors of the Church, as was necessary to the Apostles, who were the first founders of the Church. So that, according to these Authors, there may be true Faith where neither the Means nor the Motives of it are such as to raise our assent to the degree of infallibility. And this is as much to the full as any Protestant (that I know of) ever said. Nay, even his Friends of the Tradition, Mr. Rushworth, Mr. White, and Mr. Cressy, are guilty of the same damnable and fundamental Error, as Mr. S. calls it . For they grant less assurance than that which is infallible, to be sufficient to Christian Faith, and that we are justly condemn'd if we refuse to believe upon such evidence as does ordinarily satisfy prudent men in human affairs. And particularly, Mr. Wh. makes a question whether human nature be capable of infallibility; as I have shewn at large by clear and full Testimonies swer, p. 5.

Testimonies out of each of these Authors, in the Answer to Sure-footing †. Of † P. 120. which Testimonies, tho' Mr. S. hath not thought fit to take the least notice &c. throughout his Book; yet I cannot but think it a reasonable request, to desire him to vindicate the Divines of his own Church (especially those of his own way) from these things, before he charge us any farther with them.

Thirdly, That Mr. S. by this Principle, That infallibility is necessary to the true nature of Faith, makes every true believer infallible in matters of Faith; which is such a Paradox, as I doubt whether ever it enter'd into any other man's mind. But if it be true, what need then of any infallibility in Pope or Council? And if this infallibility be grounded upon the nature of Oral Tradition, what need of supernatural assistance? I doubt Mr. S. would be loath to preach this Doctrine at Rome; I have often heard, that there is an old testy Gentleman lives there, who would take it very ill that any one besides himself should pretend to be infallible.

*Fourthly, That Mr. S. by his Principles does plainly exclude from salvation the generality of his own Church, that is, all that do not believe upon his Grounds. And this is the necessary consequence of his reasoning in a late Treatise, entituled, The method to arrive at satisfaction in Religion: The principles whereof are these; That the Church is a Congregation of Faithful; The Faithful are those who have true Faith; That, till it be known which is the true Faith, it cannot be known which is the true Church; That which is the true Faith, can only be known by the true Rule of Faith, which is Oral Tradition; And that the infallibility of this Rule is evident to common sense. And from these Principles he concludes * that those who * Sec. 21. follow not this Rule, and so are out of this Church, can have no true Faith; And that though many of the Points to which they assent are true, yet their assent is not Faith; for Faith (speaking of Christian Faith) is an assent which cannot possibly be false. So that the Foundation of this Method is the self-evident infallibility of Oral Tradition, which hath been sufficiently consider'd in the Answer to Sure-footing, which yet remains unanswer'd. That which I am now concern'd to take notice of, is the consequence of this Method, which does at one blow excommunicate and unchristian the far greatest part of his own Church. For if all who do not follow Oral Tradition as their only Rule of Faith are out of the Church, and can have no true Faith, then all who follow the Council of Trent are ipso facto no Christians. For nothing is plainer, than that that Council did not make Oral Tradition the sole Rule of their Faith, nor rely upon it as such; which hath been prov'd at large in the Answer to Sure-footing.*

But why is Mr. S. so zealous in this matter of infallibility? There is a plain reason for it. He finds that confidence, how weakly soever it be grounded, hath some effect upon the common and ignorant People; who are apt to think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but Principles and Demonstration. And so we see it in some other Professions. There are a sort of People very well known, who find that the most effectual way to cheat the People is always to pretend to infallible Cures.

I have now done with his Infallibility. But I must not forget this Letter of Thanks. I shall wholly pass by the passion and ill language of it, which a man may plainly see to have proceeded from a gall'd and uneasy mind. He would fain put on some pleasantness, but was not able to conceal his vexation. Nor shall I insist upon his palpable shuffling about the explication of the Terms Rule and Faith. He was convinc'd that he had explain'd them very untowardly, and therefore would gladly come off by saying that he did not intend explication, but P. 7 only to prædicate or affirm something of them. And yet the whole design of the

*the first page of Sure-footing, is to shew the necessity of beginning with the meaning of those words which express the thing under debate: And this method he tells us he will apply to his present purpose, and will examine well what is meant by those words which express the thing he was to discuss, namely, The RULE of FAITH. Now if to examine well what is meant by words, be not to go about to explain them, I must confess my self to be in a great error. Of the same kind is his Apology for his Testimonies, as if they were * not intended against the Protestants; whereas his Book was writ against the Protestants; and when he comes to his Testimonies, he † declares the design of them to be, to second by Authority what he had before establish'd by Reason. So that if the Rational part of his Book was intended against the Protestants, and the Testimonies were design'd to second it, I cannot understand why he should say one was less intended against them than the other. But it seems he is so conscious of the weakness of those Testimonies, that he does not think them fit to satisfy any but those who believe him already.*

As to his charge of false citations, it is but the common artifice of the Roman Controvertists when they have nothing else to say. However, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamour, and leave it to the Reader to judge by these, of his sincerity in the rest.

P. 62.

He says, I notoriously abuse the Preface to Rushworth's Dialogues, in citing the Author of it to say that such certainty as makes the cause always to work the same effect though it take not away the absolute possibility of working otherwise, ought absolutely to be reckon'd in the degree of true certainty; whereas (says Mr. S.) he only tells us there, p. 7. that by moral certainty [some understood] such a certainty as makes the cause, &c. To vindicate my self in this, I shall only set the Author's words before the Reader's eyes. They are these. This term Moral certainty, every one explicated not alike; but some understood by it such a certainty as makes the cause always work the same effect, though it take not away the absolute possibility of working otherways. Others call'd that a moral certainty which proceeds from, &c. A third explication of this word is, &c. Of these three the first ought absolutely to be reckon'd in the degree of true certainty, and the Authors consider'd as mistaken in undervaluing it. Is this only to tell us that by moral certainty some understood, &c. Does not the Prefacer also expressly affirm, that what these some understood by moral certainty, ought absolutely to be reckon'd in the degree of true certainty? which is the very thing I cited him for.

P. 65.

Another heavy charge is, that according to my usual sincerity, I quote Rushworth's Nephew to say, that a few good words are to be cast in concerning Scripture, [for the satisfaction of indifferent men who have been brought up in this verbal and apparent respect of the Scripture,] whereas (says Mr. S.) in the place you cite, he only expresses, it would be a satisfaction to indifferent men to see the positions one would induce them to embrace, maintainable by Scripture. Does he only say so? let the Reader judge. The words in Mr. Rushworth are these: Yet this I must tell ye, that it were a great satisfaction for indifferent men, that have been brought up in this verbal and apparent respect of the Scripture, to see that the Positions you would induce them unto, can be and are maintain'd by Scripture, and that they are grounded therein. Certainly one would think that either this man has no eyes or no forehead.

P. 76, 77.

But the greatest outcry of all is, that I abuse his first Demonstration by virtue of a direct falsification both of his words and sense, by coggling in the word [all,]

The P R E F A C E.

[all,] making his principle run thus, that the greatest hopes and fears are applied to the minds of [all] Christians. This indeed I make to be his Principle grounded upon his words which I had cited a little before; and they are these, First, that Christian Doctrine was at first unanimously settled by the Apostles in the hearts of the faithful, dispers'd in great multitudes over several parts of the world. 2dly. That this Doctrine was firmly believed by [all] those faithful to be the way to Heaven, and the contradicting or deserting of it to be the way to damnation; so that the greatest hopes and fears imaginable were, by engaging the divine Authority, strongly apply'd to the minds of the first Believers, &c. Now if these first believers, to whom he says these hopes and fears were strongly apply'd, be all those faithful he spoke of before, which were dispers'd over several parts of the world, (as the tenor of his words plainly shews) what are these less than all the Christians of that Age? And he himself a little after tells us, there is the same reason of the following Ages. So that I made his Principle run no otherwise than he himself had laid it. And if it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. I wonder more at his confidence in charging such falsifications upon me as every man's eyes will presently confute him in. Methinks though a man had all Science, and all Principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some Conscience.

I shall only speak a few words to the two solid Points, (as I may call them) of his Letter, and I have done.

I had charg'd him that he makes Traditions certainty a first and self-evident Principle, and yet that he goes about to demonstrate it; which I said was impossible to be done, and if it could be done was needless. To avoid this inconvenience which he found himself sorely press'd withal, he distinguishes between Speculative and Practical self-evidence, and says that things which are practically self-evident may be demonstrated, but those that are speculatively so, cannot. But he must not think to shelter himself from so palpable an absurdity by this impertinent distinction. For let things be evident how they will, speculatively or practically, 'tis plain that if they be Principles evident of themselves they need nothing to evidence them; and if they be first Principles there can be nothing to make them more evident, because there is nothing before them to demonstrate them by. Now if Mr. S. had in truth believed that the certainty of Tradition was a first and self-evident Principle, he should by all means have let it alone, for it was in a very good condition to shift for it self; but his blind way of Demonstration is enough to cast a mist about the clearest Truth in the world. But perhaps by the self-evident certainty of Tradition, Mr. S. only means that it is evident to himself, for I dare say it is so to no body else. And if that be his meaning, he did well enough to endeavour to demonstrate it; it was no more than needed.

The other Point is about his First Principles, such as these, a Rule is a Rule, Faith is Faith, &c. which he says † must principle all that can be so-† P. 11. lidly concluded either about Rule or Faith. Of these he hath mighty store, and blesteth himself in it, as the Rich man in the Gospel did in his full Barns, Soul take thine ease, thou hast Principles laid up for many years; and out of an excess of good nature pities my case, who did undertake to write a Discourse about the Ground of Faith, without so much as one principle to P. 74. bless my self with. But the mischief is, that after all this stir about them they are good for nothing, and of the very same stamp with that frivolous one Aristotle speaks of [if a thing be, it is,] which he rejects as a vain and ridiculous Proposition. Such are Mr. S.'s first Principles, surfeited of too much truth (as an ingenious Writer of his own Church says of them) and ready to burst with self-evidence, and yet by ten thousand of them a man shall not be able to advance one step in knowledge, because they produce no conclusion but themselves; whereas it

it is of the nature of Principles to yield a Conclusion different from themselves. And to convince Mr. S. fully of the foolery of these Principles, I will try what can be done with them, either in a Categorical or Hypothetical Syllogism, e. g. A Rule is a Rule, Tradition is a Rule, Ergo Tradition is a Rule. Again, If a Rule be a Rule, than a Rule is a Rule; But a Rule is a Rule, Ergo. How is any man the wiser for all this? But it may be Mr. S. can make better work with them, and manage them more dextrously, so as to principle any thing that can be solidly concluded in any Controversy.

And now I hope at last to have given Mr. S. full satisfaction; since he has brought me to the very point he desired, to acknowledge that I have no Principles. And indeed if there be no other to be had but such as these, I do declare to all the world, that I neither have any Principles, nor will have any.

S E R M O N I.

The Wisdom of being Religious.

J O B XXVIII. 28.

And unto man be said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding.

IN this Chapter Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and the unsearchable perfections of the works of God. And the result of his discourse is this. That a perfect knowledge of Nature is no where to be found but in the Author of it; no less wisdom and understanding than that which made the World and contrived this vast and regular frame of Nature can thoroughly understand the Philosophy of it and comprehend so vast a design: But yet there is a knowledge which is very proper to man and lies level to humane understanding; and that is the knowledge of our Creator and of the duty we owe to him; the wisdom of pleasing God, by doing what he commands and avoiding what he forbids: This Knowledge and Wisdom may be attained by man, and is sufficient to make him happy. And unto man be said, Behold, the fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding.

These words consist of two Propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously express'd; For wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here; and though sometimes they have different notions, yet in the Poetical Books of Scripture they are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. And so likewise the fear of the Lord, and departure from evil, are phrases of a very near sense, and like importance; and therefore we find them several times put together in Scripture: Fear the Lord, and depart from evil: By the fear of the Lord men depart from evil. So that they differ only as cause and effect, which by a Metonymy usual in all sorts of Authors, are frequently put one for another.

Now, to fear the Lord, and to depart from evil, are phrases which the Scripture useth in a very great latitude, to express to us the sum of Religion, and the whole of our duty. And because the large usage of these phrases is to be the foundation of my following discourse, I shall for the farther clearing of this matter endeavour to shew these two things :

1. That 'tis very usual in the Language of Scripture to express the whole of Religion by these and such like phrases.
2. The particular fitness of these two phrases to describe Religion.

I. It is very usual in the Language of Scripture to express the whole of Religion by some eminent principle or part of Religion.

The great Principles of Religion are knowledge, faith, remembrance, love, and fear ; by all which the Scripture useth to express the whole duty of man.

In the Old Testament, by the knowledge, remembrance and fear of God. Pro. 30.3. Religion is called The knowledge of the holy. And wicked men are described to be such as know not God. So likewise, by the fear of the Lord, Jer. 10.25. frequently in this Book of Job, and in the Psalms and Proverbs. And, Mal. 3.16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another. And the fear of God is expressly said to be the sum of Religion, Fear God and keep his Eccl. 12. Commandments, for this is the whole of man : And on the contrary, the wicked are described to be such as have not the fear of God before their eyes. Psal. 36.1. And so likewise by the remembrance of God, Remember thy Creator in Eccl. 12.1. the days of thy youth ; that is, enter upon a religious course betimes : Psal. 9.17. And on the contrary, the character of the wicked is, that they forget God ; The wicked shall be turned into Hell ; and all the Nations that forget God. In the New Testament, Religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is, that true Christians are so frequently called believers, and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Ro. 8. 28. And that good men are described to be such as love God, All things shall Eph. 6.24. work together for good to them that love God ; and such as love the Lord Jesus Christ. Now the reason why these are put for the whole of Religion, is, because the belief, and knowledge, and remembrance, and love, and fear of God, are such powerful principles, and have so great an influence upon men to make them Religious, that where any one of these really is, all the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be.

And so likewise the sum of all Religion it often expressed by some eminent part of it ; which will explain the second phrase here in the Text, departing from evil. The worship of God is an eminent part of Religion ; and Prayer, which is often in Scripture expressed by seeking God, and calling upon his Name, is a chief part of Religious worship. Hence Religion is described by seeking God, He is a rewarder of them that diligently Heb. 11.6. seek him : and by calling upon his name, Whoever calleth upon the name of Acts 2.21. the Lord, shall be saved. And so by coming to God, and by departing from evil. In this fallen state of man Religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which, are God and Sin : Hence it is that Religion is described sometimes by coming to God. He that cometh to Heb. 11.6. God, must believe that he is ; that is, no man can be religious, unless he believe there is a God ; sometimes by departing from sin, And he that de- Isa. 59.15. parteth from evil, maketh himself a prey : that is, such was the bad state of those times of which the Prophet there complains that no man could be religious but he was in danger of being persecuted.

II. For the fitness of these two phrases to describe Religion.

1. For the first, [the fear of the Lord] The fitness of this phrase will appear, appear, if we consider how great an influence the fear of God hath upon men to make them religious. Fear is a passion that is most deeply rooted in our natures, and flows immediately from that Principle of self-preservation which God hath planted in every man. Every one desires his own preservation and happiness, and therefore hath a natural dread and horror of every thing that can destroy his Being, or endanger his happiness. And the greatest danger is from the greatest power, and that is Omnipotency. So that the fear of God is an inward acknowledgment of a holy and just Being, which is armed with an almighty and irresistible power; God having hid in every Man's Conscience a secret awe and dread of his infinite power, and eternal justice. Now fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of Laws, and the great security of our duty.

There are two bridles or restraints which God hath put upon humane nature, shame and fear. Shame is the weaker, and hath place only in those in whom there are some remainders of virtue. Fear is the stronger, and works upon all who love themselves and desire their own preservation. Therefore in this degenerate state of mankind, fear is that passion which hath the greatest power over us, and by which God and his Laws take the surest hold of us: Our desire, and love, and hope, are not so apt to be wrought upon by the representation of virtue, and the promises of reward and happiness, as our fear is from the apprehensions of Divine displeasure. For though we have lost in a great measure the gust and relish of true happiness, yet we still retain a quick sense of pain and misery. So that fear relies upon a natural love of our selves, and is complicated with a necessary desire of our own preservation. And therefore Religion usually makes its first entrance into us by this passion; hence perhaps it is that Solomon more than once calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.

2. As for the Second phrase [departing from evil] the fitness of it to express the whole duty of man, will appear, if we consider the necessary connexion that is between the negative and positive part of our duty. He that is careful to avoid all sin will sincerely endeavour to perform his duty. For the soul of man is an active principle, and will be employed one way or other, it will be doing something; if a man abstain from evil, he will do good. Now there being such a strait connexion between these, the whole of our duty may be expressed by either of them; but most fitly by departing from evil, because that is the first part of our duty. Religion begins in the forsaking of sin:

*Virtus est vitium fugere, & sapientia prima
Stultitia caruisse* ———

Virtue begins in the forsaking of vice; and the first part of wisdom is not to be a fool. And therefore the Scripture, which mentions these parts of our duty, doth constantly put departing from evil first; Depart from evil Ps 101.2 & 37.27 and do good. Cease to do evil, learn to do well. Let the wicked forsake his Ib 1.16 way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. 17 & 55
We are first to put off the old man which is corrupt according to deceitful lusts, 7 Eph 4. and then to be renewed in the spirit of our Minds, and to put on the new 23, 24. 1 Pet. 3. 17 man, &c. Let him eschew evil and do good. To all which I may add this farther consideration, that the Law of God contained in the ten Com-B 2 mandments, mandments, consisting mostly of prohibitions, (Thou shalt not do such or such a thing) our observance of it is most fitly expressed by departing from evil, which yet includes obedience likewise to the positive Precepts implied in those Prohibitions.

Having thus explain'd the Words, I come now to consider the Proposition contain'd in them, which is this :

That Religion is the best knowledge and wisdom.

This I shall endeavour to make good these three ways. .

1. By a direct proof of it.

2. By shewing on the contrary the folly and ignorance of irreligion and wickedness.

3. By vindicating Religion from those common imputations which seem to charge it with ignorance or imprudence.

I begin with the direct proof of this: And because Religion comprehends two things, the knowledge of the Principles of it, and a suitable life and practice; (the first of which being speculative, may more properly be called knowledge; and the latter, because 'tis practical, may be called wisdom or prudence) therefore I shall endeavour distinctly to prove these two things.

1. That Religion is the best knowledge.

2. That 'tis the truest wisdom.

1. First. That it is the best knowledge.

The knowledge of Religion commends it self to us upon these two accounts.

1. 'Tis the knowledge of those things which are in themselves most excellent.

2. Of those things which are most useful and necessary for us to know.

First, It is the best knowledge, because it is the knowledge of those things which are in themselves most excellent and desirable to be known; and those are God and our duty. God is the sum and comprehension of all perfection. It is delightful to know the Creatures, because there are particular excellencies scatter'd and dispers'd among them, which are some shadows of the Divine Perfections : But in God all Perfections in their highest degree and exaltation meet together and are united. How much more delightful then must it needs be to fix our minds upon such an object in which there is nothing but beauty and brightness, what is amiable, and what is excellent; what will ravish our affections and raise our wonder, please us and astonish us at once: And that the finite measure and capacity of our understandings is not able to take in and comprehend the infinite perfections of God, this indeed shews the excellency of the object, but doth not altogether take away the delightfulness of the knowledge. For as it is pleasant to the Eye to have an endless prospect, so is it some pleasure to a finite understanding to view unlimited excellencies which have no shore or bounds, tho' it cannot comprehend them. There is a pleasure in admiration; and this is that which properly causeth admiration, when we discover a great deal in an object which we understand to be excellent, and yet we see we know not how much more beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend.

And as the knowledge of God in his nature and perfections is excellent and desirable, so likewise to know him in those glorious manifestations of himself in the Works of Creation and Providence; and above all, in that stupendous work of the Redemption of the world by Jesus Christ, which was such a mystery, and so excellent a piece of knowledge that the Angels are said to desire to pry into it. 1 Pet. 1. 12.

And as the knowledge of God is excellent, so likewise of our Duty, which is nothing else but virtue and goodness and holiness, which are the image of God, a conformity to the nature and will of God, and an imitation of the Divine Excellencies and Perfections, so far as we are capable: For to know our duty is to know what it is to be like God in goodness, and pity, and patience, and clemency, in pardoning injuries, and passing by provocations; in justice and righteousness, in truth and faithfulness; and in a hatred and detestation of the contrary of these. In a word, it is to know what is the good and acceptable will of God, what it is that he loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us to do in order to our perfection and our happiness. It is deservedly accounted a piece of excellent knowledge to know the laws of the Land, and the Customs of the Countrey we live in, and the will of the Prince we live under: How much more, to know the Statutes of Heaven, and the Laws of eternity, those immutable and eternal rules of justice and righteousness; to know the will and pleasure of the great Monarch and universal King of the World, and the Customs of that Countrey where we must live for ever? This made David to admire the Law of God at that strange rate, and to advance the knowledge of it above all other knowledge, I have seen an end of all perfection, but thy commandment is exceeding broad. Psal. 119. 96.

Secondly, 'Tis the knowledge of those things which are most useful and necessary for us to know. The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose; and the more necessary any thing is to such an end, the better it is: So that the best knowledge is that which is of greatest use and necessity to us in order to our great end, which is eternal happiness, and the salvation of our Souls. Curious speculations, and the contemplation of things that are impertinent to us, and do not concern us, nor serve to promote our happiness, are but a more specious and ingenious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of Ignorance. That Man that doth not know those things which are of use and necessity for him to know is but an ignorant Man, whatever he may know besides. Now the knowledge of God, and of Christ, and of our duty, is of the greatest usefulness and necessity to us in order to our happiness. It's of absolute necessity that we should know God and Christ, in order to our being happy; This is life eternal (that is, the only way to it) to know thee the only true God, and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ. It is necessary also in order to our happiness to know our duty: because 'tis necessary for us to do it, and it is impossible to do it except we know it. John 17 3

So that whatsoever other knowledge a man may be endued withal, he is but an ignorant person who doth not know God, the Author of his being, the preserver and protector of his life, his Sovereign, and his Judge, the giver of every good and perfect gift, his surest refuge in trouble, his best Friend or worst enemy, the present support of his life, his hopes in death, his future happiness, and his portion for ever: who does not know his relation to God, the duty that he owes him, and the way to please him who can make him happy or miserable for ever: who doth not know the Lord Jesus Christ who is the way, the truth, and the life.

If a man by a vast and imperious mind, and a heart large as the sand upon the Sea-shore, (as it is said of Solomon) could command all the knowledge of Nature and Art, of words and things; could attain to a mastery in all Languages, and sound the depths of all Arts and Sciences, measure the earth and the heaven, and tell the stars, and declare their ordes and motions; could discourse of the interests of all States, the intrigues of all Courts, the reason of all Civil laws and constitutions, and give an account of the History of all Ages; could speak of trees, from the Cedar tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the Hyssop that springs out of the wall; and of beasts also and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fishes: and yet should in the mean time, be destitute of the knowledge of God and Christ, and his duty; all this would be but an impertinent vanity, and a more glittering kind of Ignorance; and such a man (like the Philosopher, who whilst he was gazing upon the stars, fell into the ditch) would but sapienter descendere in infernum, be undone with all this knowledge, and with a great deal of wisdom go down to Hell.

2. Secondly, That to be religious is the truest wisdom, and that likewise upon two accounts.

1. Because it is to be wise for our selves.

2. It is to be wise as to our main interest and concernment.

1. 'Tis to be wise for our selves. There's an expression, Job 22. 21. He that is wise is profitable to himself; and Prov. 9. 12. If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thy self; intimating that wisdom regards a man's own interest and advantage, and that he is not a wise man that doth not take care of himself and his own concerns, according to that of Old Ennius, nequicquam sapere sapientem, qui sibi ipsi prodesse non quiret, That man hath but an empty title of Wisdom and is not really wise who is not wise for himself. As self-preservation is the first principle of Nature, so care of our selves and our own interest is the first part of wisdom. He that is wise in the affairs and concerns of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise: he is employed indeed, but not so as a wise man should be: Now this is the Wisdom of Religion, that it directs a man to a care of his own proper interest and concernment.

2. It is to be wise as to our main interest. Our chief end and highest interest is happiness: And this is happiness to be freed from all (if it may) however from the greatest evils; and to enjoy (if it may be) all good, however the chiefest. To be happy is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit: not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of Conscience and tranquility of mind. To be happy, is not only to be so for a little while, but as long as may be; and if it be possible, for ever. Now Religion designs our greatest and longest happiness; it aims at a freedom from the greatest evils, and to bring us to the possession and enjoyment of the greatest good. For Religion wisely considers that men have immortal spirits, which as they are spirits are capable of a pleasure and happiness distinct from that of our bodies and our senses; and because they are immortal, are capable of an everlasting happiness. Now our souls being the best part of our selves, and eternity being infinitely the most considerable duration, the greatest wisdom is to secure the interest of our souls and of eternity though it be with loss and to the prejudice of our temporal and inferior Interests: Therefore Religion directs us rather to secure inward peace than outward ease, to be more careful to avoid everlasting and intolerable torment than short

short and light afflictions which are but for a moment ; to court the favour of God more than the friendship of the World, and not so much to fear them that can kill the body , and after that have no more that they can do, as him who after he hath kill'd, can destroy both body and soul in hell : In a word, our main interest is to be as happy as we can, and as long as is possible ; and if we be cast into such circumstances, that we must be either in part and for a time or else wholly and always miserable, the best wisdom is to chuse the greatest and most lasting happiness, but the least and shortest misery. Upon this account Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world, and is much more careful to avoid eternal misery than present sufferings. This is the wisdom of Religion, that upon consideration of the whole and casting up all things together, it does advise and lead us to our best interest.

II. The Second way of confirmation shall be by endeavouring to shew the ignorance and folly of irreligion. Now all that are irreligious are so upon one of these two accounts : Either, First, because they do not believe the foundations and principles of Religion, as the existence of God, the immortality of the Soul, and future rewards : or else, Secondly, because though they do in some sort believe these things, yet they live contrary to this their belief ; and of this kind are the far greatest part of wicked men. The first sort are guilty of that which we call speculative, the other of practical Atheism. I shall endeavour to shew the Ignorance and Folly of both these.

First, Speculative Atheism is unreasonable, and that upon these Five accounts. 1. Because it gives no tolerable account of the existence of the world. 2. Nor does it give any reasonable account of the universal consent of mankind in this apprehension, That there is a God. 3. It requires more evidence for things than they are capable of. 4. The Atheist pretends to know that which no man can know. 5. Atheism contradicts it self.

I. Because it gives no tolerable account of the existence of the world. One of the greatest difficulties that lies in the Atheist's way is, upon his own supposition that there is no God, to give a likely account of the existence of the world. We see this vast frame of the World, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it, all which we who believe a God attribute to Him as the Author of them. For a Being suppos'd of infinite goodness and wisdom and power is a very likely cause of these things. What more likely to make this vast world, to stretch forth the Heavens and lay the foundation of the Earth, and to form these and all things in them of nothing, than infinite power ? What more likely to communicate Being and so many degrees of happiness to so many several sorts of creatures, than infinite goodness ? What more likely to contrive this admirable frame of the Universe and all the creatures in it, each of them so perfect in their kind and all of them so fitted to each other and to the whole, than infinite counsel and wisdom ? This seems to be no unreasonable account.

But let us see now what account the Atheist gives of these things. If there be no God there are but these two ways imaginable for the world to be. Either it must be said, That not only the Matter but also the Frame of this world is eternal ; and that as to the main, things always were as they are without any first cause of their being ; which is the way of the Aristotelian Atheist ; (those I mean, who proceed upon Aristotle's supposition of the eternity of the world, but yet deny it to be from God, which he expressly asserts) Or else the matter of the world being supposed to be eternal and of it self, the original of this vast and beautiful frame must be ascribed meerly to chance, and the casual concurrence of the parts of matter ; which is the way of the Epicurean Atheist. But neither of these ways gives a tolerable account of the existence of the world.

Aristotelian

I. I shall first consider the Hypothesis of those whom for distinction sake I call the Aristotelian Atheists, which is this ; That not only the matter but also the frame of the world is eternal, and that as to the main it was always as it is, of it self ; and that there hath been from all eternity a succession of men and other creatures without any first cause of their being.

It seems to be very hard, and if that would do any good might be just matter of complaint, that we are fallen into so prophane and sceptical an age which takes a pleasure and a pride in unravelling almost all the received principles both of Religion and Reason : So that we are put many times to prove those things which can hardly be made plainer than they are of themselves. And such almost are these Principles, That God is, and That all things were made by him ; which by reason of the bold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men we are now-a-days put to defend.

That something is of it self is evident, because we see things are. And the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always and of themselves. One of these two is unavoidable.

So that the controversy between us and this sort of Atheist comes to this ; Which is the more credible opinion, that the world was never made nor had a beginning but always was as it is, and that there hath been from all eternity a succession of men and other creatures without any first cause of their being ; or, that there was from all eternity such a being as we conceive God to be, infinite in power, goodness and wisdom, which made us and all other things ; The first of these opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable, and such evidence as is sufficient to convince any impartial and considerate man.

Now in comparing the probabilities of things, that we may know on which side the advantage lies, these two considerations are of great moment, What the arguments are on each side, and what the difficulties. For if there be fair proofs on the one side, and none at all on the other, and if the most pressing difficulties be on that side on which there are no proofs : this is sufficient to render one opinion very credible and the other altogether incredible.

These two things therefore I shall endeavour to make good, in the matter that is now under our consideration. First, That there are fair proofs on our side, and as convincing as the nature of the thing is capable of ; but that there is no pretence of proof on the other. And Secondly, That the side on which there is no proof is incumbered with the greatest difficulties.

First, That there are fair proofs on our side, and as convincing as the nature of the thing is capable of ; but that there is no pretence of proof on the other.

This Question, Whether the world was created and had a beginning, or not ?

not? is a question concerning an ancient matter of fact, which can only be decided these two ways; by testimony, and by probabilities of reason. Testimony, is the principal argument in a matter of this nature, and if fair probabilities of reason concur with it this argument hath all the strength it can have: Now both these are clearly on the affirmative side of the question, viz. That the world was created, and had a beginning.

I. Testimony; of which there be two kinds, Divine and Humane.

Divine testimony, as such, is not proper to be us'd in this cause considering the occasion of the present debate: For that would be to beg the first and main question now in controversy, which is, Whether there be a God or not? which a testimony from God does suppose, and therefore ought not to be brought for the proof of it. 'Tis true indeed that those effects of Divine Power, I mean miracles which will prove a Divine testimony to an Infidel, will as well prove the being of a God to an Atheist; But when we dispute against those who deny a God no testimony ought to be presum'd to be from God, but must be prov'd to be so. And whatever argument proves that will also prove that there is a God.

Humane testimonies are of two sorts; universal tradition, and written History. Both these are plainly and beyond dispute on our side.

First, There is an universal tradition concerning the beginning of the world, and that it was made by God. And for the evidence of this we have the concurring Tradition of the most ancient Nations, the Egyptians and *Phenicians; and of the most barbarous the Indians; who as Strabo† tells us, did in many things agree with the Grecians, particularly in this, that the world did begin, and should have an end; and that God the maker and governor of it, is present in all parts of it. And Acosta tells us, that at the first discovery of America, the inhabitants of Peru did worship one chief God, under the name or title of The maker of the Universe: And yet these People had not had any commerce with the other known parts of the world, for God knows how many ages.

To which may be added, that the most ancient of the Philosophers, and those that were the heads of the chief Sects of Philosophy; as Thales, Anaxagoras and Pythagoras did likewise consent to this Tradition. Particularly concerning Thales, *Tully tells us that he was the first of all the Philosophers that enquired into these things; and he said, that water was the beginning of all things, and that God was that mind (or intelligent Principle) which fashion'd all things out of water. So likewise *Strabo informs us that the Brachmans, the chief Sect of Philosophers among the Indians, agreed with the Grecians in this, That the world was made of water. Which agrees exactly with Moses's account of the Creation, viz. That the Spirit of God moved upon the face of waters; which *St. Peter expresses thus, That by the word of God the heavens and the earth (for so the Hebrews call the world) were of old ἔκ υδατος constituted or made of water; not standing out of the water, as our Translation renders it.

Nay *Aristotle himself, who was the great asserter of the eternity of the world, gives this account why the Gods were anciently represented by the Heathens as swearing by the lake Styx, because water was supposed to be the principle of all things. And this, he tells us, was the most ancient opinion concerning the original of the world; and that the very oldest Writers of Theology, and those who liv'd at the greatest distance from his time, were of this mind. And in the Book *de Mundo it is freely acknowledg'd to have been an ancient saying, and a general Tradition among all men, That all things are of God, and were made by him. I will conclude this with that full Testimony of Maximus Tyrius * to this purpose : However (says he) men may differ in other things, yet they all agree in this Law or Principle, that there is one God, King, and Father of all things, &c. This the Greeks say, this the Barbarians ; this those that live upon the Continent, and those that dwell by the Sea ; the wise and the unwise.

Secondly, We have likewise a most ancient and credible History of the beginning of the world ; I mean the History of Moses, with which no Book in the world in point of antiquity can contend. I shall not now go about to strengthen my argument, by pleading the Divine authority of this Book ; for which yet I could offer good evidence, if that were proper to the matter in hand. It is sufficient to my present purpose that Moses have the ordinary credit of an Historian given him, which none in reason can deny him, he being cited by the most ancient of the Heathen Historians, and the antiquity of his writings never questioned by any of them, as Josephus * assures us.

Now this History of Moses gives us a particular account of the beginning of the world, and of the creation of it by God. Which assertion of his is agreeable to the most ancient Writers among the Heathen, whether Poets or Historians. And several of the main parts of Moses's History, as concerning the Flood and the first Fathers of the several Nations of the World (of which he gives a particular account, Gen. 10.) do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of Profane History. And I do not know, whether any thing ought more to recommend the Writings of Moses to a human belief, than the easy and credible account which he gives of the original of the World, and of the first peopling of it.

As to the account of ancient times, both the Egyptian and Chaldean accounts, which are pretended by some to be so vastly different from that of the Scriptures, may for all that be, near the matter, easily reconcil'd with it * ; if we do but admit what Diodorus Siculus and Plutarch, very credible persons and diligent searchers into ancient Books, do most expressly assure us, viz. that both those Nations did anciently reckon months for years. And the account of the Chineses is not hard to be reconcil'd with that of the Septuagint. Now in so nice and obscure a matter, as the account of ancient times is, it ought to satisfy any fair and reasonable enquirer if they can be brought any whit near one another.

So that universal Tradition and the most ancient History in the world, are clearly on our side. And if they be, one can hardly wish a more convincing argument. For if the world, and consequently mankind had a beginning, there is all the reason in the world to expect these two things : First, that there should be an universal Tradition concerning this matter ; because it was the most memorable thing that could be transmitted to posterity. And this was easy to be done, if mankind sprang from one common root and original, from whence this Tradition would naturally be universally diffus'd. Secondly, it may with the same reason be expected, that so remarkable a thing should be recorded in the most ancient History. Now both these have accordingly happen'd. But then on the other hand, if the world was eternal and had no beginning there could be no real ground for such a Tradition or History. And if such a Tradition were at any time endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should should at first gain entertainment, but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. For upon the supposition of those who hold the eternity of the world, the world was always peopled; and if so, there could be no common head or spring from whence such a Tradition would naturally derive it self into all parts of the world. So that unless all the world was sometime of one language, and under one Government (which it never was that we know of since it was peopled) no endeavour and industry could make such a Tradition common.

If it be said, that this Tradition began after some universal deluge, out of which possibly but one family might escape, and that possibly too of barbarous people; from whom any fond and groundless conceit might spring and afterwards spread it self as mankind encreased. This I shall have occasion to consider in a more proper place. In the mean time I have shewn, even from the acknowledgment of Aristotle himself, that there was anciently such a Tradition concerning the beginning of the world. Nay, if we may believe him, he himself was the very first asserter of the eternity of the world. For he * says expressly, That all the Philosophers that were before him, did hold that the world was made. Thus much for the first kind of proof this matter is capable of, namely, testimony.

* De Caelo

2^{dly}. The probabilities of reason do all likewise favour the beginning of the world: As,

1. The want of any History or Tradition ancients than what is consistent with the received opinion of the time of the world's beginning; nay, the most ancient Histories were written long after that time. This Lucretius, the famous Epicurean, urgeth as a strong presumption that the world had a beginning,

— Si nulla fuit genitalis origo
Terrarum & Cæli, semperque æterna fuere :
Cur supra bellum Thebanum, & funera Trojæ,
Non alias alii quoque res cecinere Poetæ ?

i. e. If the world had no beginning, how is it that the Greek Poets (the most ancient of their Writers) mention nothing higher than the Theban War, and the destruction of Troy? Were there from all eternity no memorable actions done till about that time? Or had mankind no way till of late to record them and propagate the memory of them to posterity? It is much if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing all that long duration, which had past before that Time. Sure he was a fortunate man indeed, who after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it.

But it may be, the famous actions of former times were always recorded, but that the memorials of them have been several times lost by universal deluges, which have now and then happen'd and swept all away, except (it may be) two or three persons, that have escap'd and begun the world again upon a new score. This is the only refuge that the Atheist hath to fly to, when he is prest with this and the like arguments. But he cannot possibly escape this way. For these universal inundations must either be natural or supernatural. If they be supernatural, (as any man that considers well the frame of the world, and how hard it is to give a natural reason of them, would be inclin'd to think) then indeed it is easy to conceive how a few of mankind, and no more, should escape; Because this will depend upon the pleasure of that superior Being which is supposed supernaturally to order these things. But this is to yield what we have all this while contended for, viz That there is a God. But if they be natural, which the Atheist must say, then there is nothing to restrain them from a total destruction, not only of mankind, but of all the beasts of the earth. This the Atheist cannot deny, not only to be very possible, but exceeding probable; because he grants it to have come so near the matter, that but very few escap'd, and no doubt with great difficulty. Now it is the greatest wonder in the world, that a thing (according to their own supposition) so likely to happen, should never have fallen out in an infinite duration. Will any man have the face to say that a thing is likely which did never yet happen from all eternity? One would think that not only whatever is probable, but whatever can possibly happen should be brought about in that space: So that if mankind had been from eternity it had in all probability, I had almost said, been destroyed from all eternity, but I may confidently say, long since ruin'd.

2. Another probability of the world's beginning is, the account which we have of the original of Learning and the most useful Arts in several parts of the world. Now if the world had been eternal, these in all likelihood would have been found out, and generally spread long ago and beyond the memory of all ages. There are some Arts indeed that are peculiarly convenient to some particular Nations; and others that are only serviceable to the humour and fashion of one or more ages. These are not likely to spread, and they may come in, and go out, and return again as often as there is occasion. But those which are generally useful to mankind in all times and places, if they were once found out (and who would not think they should in an eternal duration?) it is not imaginable but that they should have been spread innumerable ages since: Nor can any man give a good reason how they should ever be lost, but by some such accident as an universal deluge, which has been spoken to already. But now on the contrary, the beginnings of Learning and of the most useful Arts in several Nations, is very well known. And I add farther, that where-ever Learning and Civil Arts have come, this Tradition concerning the beginning of the world hath been most vigorous, and asserted with the greatest clearness and confidence.

3. The several parts of which the world consists, being (so far as by those parts of it which we know, we can possibly judge of the rest) in their nature corruptible; it is more than probable, that in an infinite duration this frame of things would long since have been dissolv'd; especially, if (as the Atheist asserts) there be no superior being, no wise and intelligent principle to repair and regulate it, and to prevent those innumerable disorders and calamitous accidents, which must in so long a space in all probability have happen'd to it. This Lucretius * also urges as a convincing proof that the world was not eternal,

*Quare etiam nativa necesse est confiteare
Hæc eadem; neq; enim mortali corpore quæ sunt
Ex infinito jam tempore adhuc potuissent
Immensi validas ævi contemnere vires.*

It must necessarily (says he) be acknowledg'd that the world had a beginning; otherwise those things which are in their own nature corruptible had never been able, from all eternity to have held out against those forcible and violent assaults which in an infinite duration must have happen'd. Nay, thus much Aristotle himself every where grants, that if the frame of the world be liable to dissolution, it must of necessity be acknowledg'd to have had a beginning.

These are some of the chief Probabilities on our side; which being taken together, and in their united force, have a great deal of conviction in them. Especially if this be added, that there is no kind of positive proof, such as pretended on the other side. The utmost that Aristotle pretends to prove, is, That the world proceeded from God by the way of a natural and necessary effect, as light does from the Sun. Which if it be true (as there is no tolerable ground for it) the World indeed would be without beginning, but not of it self. And thus I have done with the first consideration I propounded to speak to, viz. That there are fair proofs on our side, and as convincing as the nature of the thing is capable of; but that there is no pretence or proof on the other. I proceed therefore to the Second Consideration, That the most pressing difficulties are on that side on which there is no proof.

Those who deny a God, and hold the world to have been eternal and of it self, have only two things to object against us: The difficulties that there are in the notion of a God, and in making the world of nothing. To the first I answer: That we attribute nothing to God that hath any repugnancy or contradiction in it. Power, wisdom, goodness, justice and truth, have no repugnancy in them to our reason; because we own these Perfections to be in some degree in our selves; and therefore they may be in the highest degree that is possible in another. The eternity of God and his immensity, and his being of himself, how difficult soever they may be to be conceived, yet these perfections must be granted to be somewhere; and therefore they may as well, nay much better, be ascrib'd to God, in whom we suppose all other perfections to meet, than to any thing else. And as for God's being a spirit, whatever difficulty there may be in conceiving the notion of a spirit, yet the Atheist must grant the thing, that there is a being or principle really distinct from matter; or else shew how mere matter, which is confessed by themselves to be void of sense and understanding, and to move necessarily, can produce any thing that has sense, understanding and liberty. As to the other difficulty, of making the world of nothing, I shall only say this: that though it signify an inconceivable excess of power, yet there can no contradiction be shewn in it. And it is every whit as easy to conceive that something should be caus'd to be that was not before, as that any thing should be of it self; which yet must be granted on both sides; and therefore this difficulty ought not to be objected by either.

But then on the other side there are these two great and real difficulties. First, That men generally have always believed the contrary, viz. That the World had a beginning, and was made by God. Which is a strong evidence that this account of the existence of the world is more natural, and of a more easy conception to human understanding. And indeed it is very natural to conceive that every thing which is imperfect (as the world and all the creatures in it must be acknowledged in many respects to be) had some cause which produc'd it, such as it is, and determin'd the bounds and limits of its perfection: but that which is of it self and without a cause, may be any thing, and have any perfection which does not imply a contradiction. Secondly. To assert mankind to have been of it self, and without a cause, hath this invincible objection against it; that we plainly see every man to be from another. So that Mankind is asserted to have no cause of its being, and yet every particular man must be acknowledged to have a father; which is every whit as absurd in an infinite succession of men, as in any finite number of generations. It is more easy indeed to conceive how a constant and permanent being, suppose matter, should always have been of it self; and then that ~~that~~ should be the foundation of infinite successive changes and alterations: But an infinite succession of the generations of men without any permanent foundation is utterly unimaginable. If it be said that the earth was always, and in time did produce men, and that they ever since have produc'd one another; this is to run into one great absurdity of the Epicurean way, which shall be consider'd in its proper place.

And thus I have endeavour'd as plainly and briefly as the nature of the Argument would admit, to prove that the account which the Scripture gives of the existence of the world, is most credible, and agreeable to the reason of mankind; and that this First account which the Atheist gives of it, is altogether incredible. And now I expect after all this the Atheist will complain, that all that hath been said does not amount to a strict demonstration of the thing. It may be so. And if the Atheist would undertake to demonstrate the contrary, there might be some reason for this complaint. In the mean time I desire to know whether when both sides are agreed that the world is, and that it must either have its original from God, or have been always of it self; and if it have been made evident, that on one side there are fair proofs both from testimony and reason and as convincing as the nature of the thing is capable of, and no pretence of proof on the other; and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof; I say, if this have been made evident, I desire to know whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wise man as a Demonstration? For in this case there can be no doubt on which side the clear advantage of evidence lies, and consequently which way a prudent man ought to determine assent.

I come now in the Second place, to consider the other account which another sort of Atheists, those whom I call the Epicureans, do give of the existence of the world. And 'tis this. They suppose the matter of which the world is constituted to be eternal and of it self, and then an infinite empty space for the infinite little parts of this matter (which they call Atoms) to move and play in; and that these being always in motion did after infinite trials and encounters, without any counsel or design and without the disposal and contrivance of any wise and intelligent being, at last by a lucky casualty entangle and settle themselves in this beautiful and regular frame of the world which we now see. And that the Earth, being at first in its full vigor and fruitfulness, did then bring forth men and all other sorts of living creatures as it does plants now.

This is in short the Epicurean account of the original of the world, which as absurd as it is Lucretius * hath very elegantly expressed in these verses.

*Sed quibus ille modis conjectus materiai,
Fundarit cælum ac terram, pontique profundâ,
Solisque & lunæ cursus, ex ordine ponam.
Nam certe nequē consilio primordia rerum
Ordine se quæque, atque sagaci mente locarunt,
Nec quos quæque darent motus pepigere profectò :
Sed quia multa modis multis primordia rerum
Ex infinito jam tempore percita plagis
Ponderibusque suis consuerunt concita ferri,
Omnimodisque coire, atque omnia pertentare;
Quæcunque inter se possent congressa creare :
Propterea fit, uti magnum vulgata per ævum
Omnigenos cætus, & motus experiundo,
Tandem ea conveniant, quæ ut convenere, repente
Magnarum rerum fiunt exordia sæpe,
Terrai, maris & cæli, generisque animantum.*

Thus he like a good Poet, but a very bad maker and contriver of the World. For I appeal to any man of reason whether any thing can be more unreasonable, than obstinately to impute an effect to chance which carries in the very face of it all the arguments and characters of a wise design, and contrivance? Was ever any considerable work, in which there was required a great variety of parts, and a regular and orderly disposition of those parts, done by chance? Will chance fit means to ends, and that in ten thousand instances, and not fail in any one? How often might a man after he had jumbled a set of letters in a bag, fling them out upon the ground before they would fall into an exact Poem, yea or so much as make a good discourse in Prose? And may not a little Book be as easily made by chance, as this great Volume of the World? How long might a man be in sprinkling colours upon Canvas with a careless hand, before they would happen to make the exact Picture of a man? And is a man easier made by chance than his Picture? How long might twenty thousand blind men, which should be sent out from the several remote parts of England, wander up and down before they would all meet upon Salisbury-plains and fall into rank and file in the exact order of an Army? And yet this is much more easy to be imagined, than how the innumerable blind parts of matter should rendezvous themselves into a world. A man that sees Henry the Seventh's Chappel at Westminster might with as good reason maintain (yea with much better, considering the vast difference betwixt that little structure and the huge fabrick of the world) that it was never contrived or built by any man, but that the stones did by chance grow into those curious figures into which they seem to have been cut and graven; and that upon a time (as tales usually begin) the materials of that building, the stone, mortar, timber, iron, lead, and glass, happily met together, and very fortunately rang'd themselves into that delicate order in which we see them now so close compacted that it must be a very great chance that parts them again. What would the world think of a man that should advance such an opinion as this, and write a Book for it? If they would do him right, they ought to look upon him as mad: but yet with a little more reason than any man can have to say that the world was made by chance: or that the first men grew up out of the earth as plants do now. For can any thing be more ridiculous and against all reason, than to ascribe the production of men to the first fruitfulness of the earth, without so much as one instance and experiment in any Age or History to countenance so monstrous a Supposition? The thing is at first sight so gross and palpable, that no Discourse about it can make it more apparent. And yet these shameful beggars of Principles, who give this precarious account of the original of things, assume to themselves to be the men of reason, the great wits of the world, the only cautious and wary persons that hate to be imposed upon, that must have convincing evidence for every thing, and can admit of nothing without a clear demonstration for it.

II. Speculative atheism is unreasonable, because it gives no reasonable account of the universal consent of mankind in this apprehension, that there is a God. That men do generally believe a God, and have done in all Ages, the present experience of the world, and the records of former times do abundantly testify. Now how comes this persuasion to have gained so universal a possession of the mind of man, and to have found such general entertainment in all Nations, even those that are most barbarous? If there be no such thing as God in the world, how comes it to pass that this object doth continually encounter our understandings? Whence is it that we are so perpetually haunted with the apparition of a Deity, and followed with it wherever we go? If it be not natural to the mind of man, but proceeds from some accidental Distemper of our understandings, how comes it to be so universal that no differences of age, or temper, or education can wear it out, and set any considerable number of men free from it? Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error and mistake? How come all Nations to be thus seduced? It is altogether unimaginable but that the reason of so universal a consent in all places and ages of the world, and among all differences of persons, should be one and constant. But no one and constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind and understanding which hath this notion of a Deity born with it and stamped upon it; or which is all one, is of such a frame that in the free use and exercise of it self it will find out God: And what more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he should set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures, that they may know to whom they belong, and may acknowledge the Author of their beings? This seems to be a credible and satisfactory account of so universal a consent in this matter. But now what doth the Atheist resolve this into? He is not at one with himself what account to give of it, nor can it be expected he should. For he that will overlook the true reason of a thing which usually is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. But there are three which he principally relies upon, fear, tradition, and policy of State. I shall briefly consider these.

First, He would make us believe that this apprehension of a God doth spring from an infinite jealousy in the mind of man, and an endless fear of the worst that may happen; according to that divine saying of the Poet, which he can never sufficiently admire,

Primum in orbe Deos fecit timor,——

Fear first made Gods. So that it is granted on both sides that the fear of a Deity doth universally possess the minds of men. Now the question is, whether whether it be more likely that the existence of a God should be the cause of this fear, or that this fear should be the cause why men imagine there is a God : if there be a God, who hath impressed this image of himself upon the mind of Man, there's great reason why all men should stand in awe of him: But if there be no God, it is not easy to conceive how fear should create an universal confidence and assurance in men that there is one. For, whence should this fear come ? It must be either from without, from the suggestion of others who first tell us there is such a being and then our fear believes it, or else it must arise from within, from the nature of man which is apt to fancy dreadful and terrible things. If from the suggestion of others who tell us so, the question returns, who told them so ? and will never be satisfied till the first Author of this report be found out. So that this account of fear resolves it self into tradition, which shall be spoken to in its proper place. But if it be said that this fear ariseth from within, from the nature of man which is apt to imagine dreadful things, this likewise is liable to inexplicable difficulties. For, First, The proper object of fear, is something that is dreadful, that is, something that threatens men with harm or danger ; and that in God must either be power or justice ; and such an object as this fear indeed may create : But Goodness and Mercy are essential to the notion of a God as well as power and justice : now how should fear put men upon fancying a being that is infinitely good and merciful ? No man hath reason to be afraid of such a being, as such. So that the Atheist must join another cause to fear, viz. hope, to enable men to create this imagination of a God. And what would the product of these two contrary passions be ? the imagination of a being which we should fear would do us as much harm as we could hope it would do us good ; which would be quid pro quo, and which our reason would oblige us to lay aside so soon as we have fancied it, because it would signify just nothing. But, secondly, suppose fear alone could do it ; how comes the mind of man to be subject to such groundless and unreasonable fears ? The Aristotelian Atheist will say, it always was so ; But this is to affirm, and not to give any account of a thing. The Epicurean Atheist, if he will speak consonantly to himself, must say that there happened in the original constitution of the first men such a contexture of Atoms as doth naturally dispose men to these panick fears ; unless he will say that the first men when they grew out of the earth and afterwards broke loose from their root, finding themselves weak and naked and unarmed, and meeting with several fierce Creatures stronger than themselves, they were put in such a fright as did a little distemper their understandings and let loose their imaginations to endless suspicions and unbounded jealousies, which did at last settle in the conceit of an invisible being infinitely powerful, and able to do them harm ; and being fully possess'd with this apprehension (nothing being more ordinary than for crazed persons to believe their own fancies) they became religious ; and afterwards when mankind began to be propagated in the way of generation, then Religion obliged them to instil these Principles into their Children in their tender years that so they might make the greater impression upon them ; and this course having been continued ever since, the notion of a God hath been kept up in the world. This is very suitable to Epicurus his Hypothesis of the original of men ; But if any man think fit to say thus, I cannot think it fit to confute him. Thirdly, whether men were from all eternity such timorous and fanciful Creatures, or happened to be made so in the first constitution of things, it seems however that this fear of a Deity hath a foundation in nature. And if it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose, than that they are vain and groundless? There is no principle that Aristotle (the great asserter of the eternity of the world) doth more frequently inculcate than this, That nature doth nothing in vain; and the Atheist himself is forc'd to acknowledge (and so every man must who attentively considers the frame of the world) That altho things were made by chance, yet they have happen'd as well as if the greatest wisdom had the ordering and contriving of them. And surely wisdom would never have planted such a vain principle as the fear of a Deity in the nature of man, if there had not been a God in the World. *

Secondly, If fear be not a sufficient account of this universal consent, the Atheist thinks it may very probably be resolv'd into ~~universal Tradition~~. But this likewise is liable to great exception. For, whence came this Tradition? It must begin some time, it must have its original from somebody; and it were very well worth our knowing who that man was that first raised this spirit which all the reason of mankind could never conjure down since. Where did he live, and when? In what Countrey, in what Age of the world? What was his name, or his sons name, that we may know him? This the Atheist can give no punctual account of: only he imagines it not improbable that some body long ago (no body knows when) beyond the memory of all Ages did start such a notion in the world and that it hath pass'd for current ever since. But if this Tradition be granted so very ancient as to have been before all Books and to be elder than any History, it may for any thing any body can tell have been from the beginning; and then it is much more likely to be a notion which was bred in the mind of man and born with him, than a Tradition transmitted from hand to hand through all Generations; especially if we consider how many rude and barbarous Nations there are in the world which consent in the opinion of a God, and yet have scarce any certain Tradition of any thing that was done among them but two or three Ages before.

Thirdly, But if neither of these be satisfactory, he hath one way more; which altho it signify little to men of sober and severe Reason, yet it very unhappily hits the jealous and suspicious humour of the generality of men, who from the experience they have had of themselves and others, are very apt to suspect that every body, but especially their Superiors and Governors, have a design to impose upon them for their own ends. In short, it is this; that this noise about a God is a mere State-Engine and a Politick device, invented at first by some great Prince or Minister of State, to keep People in awe and order. And if so, from hence (saith the Atheist) we may easily apprehend how from such an original it might be generally propagated and become universally current, having the stamp of publick authority upon it. Besides, that people have always been found easy to comply with the inclinations of their Prince. And from hence likewise we may see the reason why this notion had continued so long. For being found by experience to be so excellent an instrument of government we may be sure it would always be cherished and kept up.

And now he triumphs, and thinks the business is very clear: Thus it was, some time or other, (most probably towards the beginning of the world, if it had a beginning, when all mankind was under one universal Monarch) some great Nebuchadnezzar set up this Image of a Deity, and commanded all people and Nations to fall down and worship it: And this being found a successful device to awe people into obedience to government it hath been continued to this day, and is like to last to the end of the World. To this fine Conjecture I have these four things to say:

1. That

1. That all this is mere conjecture and supposition; he cannot bring the least shadow of proof or evidence for any one tittle of it.

2. This supposition grants the opinion of a God to conduce very much to the support of government and order in the world; and consequently to be very beneficial to mankind. So that the Atheist cannot but acknowledge that it is great pity that it should not be true, and that it is the common interest of mankind, if there were but probable Arguments for it, not to admit of any slight reasons against it; and to punish all those who would seduce men to Atheism, as the great disturbers of the world and pests of humane Society.

3. This supposition can have nothing of certainty in it unless this be true, ~~that which~~ it makes a politick advantage of other mens principles ought to be presumed to contrive those principles into them. Whereas it is much more common (because more easy,) for men to serve their own ends of those principles or opinion which they do not put into men but find there. So that if the question of a God were to be decided by the probability of this conjecture, (which the Atheist applauds himself most in) it would be concluded in the affirmative; It being much more likely, since Politicians reap the advantages of obedience and a more ready submission to government from mens believing that there is a God, that they found the minds of men prepossessed to their hands with the notion of a God, than that they planted it there.

4. We have as much evidence of the contrary to this supposition as such a thing is capable of, viz. that it was not an arcanum imperii, a secret of government to propagate the belief of a God among the people when the Governors themselves knew it to be a cheat. For we find in the Histories of all Ages of which we have any records, (and of other Ages we cannot possibly judge) that Princes have not been more secure from troubles of conscience and the fears of Religion and the terrors of another world, (nay many of them more subject to these) than other men, as I could give many instances, and those no mean ones: What made Caligula creep under the bed when it thunder'd? What made Tiberius, that great master of the crafts of government complain so much of the grievous stings and lashes he felt in his Conscience? What made Cardinal Woolsey (that great Minister of State in our own Nation) to pour forth his soul in those sad words, Had I been as diligent to please my God as I have been to please my King, he would not have forsaken me now in my gray hairs? What reason for such actions and speeches, if these great men had known that Religion was but a cheat? But if they knew nothing of this secret, I think we may safely conclude that the notion of a God did not come from the Court, that it was not the invention of Politicians and a juggle of State to cozen the people into obedience.

And now from all this that hath been said it seems to be very evident, that the general consent of mankind in this apprehension that there is a God must in all reason be ascribed to some more certain and universal cause than fear or tradition or State-policy, viz. to this, that God himself hath wrought this image of himself upon the mind of man, and so woven it into the very frame of his being that (like Phidias his Picture in Minerva's Shield) it can never totally be defaced without the ruin of humane nature.

I know but one Objection that this discourse is liable to, which is this; That the universal consent of mankind in the apprehension of a God is no more an Argument that He really is, than the general agreement of so many Nations for so many Ages in the worship of many Gods is an Argument that there are many.

To this I answer, 1. That the generality of the Philosophers and wise men of all Nations and Ages, did dissent from the multitude in these things.

They believed but one Supreme Deity, which with respect to the various benefits men received from him had several titles bestowed upon him. And altho they did servilely comply with the people in worshipping God, by sensible images and representations, yet it appears by their writings that they detested this way of worship as superstitious and unsuitable to the nature of God. So that Polytheism and Idolatry are far from being able to pretend to universal consent from their having had the vote of the multitude in most Nations for several Ages together. Because the opinion of the vulgar separated from the consent and approbation of the wise, signifies no more than a great many Cyphers would do without figures.

2. The gross ignorance and mistakes of the Heathen about ~~God and his~~ worship are a good argument that there is a God; because they shew that men sunk into the most degenerate condition, into the greatest blindness and darkness imaginable, do yet retain some sense and awe of a Deity; that Religion is a property of our natures and that the notion of a Deity is intimate to our understandings and sticks close to them, seeing men will rather have any God than none; and rather than want a Deity they will worship any thing.

3. That there have been so many false Gods devis'd, is rather an argument that there is a true one than that there is none. There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something that is real. For tho all pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. For to counterfeit is to put on the likeness and appearance of some real excellency. There would be no Brass money if there were not good and lawful money. Bristol Stones would not pretend to be Diamonds, if there never had been any Diamonds. Those Idols in Henry the seventh's time (as Sir Francis Bacon calls them) Lambert Symnell and Perkin Warbeck, had never been set up if there had not once been a real Plantagenet and Duke of York. So the Idols of the Heathen though they be set up in affront to the true God, yet they rather prove that there is one than the contrary.

III. Speculative Atheism is absurd, because it requires more evidence for things than they are capable of. Aristotle hath long since well observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof and evidence for every thing, which we have for some things. Mathematical things, being of an abstracted nature are capable of the clearest and strictest Demonstration: But Conclusions in Natural Philosophy are capable of proof by an Induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments; and matters of fact by credible testimony. And tho none of these be capable of that strict kind of demonstration, which Mathematical matters are; yet have we an undoubted assurance of them, when they are proved by the best arguments that things of that kind will bear. No man can demonstrate to me (unless we will call every argument that is fit to convince a wise man a demonstration) that there is such an Island in America as Jamaica. Yet upon the testimony of credible persons who have seen it, and Authors who have written of it, I am as free from all doubt concerning it, as I am from doubting of the clearest Mathematical demonstration. So that this is to be entertained as a firm Principle by all those who pretend to be certain of any thing at all: That when any thing in any of these kinds, is proved by as good Arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, and we have as great assurance that it is as we could possibly have supposing it were, we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing.

Now to apply this to the present case. The being of a God is not Mathematically demonstrable, nor can it be expected it should, because only Ma- thematical matters admit of this kind of evidence. Nor can it be proved immediately by sense, because God being supposed to be a pure spirit cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. But yet we have as great assurance that there is a God as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of ; and as we could in reason expect to have, supposing that he were. For let us suppose there were such a Being as an Infinite Spirit, cloathed with all possible perfection, that is, as good and wise and powerful, &c. as can be imagined : what conceivable ways are there whereby we should come to be assured that there is such a Being ? but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds ; or else by such external and visible effects as our Reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot without great violence to our understandings attribute to any other cause but such a Being as we conceive God to be, that is, one that is infinitely good, and wise, and powerful ? Now we have this double assurance that there is a God ; and greater, or other than this the thing is not capable of : If God should assume a body and present himself before our eyes, this might amaze us but could not give us any rational assurance that there is an Infinite Spirit. If he should work a Miracle ; this could not in reason convince an Atheist more than the arguments he already hath for it. If the Atheist then were to ask a sign in the heaven above, or in the earth beneath, what could he desire God to do for his conviction more than he hath already done ? Could he desire him to work a greater Miracle than to make a world ? Why, if God should carry this perverse man out of the limits of this world, and shew him a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing, he might say that innumerable parts of matter chanc'd just then to rally together and to form themselves into this new world, and that God did not make it. Thus you see that we have all the rational assurance of a God that the thing is capable of, and that Atheism is absurd and unreasonable in requiring more.

IV. The Atheist is unreasonable, because he pretends to know that which no man can know, and to be certain of that which no body can be certain of ; that is, that there is no God, and which is consequent upon this (as I shall shew afterwards) that it is not possible there should be one. And the Atheist must pretend to know this certainly. For it were the greatest folly in the world for a man to deny and despise a God, if he be not certain that He is not. Now whoever pretends to be certain that there is no God hath this great disadvantage, he pretends to be certain of a pure Negative. But of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved. Indeed such negatives as only deny some particular mode or manner of a thing's existence, a man may have a certainty of them ; because when we see things to be, we may see what they are, and in what manner they do or do not exist. For instance, we may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings, because this only concerns the manner of his existence ; and we seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so, or so. But pure negatives, that is, such as absolutely deny the existence of things, or the possibility of their existence, can never be proved. For after all that can be said against a thing this will still be true, that many things possibly are which we know not of, and that many more things may be than are ; and if so, after all our arguments against a thing it will be uncertain whether it be or not. And this is universally true, unless the thing denied to be do plainly imply a contradiction ; from which I have already shewn the notion of a God to be free. Now the Atheist pretends to be certain of a pure negative, that there is no such being as God, and that it is not possible there should be ; But no man can reasonably pretend to know thus much, but he must must pretend to know all things that are or can be ; which if any man should be so vain as to pretend to, yet it is to be hoped that nobody would be so weak as to believe him.

V. Speculative Atheism is unreasonable, because it contradicts it self. There is this great contradiction in the denial of a God. He that denies a God, says that that is impossible which yet he must grant to be possible. He says it is impossible that there should be such a Being as God, in saying that de facto there is no such being. For eternity being essential to the notion of a God, if there be not a God already it is impossible now that there should be one ; because such a being as is supposed to be essentially eternal and without beginning cannot now begin to be. And yet he must grant it possible ~~that there~~ should be such a being, because it is possible there should be such a being as hath all possible perfection : and such a being as this is that which we call God, and is that very thing which the Atheist denies and others affirm to be. For he that denies a God, must deny such a being as all the world describe God to be ; and this is the general notion which all men have of God, that he is a being as perfect as is possible ; that is, endued with all such perfections as do not imply a contradiction, which none of those perfections which we attribute to God do, as I have already prov'd.

II. Speculative Atheism as it is unreasonable, so is it a most imprudent and uncomfortable opinion : And that upon these two accounts. First, because it is against the present interest and happiness of mankind. Secondly, because it is infinitely hazardous and unsafe in the issue.

I. It is against the present interest and happiness of mankind. If Atheism were the general Opinion of the World, it would be infinitely prejudicial to the peace and happiness of humane Society, and would open a wide door to all manner of confusion and disorder. But this I shall not now insist upon, because I design a particular Discourse of that by it self.

I shall at present content my self to shew, how uncomfortable an opinion this would be to particular persons. For nothing can be more evident than that man is not sufficient of himself to his own happiness. He is liable to many evils and miseries which he can neither prevent nor redress. He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove, and obnoxious to dangers which he can never sufficiently provide against. Consider man without the protection and conduct of a superior Being, and he is secure of nothing that he enjoys in this world, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. He is apt to grieve for what he cannot help, and eagerly to desire what he is never likely to obtain. Man walketh in a vain shew, and disquieteth himself in vain. He courts happiness in a thousand shapes, and the faster he pursues it the faster it flies from him. His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments, and his fears and jealousies more troublesome than the evils themselves which he is so much afraid of. He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life, and is continually insecure not only of the good things of this life, but even of life it self. And besides all this, after all his endeavours to the contrary, he finds himself naturally to dread a superior Being that can defeat all his designs, and disappoint all his hopes, and make him miserable beyond all his fears. He has oftentimes secret misgivings concerning another life after this, and fearful apprehensions of an invisible Judge ; and thereupon he is full of anxiety concerning his condition in another world, and sometimes plung'd into that anguish and despair that he grows weary of himself. So that the Atheist deprives himself of all the comfort that the apprehensions of a God can give a man, and yet is liable to all the trouble and disquiet of those apprehensions.

I do not say that these Inconveniences do happen to all; but every one is in danger of them. For man's nature is evidently so contriv'd as does plainly discover how unable he is to make himself happy. So that he must necessarily look abroad and seek for happiness ~~from~~ ^{some} where else. And if there be no superior Being, in whose care of him he may repose his confidence and quiet his mind; If he have no comfortable expectations of another life to sustain him under the evils and calamities he is liable to in this world, he is certainly of all creatures the most miserable. There are none of us but may happen to fall into those circumstances of danger, or want, or pain, or some other sort of calamity, that we can have no hopes of relief or comfort but from God alone: none in all the world to flee to, but Him. And what would men do in such a case if it were not for God? Humane nature is most certainly liable to desperate exigences, and he is not happy that is not provided against the worst that may happen. It is bad to be reduc'd to such a condition as to be destitute of all comfort. And yet men are many times brought to that extremity that if it were not for God they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour, or to entertain their thoughts with any comfortable considerations under their present anguish and sufferings. All men naturally flye to God in extremity, and the most atheistical person in the world when he is forsaken of all hopes of any other relief is forc'd to acknowledge him and would be glad to have such a friend.

Can it then be a wise and reasonable design to endeavour to banish the belief of a God out of the world? Not to say how impious it is in respect of God, nothing can be more malicious to men, and more effectually undermine the only foundation of our happiness. For if there were no God in the world man would be in a much more wretched and disconsolate condition, than the creatures below him. For they are only sensible of present pain, and when it is upon them they bear it as they can. But they are not at all apprehensive of evils at a distance, nor tormented with the fearful prospect of what may befall them hereafter: nor are they plung'd into despair upon the consideration that the evils they lye under are like to continue, and are incapable of a remedy. And as they have no apprehension of these things, so they need no comfort against them. But mankind is liable to all the same evils, and many others; which are so much the greater, because they are aggravated and set on by the restless workings of our minds, and exasperated by the smart reflections and frettings of our own thoughts: And if there be no God we are wholly without comfort under all these, and without any other remedy than what time will give. For if the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers and mischiefs to which humane nature is continually expos'd? What consolation under them, when we are reduc'd to that condition that no creature can give us any hopes of relief? But if we believe that there is a God that takes care of us, and we be careful to please him, this cannot but be a mighty comfort to us, both under the present sense of affliction, and the apprehension of evils at a distance. For in that case, we are secure of one of these three things. Either that God by his providence will prevent the evils we fear, if that be best for us: Or that he will support us under them when they are present, and add to our strength as he increaseth our burden: Or that he will make them the occasion of a greater good to us, by turning them either to our advantage in this world, or the increase of our happiness in the next. Now every one of these considerations has a great deal of comfort in it, for which if there were no God there could be no ground. Nay, on the contrary the most real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our Reason; and we should be so much more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension and a deeper consideration of things.

So that if a man had arguments sufficient to persuade him that there is no God (as there is infinite reason to the contrary) yet the belief of a God is so necessary to the comfort and happiness of our lives, that a wise man could not but be heartily troubled to quit so pleasant an error, and to part with a delusion which is apt to yield such unspeakable satisfaction to the mind of man. Did but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be so lovely a Being, and so full of goodness and of all desirable perfections, that even those very persons who are of such irregular understandings as not to believe that there is a God, yet could not (if they understood themselves) refrain from wishing with all their hearts that there were one. For is it not really desirable to every man, that there should be such a Being in the world as takes care of the frame of it, that it do not run into confusion, and in that disorder ruin mankind? That there should be such a Being, as takes particular care of every one of us, and loves us, and delights to do us good; as understands all our wants, and is able and willing to relieve us in our greatest straits, when nothing else can; to preserve us in our greatest dangers, to assist us against our worst enemies, and to comfort us under our sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us? Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a Governor of the world as really designs our happiness, and hath omitted nothing that is necessary to it; as would govern us for our advantage, and will require nothing of us but what is for our good, and yet will infinitely reward us for the doing of that which is best for our selves? that will punish any man that should go about to injure us, or to deal otherwise with us than himself in the like case would be dealt withal by us? In a word, such a one as is ready to be reconcil'd to us when we have offended him, and is so far from taking little advantages against us for every failing, that he is willing to pardon our most wilful miscarriages upon our Repentance and amendment? And we have reason to believe God to be such a Being, if he be at all.

Why then should any man be troubled that there is such a Being as this, or think himself concern'd to shut him out of the world? How could such a Governor as this be wanting in the world, that is so great a comfort and security to mankind and the confidence of all the ends of the earth? If God be such a being as I have describ'd, woe to the world if it were without him. This would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind and of more dismal consequence, and if it were true, ought to affect us with more grief and horror than the extinguishing of the Sun.

Let but all things be well consider'd, and I am very confident that if a wise and considerate man were left to himself and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; after he had search'd heaven and earth, the sum of all his wishes would be this, that there were just such a being as God is; Nor would he chuse any other benefactor, or friend, or protector for himself, or governor for the whole world, than infinite power conducted and managed by infinite wisdom and goodness and justice, which is the true notion of a God.

Nay, so necessary is God to the happiness of mankind, that tho there were no God, yet the Atheist himself upon second thoughts would judge it convenient that the generality of men should believe that there is one. For when the Atheist had attain'd his end, and (if it were a thing possible) had blotted the notion of a God out of the minds of men, mankind would in all probability grow so melancholy and so unruly a thing, that he himself would would think it fit in policy to contribute his best endeavours to the restoring of men to their former belief. Thus hath God secur'd the belief of himself in the world, against all attempts to the contrary ; not only by riveting the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise by making the belief of his being necessary to the peace and tranquility of our minds, and to the quiet and happiness of Humane Society.

So that if we consult our reason, we cannot but believe that there is ; if our interest, we cannot but heartily wish that there were such a Being as God in the world. Every thing within us and without us gives notice of Him. His name is written upon our hearts ; and in every creature there are some prints and footsteps of him. Every moment we feel our dependance upon Him, and do by daily experience find that we can neither be happy without Him, nor think our selves so.

I confess, it is not a wicked man's interest, if he resolve to continue such, that there should be a God ; but then it is not mens interest to be wicked. It is for the general good of humane Society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just ; it is for mens health to be temperate ; and so I could instance in all other virtues. But this is the mystery of Atheism, men are wedded to their lusts and resolv'd upon a wicked course ; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God, and to believe so if they can. Whereas if men were minded to live righteously and soberly and virtuously in the world, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design ; but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it. Men that are good and virtuous do easily believe a God ; so that it is vehemently to be suspected, that nothing but the strength of mens lusts, and the power of vicious inclinations do sway their minds, and set a byass upon their understandings toward Atheism.

2. Atheism is imprudent, because it is unsafe in the issue. The Atheist contends against the religious man that there is no God ; but upon strange inequality and odds, for he ventures his eternal interest ; whereas the Religious Man ventures only the loss of his lusts, (which it is much better for him to be without) or at the utmost of some temporal convenience ; and all this while is inwardly more contented and happy, and usually more healthful, and perhaps meets with more respect and faithfuller Friends, and lives in a more secure and flourishing condition, and more free from the evils and punishments of this world, than the Atheistical person does ; however, it is not much that he ventures : And after this life, if there be no God, is as well as he ; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery. So that if the Arguments for and against a God were equal, and it were an even question whether there were one or not ; yet the hazard and danger is so infinitely unequal, that in point of prudence and interest every man were obliged to incline to the affirmative : And whatever doubts he might have about it, to chuse the safest side of the question, and to make that the principle to live by. For, he that acts wisely and is a thoroughly prudent man, will be provided against all events, and will take care to secure the main chance whatever happens ; but the Atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief and expectation, he hath made no provision for this case. If contrary to his confidence it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever. If the Atheist when he dies should find that his soul remains after his body, and has only quitted its lodging, how will this man be amazed and blank'd when contrary to his expectation, he shall find himself in a new and strange place, amidst a world of spirits, entred upon an everlasting and unchangeable state? How sadly will the man be disappointed when he finds all things otherwise than he had stated and determined them in this World? When he comes to appear before that God whom he hath denied, and against whom he hath spoken as despicable things as he could, who can imagine the pale and guilty looks of this man, and how he will shiver and tremble for the fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majesty? How will he be surprized with terrors on every side, to find himself thus unexpectedly and irrecoverably plunged into a state of ruin and desperation? And thus things may happen for all this man's confidence now. For our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter the nature of the thing. We cannot fancy things into being, or make them vanish into nothing by the stubborn confidence of our imaginations. Things are as fullen as we are, and will be what they are whatever we think of them. And if there be a God, a man cannot by an obstinate disbelief of him make him cease to be, any more than a man can put out the Sun by winking.

And thus I have as briefly and clearly as I could, endeavoured to shew the ignorance and folly of speculative Atheism in denying the existence of God. And now it will be less needful to speak of the other two principles of Religion, the immortality of the Soul, and future Rewards. For no man can have any reasonable scruple about these, who believes that there is a God. Because no man that owns the existence of an infinite Spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite Spirit, that is, such a thing as is immaterial and does not contain any principle of corruption in it self. And there is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclin'd to think that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Nor can any man, that acknowledgeth the holy and just providence of God, and that he loves righteousness and hates iniquity, and that he is a Magistrate and Governor of the World, and consequently concerned to countenance the obedience, and to punish the violation of his Laws; and that does withal consider the promiscuous dispensations many times of God's Providence in this world; I say, no man that acknowledges all this, can think it unreasonable to conclude, that after this life good men shall be rewarded, and sinners punished. I have done with the first sort of irreligious persons, the speculative Atheist. I shall speak but briefly of the other.

Secondly, The practical Atheist, who is wicked and irreligious, notwithstanding he does in some sort believe that there is a God, and a future state, he is likewise guilty of prodigious folly. The principle of the speculative Atheist argues more ignorance, but the practice of the other argues greater folly. Not to believe a God, and another life, for which there is so much evidence of Reason is great ignorance and folly; but 'tis the highest madness when a man does believe these things, to live as if he did not believe them: When a Man does not doubt but that there is a God, and that according as he demeans himself towards him he will make him happy or miserable for ever, yet to live so as if he were certain of the contrary, and as no man in reason can live but he that is well assured that there is no God. It was a shrewd saying of the old Monk, that two kind of Prisons would serve for all offenders in the world, an Inquisition and a Bedlam: If any man should deny the being of a God and the immortality of the soul, such a one should be put into the first of these the Inquisition, as being a desperate Heretick; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into Bedlam; because there cannot be a greater folly and madness than for a man in matters of greatest moment and concernment to act against his best reason and understanding, and by his life to contradict his belief. Such a man does perish with his eyes open, and knowingly undoes himself; he runs upon the greatest dangers which he clearly sees to be before him, and precipitates himself into those evils which he professes to believe to be real and intolerable; and wilfully neglects the obtaining of that unspeakable good and happiness which he is persuaded is certain and attainable. Thus much for the second way of Confirmation.

III. The third way of confirmation shall be, by endeavouring to vindicate Religion from those common imputations which seem to charge it with ignorance or imprudence. And they are chiefly these three.

1. Credulity.
2. Singularity.
3. Making a Foolish Bargain.

• First, Credulity: Say they, the foundation of Religion is the belief of those things for which we have no sufficient reason, and consequently of which we can have no good assurance; as the belief of a God, and of a future state after this life; things which we never saw, nor did experience, nor ever spoke with any body that did. Now it seems to argue too great a forwardness and easiness of belief to assent to any thing upon insufficient grounds.

To this I answer,

1. That if there be such a Being as a God, and such a thing as a future state after this life, it cannot (as I said before) in reason be expected that we should have the evidence of sense for such things: For he that believes a God, believes such a Being as hath all perfections, among which this is one, that he is a spirit; and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. He likewise that believes another life after this, professeth to believe a state of which in this life we have no trial and experience. Besides, if this were a good objection, that no man ever saw these things, it strikes at the Atheist as well as us. For no man ever saw the World to be from eternity; nor Epicurus his Atoms, of which notwithstanding he believes the world was made.

2. We have the best evidence for these things which they are capable of at present, supposing they were.

3. Those who deny these principles, must be much more credulous, that is, believe things upon incomparably less evidence of reason. The Atheist looks upon all that are religious as a company of credulous fools. But he, for his part, pretends to be wiser than to believe any thing for company; he cannot entertain things upon those slight grounds which move other men; if you would win his assent to any thing, you must give him a clear demonstration for it. Now there's no way to deal with this man of reason, this rigid exactor of strict demonstration for things which are not capable of it, but by shewing him that he is an hundred times more credulous, that he begs more principles, takes more things for granted without offering to prove them, and assents to more strange conclusions upon weaker grounds, than those whom he so much accuseth of credulity.

And to evidence this, I shall briefly give you an account of the Atheist's Creed, and present you with a Catalogue of the fundamental Articles of his Faith. He believes that there is no God, nor possibly can be, and consequently that the wise as well as unwise of all ages have been mistaken, except himself and a few more. He believes that either all the world have been frightened with an apparition of their own fancy, or that they have most unnaturally conspired together to cozen themselves; or that this notion of a God is a trick of policy, tho the greatest Princes and Politicians do not at this y know so much, nor have done time out of min. He believes, either that the Heavens and the Earth and all things in them had no Original cause of their being, or else that they were made by chance and happened he knows not how to be as they are; and that in this last shuffling of matter all things have by great good fortune fallen out as happily and as regularly as if the greatest wisdom had contriv'd them, but yet he is resolv'd to believe that there was no wisdom in the contrivance of them. He believes, that matter of it self is utterly void of all sense, understanding and liberty; but for all that he is of opinion that the parts of matter may now and then happen to be so conveniently dispos'd, as to have all these qualities, and most dextrously to perform all those fine and free operations which the ignorant attribute to Spirits.

This is the sum of his belief. And it is a wonder, that there should be found any person pretending to reason or wit that can assent to such a heap of absurdities, which are so gross and palpable that they may be felt. So that if every man had his due, it will certainly fall to the Atheist's share to be the most credulous person, that is, to believe things upon the slightest reasons. For he does not pretend to prove any thing of all this, only he finds himself, he knows not why, inclin'd to believe so and to laugh at those that do not.

II. The second imputation is singularity; the affectation whereof is unbecoming a wise man. To this charge I answer,

I. If by Religion be meant the belief of the principles of Religion, that there is a God, and a providence, that our souls are immortal, and that there are rewards to be expected after this life; these are so far from being singular opinions, that they are and always have been the general opinion of mankind, even of the most barbarous Nations. Inasmuch, that the Histories of ancient times do hardly furnish us with the names of above five or six persons who denied a God. And Lucretius acknowledgeth that Epicurus was the first who did oppose those great foundations of Religion, the providence of God, and the immortality of the Soul. Primum Grajus homo, &c. meaning Epicurus.

2. If by Religion be meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason and understanding, and to live as it does become those who do believe a God and a future state; this is acknowledged, even by those who live otherwise, to be the part of every wise man; and the contrary to be the very madness of folly, and height of distraction: Nothing being more ordinary than for men who live wickedly to acknowledge that they ought to do otherwise.

3. Though according to the common course and practice of the world it be somewhat singular for men truly and thoroughly to live up to the principles of their Religion, yet singularity in this matter is so far from being a reflection upon any man's prudence that it is a singular commendation of it. In two cases singularity is very commendable.

1. When there is a necessity of it in order to a man's greatest interest and happiness. I think it to be a reasonable account for any man to give why he does not live as the greatest part of the World do, that he has no mind to dye as they do and to perish with them; he is not disposed to be a fool and to be miserable for company; he has no inclination to have his last end like theirs who know not God, and obey not the gospel of his Son, and shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

2. It is very commendable to be singular in any excellency, and I have shewn that Religion is the greatest excellency: to be singular in any thing that is wise, and worthy, and excellent, is not a disparagement, but a praise: every man would chuse to be thus singular.

III. The third imputation is, that Religion is a foolish bargain; because they who are religious hazard the parting with a present and certain happiness for that which is future and uncertain. To this I answer. 1. Let

1. Let it be granted, that the assurance which we have of future rewards falls short of the evidence of sense. For I doubt not, but that saying of our Saviour, Blessed is he who hath believed, and not seen; and those expressions of the Apostle, we walk by faith and not by sight, and faith is the evidence of things not seen, are intended by way of abatement and diminution to the evidence of Faith, and do signify that the report and testimony of others is not so great evidence as that of our own senses: And tho' we have sufficient assurance of another state, yet no man can think we have so great evidence as if we ourselves had been in the other world, and seen how all things are there.

2. We have sufficient assurance of these things, and such as may beget in us a well-grounded confidence, and frees us from all doubts of the contrary, and persuade a reasonable man to venture his greatest interests in this World upon the security that he hath of another: For,

1. We have as much assurance of these things as things future, and at a distance are capable of, and he is a very unreasonable man that would desire more: Future and invisible things are not capable of the evidence of sense; but we have the greatest rational evidence for them, and in this every reasonable man ought to rest satisfied.

2. We have as much as is abundantly sufficient to justify every man's discretion, who for the great and eternal things of another world, hazards or parts with the poor and transitory things of this life. And for the clearing of this it will be worth our considering, that the greatest affairs of this world, and the most important concerns of this life are all conducted only by moral demonstrations. Men every day venture their lives and estates only upon moral assurance. For instance, men who never were at the East or West-Indies, or in Turky or Spain, yet do venture their whole estate in traffick thither, tho' they have no Mathematical demonstration but only moral assurance that there are such places. Nay, which is more, men every day eat and drink, tho' I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid or Apollonius, that his Baker or Brewer, or Cook have not conveyed poyson into his meat or drink. And that man that would be so wise and cautious as not to eat or drink till he could demonstrate this to himself, I know no other remedy for him but that in great gravity and wisdom he must dye for fear of death. And for any man to urge that tho' men in temporal affairs proceed upon moral assurance, yet there is greater assurance required to make men seek Heaven and avoid Hell, seems to me to be highly unreasonable. For such an assurance of things as will make men circumspect and careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought in all reason to awaken men much more to the avoiding of a greater, such an assurance as will sharpen mens desires and quicken their endeavours for the obtaining of a lesser good ought in all reason to animate men more powerfully, and to inspire them with a greater vigor and industry in the pursuit of that which is infinitely greater. For why the same assurance should not operate as well in a great danger as in a less, in a great good as in a small and inconsiderable one, I can see no reason; unless men will say, that the greatness of an evil danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it, and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishearten men from the pursuit of it.

And now I think I may with reason intreat such as are atheistically inclined, to consider these things seriously and impartially; and if there be weight in these considerations which I have offered to them to sway with reasonable men, I would beg of such that they would not suffer themselves to be byassed by prejudice or passion, or the interest of any lust or worldly advantage, to a contrary persuasion.

First,

First, I would intreat them seriously and diligently to consider these things, because they are of so great moment and concernment to every man. If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, these principles of Religion do. For what can import us more to be satisfied in than whether there be a God, or not? whether our Souls shall perish with our bodies, or be immortal and shall continue for ever? And if so, whether in that eternal state which remains for men after this life, they shall not be happy or miserable for ever according as they have demeaned themselves in this world? If these things be so, they are of infinite consequence to us; and therefore it highly concerns us to enquire diligently about them, and to satisfy our minds concerning them one way or other. For these are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon, much less (as the way of atheistical men is) to be play'd and jested withal. There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than profanely to scoff at Religion. It is a sign that that man hath no regard to himself, and that he is not touch'd with a sense of his own interest, who loves to be jesting with edg'd tools and to play with life and death. This is the very mad-man that Solomon speaks of, who casteth firebrands, arrows and death, and saith, Am I not in sport? To examine severely and debate seriously the principles of Religion, is a thing worthy of a wise man; but if any man shall turn Religion into raillery, and think to confute it by two or three bold jests, this man doth not render Religion, but himself ridiculous, in the opinion of all considerate men; because he sports with his own life. If the principles of Religion were doubtful and uncertain, yet they concern us so nearly that we ought to be serious in the examination of them. And tho they were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put into a fool's coat, and the most noble and excellent Poem may be debased and made vile by being turn'd into burlesque. But of this I shall have occasion to speak more largely in my next discourse.

So that it concerns every man, that would not trifle away his Soul and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters whether they be so or not, and patiently to consider the arguments which are brought for them. For many have miscarried about these things, not because there is not reason and evidence enough for them, but because they have not had patience enough to consider them.

Secondly, Consider these things impartially. All wicked men are of a party against Religion. Some lust or interest engageth them against it. Hence it comes to pass that they are apt to slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for it, and to cry up very weak ones against it. Men do generally and without difficulty assent to Mathematical truths, because it is no bodies interest to deny them; but men are slow to believe moral and divine Truths, because by their lusts and interest they are prejudic'd against them. And therefore you may observe that the more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslav'd to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of Religion.

Therefore when you are examining these matters, do not take into consideration any sensual or worldly interest, but deal clearly and impartially with your selves. Let not temporal and little advantages sway you against a greater and more durable interest. Think thus with your selves, that you have not the making of things true or false, but that the truth and existence of things is already fix'd and settled, and that the principles of Religion are already either determinately true or false before you think of them; either there is a God, or there is not; either your Souls are Immortal, or they are not;

not; one of these is certain and necessary, and is not now to be altered; the truth of things will not comply with our conceits, and bend it self to our interests. Therefore do not think what you would have to be, but consider impartially what is, and (if it be) will be whether you will or no. Do not reason thus: I would fain be wicked and therefore it is my interest that there should be no God, nor no life after this; and therefore I will endeavour to prove that there is no such thing, and will shew all the favour I can to that side of the question; I will bend my understanding and wit to strengthen the negative, and will study to make it as true as I can. This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thy self; and that we may do as often as we please, but the nature of things will not be imposed upon. If then thou be as wise as thou oughtest to be, thou wilt reason thus with thy self; my highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters, therefore setting aside all other considerations I will endeavour to know the truth and yield to that.

And now it is time to draw towards a conclusion of this long discourse. And that which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men of and to persuade them to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend to us as proper for humane consideration, unto man he said, behold the fear of the Lord that is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. Whoever pretends to reason, and calls himself a man, is oblig'd to acknowledge God and to demean himself religiously towards him. For God is to the understanding of man as the light of the Sun is to our eyes, the first and the plainest and the most glorious object of it. He fills Heaven and earth, and every thing in them does represent him to us. Which way soever we turn our selves, we are encountred with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. For (as the Apostle reasons) The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and godhead: εἰς τὸ ὅτι ὑπὸ ἀναπολογίῃς so that they are without excuse; that is, those men that know not God have no apology to make for themselves. Or if men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to consider the proper consequences of such a Principle, not to demean our selves towards him as becomes our relation to him and dependance upon him and the duty which we naturally owe him, this is great stupidity and inconsiderateness.

And yet he that considersthe lives and actions of the greatest part of men would verily think that they understood nothing of all this. Therefore the Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding. It is a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them: and elsewhere, have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? Not that they are destitute of the natural faculty of understanding, but they do not use it as they ought; they are not blind but they wink, they detain the truth of God in unrighteousness, and tho' they know God, yet they do not glorify him as God, nor suffer the apprehensions of him to have a due influence upon their hearts and lives.

Deut. 32.
Psal. 14.4.

Men generally stand very much upon the credit and reputation of their understandings, and of all things in the world hate to be accounted fools, because it is so great a reproach. The best way to avoid this imputation and to bring off the credit of our understandings is to be truly religious, to fear the Lord, and to depart from evil. For certainly there is no such imprudent person as he that neglects God and his soul, and is careless and slothful about his everlasting concerns; because this man acts contrary to his truest reason and best interest; he neglects his own safety, and is active to procure his own ruin; he flies from happiness and runs away from it as fast as he can, but pursues misery, and makes hast to be undone. Hence it is that Solomon does does all along in the Proverbs give the title of fool to a wicked man, as if it were his proper name and the fittest character of him, because he is so eminently such : There is no fool to the sinner, who every moment ventures his Soul, and lays his everlasting interest at the stake. Every time a man provokes God he does the greatest mischief to himself that can be imagined. A mad man that cuts himself and tears his own flesh and dashes his head against the stones does not act so unreasonably as he, because he is not so sensible of what he does. Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy and a chosen distraction, and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is craz'd and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. For to them who believe another life after this, an eternal state of happiness or misery in another world, (which is but a reasonable postulatum or demand among Christians) there is nothing in Mathematicks more demonstrable than the folly of wicked men; for it is not a clearer and more evident principle that the whole is greater than a part, than that eternity and the concerns of it are to be preferred before time.

I will therefore put the matter into a temporal Case, that wicked men who understand any thing of the rules and principles of worldly wisdom may see the imprudence of an irreligious and sinful course, and be convinced that this their way is their folly, even themselves being judges.

Is that man wise, as to his body and his health, who only cloathes his hands but leaves his whole body naked? who provides only against the tooth-ach, and neglects whole troops of mortal diseases that are ready to rush in upon him? Just thus does he who takes care only for this vile body, but neglects his precious and immortal Soul; who is very solicitous to prevent small and temporal inconveniences, but takes no care to escape the damnation of hell.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to, or provision for the Remaining part of his life? even so does he that provides for the short time of this life, but takes no care for all Eternity, which is to be wise for a moment, but a fool for ever, and to act as untowardly and as crossly to the reason of things as can be imagined, to regard time as if it were eternity, and to neglect eternity as if it were but a short time.

Do we count him a wise man, who is wise in any thing but in his own proper profession and employment, wise for every body but himself; who is ingenious to contrive his own misery and to do himself a mischief, but is dull and stupid as to the designing of any real benefit and advantage to himself? Such a one is he, who is ingenious in his Calling but a bad Christian; for Christianity is more our proper calling and profession than the very trades we live upon: and such is every sinner, who is wise to do evil, but to do good hath no understanding.

Is it wisdom in any man to neglect and disoblige him who is his best friend, and can be his worst enemy? or with one weak troop to go out to meet him that comes against him with thousands of thousands, to fly a small danger and run upon a greater? Thus does every wicked man that neglects and contemns God, who can save or destroy him; who strives with his Maker and revoketh the Lord to jealousy, and with the small and inconsiderable forces of a man takes the field against the mighty God, the Lord of Hosts; who fears them that can kill the body, but after that have no more that they can do; but fears not him, who after he hath kill'd, can destroy both body and soul in hell; and thus does he who for fear of any thing in this world ventures to displease God, for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God, he flies from a temporal danger and leaps into Hell.

Is not he an imprudent man, who in matters of greatest moment and concernment neglects opportunities never to be retriev'd, who standing upon the shore, and seeing the tide making hast towards him apace, and that he hath but a few minutes to save himself, yet will lay himself to sleep there till the cruel sea rush in upon him and overwhelm him? And is he any better who trifles away this day of God's grace and patience, and foolishly adjourns the necessary work of repentance and the weighty business of Religion to a dying hour?

And to put an end to these questions, Is he wise who hopes to attain the End without the means, nay, by means that are quite contrary to it? such is every wicked man who hopes to be blessed hereafter without being holy here, and to be happy, that is, to find a pleasure in the enjoyment of God and in the company of holy spirits by rendring himself as unsuitable and unlike to them as he can.

Wouldst thou then be truly wise? Be wise for thy self, wise for thy soul, wise for eternity. Resolve upon a religious course of life. Fear God and depart from evil. Look beyond things present and sensible unto things which are not seen and are eternal, labour to secure the great interests of another world, and refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin but never have an end: and this will approve it self to be wisdom at the last, whatever the world judge of it now. For not that which is approved of men now, but what shall finally be approved by God is true wisdom; that which is esteemed so by him who is the fountain and original of all wisdom, the first rule and measure, the best and most competent judge of it.

I deny not but those that are wicked and neglect Religion may think themselves wise, and may enjoy this their delusion for a while: But there is a time a coming when the most prophane and atheistical, who now account it a piece of Gallantry and an argument of a great spirit and of a more than common wit and understanding to slight God and to baffle Religion and to level all the discourses of another world with the Poetical descriptions of the Fairy-land; I say, there is a day a coming when all these witty fools shall be unhappily undeceived, and not being able to enjoy their delusion any longer shall call themselves fools for ever.

But why should I use so much importunity to persuade men to that which is so excellent, so useful, and so necessary? The thing it self hath allurements in it beyond all arguments: For if Religion be the best knowledge and wisdom I cannot offer any thing beyond this to your understandings to raise your esteem of it, I can present nothing beyond this to your affections to excite your love and desire. All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice; and if mens natural desire of wisdom and knowledge and happiness will not persuade them to be religious, 'tis in vain to use arguments; if the sight of these beauties will not charm mens affections, 'tis to no purpose to go about to compel a liking, and to urge and push forward a match to the making whereof consent is necessary. Religion is matter of our freest choice, and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it there is no remedy. Pertinacia nullum remedium posuit Deus, God has provided no remedy for the obstinacy of men; but if they will chuse to be fools and to be miserable, he will leave them to inherit their own choice and to enjoy the portion of sinners.

S E R M O N II.

The Folly of Scoffing at Religion.

2 P E T. III. 3.

Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts.

K Nowing this first. In the verse before, the Apostle was speaking of a famous prophecy before the accomplishment of which this sort of men whom he calls scoffers should come. That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy Prophets, and of the commandment of us the Apostles of our Lord and Saviour; Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, &c.

The prophecy here spoken of is probably that famous prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem which is in the Prophet Daniel, and before the fulfilling whereof our Saviour expressly tells us false prophets should arise and deceive many.

Now the scoffers here spoken of are the false teachers whom the Apostle had been describing all along in the foregoing Chapter, there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you. These, he tells us, should proceed to that height of impiety as to scoff at the principles of Religion and to deride the expectations of a future judgment, In the last days shall come scoffers walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming?

In speaking to these words, I shall do these three things.

1. Consider the nature of the sin here mentioned, which is scoffing at Religion.

2. The character of the persons that are charg'd with the guilt of this sin, they are said to walk after their own lusts.

3. I shall represent to you the heinousness and the aggravations of this vice.

I. First, We will consider the nature of the sin here mentioned, which is scoffing at Religion, There shall come scoffers: These it seems were a sort of people that derided our Saviour's prediction of his coming to judge the world. So the Apostle tells us in the next words, that they said where is the promise of his coming?

In those times there was a common persuasion among Christians that the day of the Lord was at hand, as the Apostle elsewhere tells us. Now this 'tis probable, these scoffers twitted the Christians withal; and because Christ did not come when some looked for him they concluded he would not come at all. Upon this they derided the Christians as enduring persecution in a vain expectation of that which was never likely to happen. They saw all things continue as they were from the beginning of the world, notwithstanding the the apprehensions of Christians concerning the approaching end of it ; For since the Fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were, from the beginning of the world. Since the Fathers fell asleep, ἀφ' ἧς, which may either be rendered from the time, or else (which seems more agreeable to the atheistical discourse of these men) saving or except that the fathers are fallen asleep, all things continue as they were ; Saving that men dye and one generation succeeds another, they saw no change or alteration. They looked upon all things as going on in a constant course ; One generation of men passed away and another came in the room of it, but the world remain'd still as it was. And thus for ought they knew things might hold on for ever. So that the principles of these men seem to be much the same with those of the Epicureans, who denied the providence of God and the immortality of mens souls ; and consequently a future judgment which should sentence men to rewards and punishments in another world. These great and fundamental principles of all Religion they derided as the fancies and dreams of a company of melancholy men, who were weary of the world and pleased themselves with vain conceits of happiness and ease in another life. But as for them, they believed none of those things ; and therefore gave all manner of license and indulgence to their lusts.

But this belongs to the second thing I propounded to speak to, namely,

II. The character which is here given of these scoffers ; They are said to walk after their own lusts. And no wonder if when they denied a future judgment they gave up themselves to all manner of sensuality.

St. Jude in his Epistle gives much the same character of them that St. Peter here does, ver. 18, 19. There shall come in the last days mockers, walking after their own ungodly lusts, sensual, not having the Spirit. So that we see what kind of persons they are who prophanelly scoff at Religion, men of sensual spirits and of licentious lives. For this character which the Apostle here gives of the scoffers of that age was not an accidental thing which happened to those persons, but is the constant character of them who deride Religion, and flows from the very temper and disposition of those who are guilty of this impiety ; it is both the usual preparation to it, and the natural consequent of it.

To deride God and Religion is the highest kind of impiety. And men do not usually arrive to this degree of wickedness at first, but they come to it by several steps. The Psalmist very elegantly expresseth to us the several gradations by which men at last come to this horrid degree of impiety ; Blessed is the man, that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. Men are usually first corrupted by bad counsel and company, which is called walking in the counsel of the ungodly ; next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices, which is standing in the way of sinners ; and then at last they take up and settle in a contempt of all Religion, which is called sitting in the seat of the scornful. Psal 1

For when men once indulge themselves in wicked courses, the vicious inclinations of their minds sway their understandings, and make them apt to disbelieve those truths which contradict their lusts. Every inordinate lust and passion is a false byass upon mens understandings which naturally draws toward Atheism. And when mens judgments are once byassed they do not believe according to the evidence of things, but according to their humour and their interest. For when men live as if there were no God it becomes expedient for them that there should be none : And then they endeavour to persuade themselves so, and will be glad to find arguments to fortify themselves in this persuasion. Men of dissolute lives cry down Religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it ; they are loth to be tied up by the strict laws and rules of it : 'Tis their interest more than any reason they have against it which makes them despise it, they hate it because they are reproved by it. So our Saviour tells us, that men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil ; for every one that doth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reprov'd.

I remember it is the saying of one, who hath done more by his Writings to debauch the Age with Atheistical principles than any man that lives in it ; That when reason is against a man, then a man will be against reason. I am ~~sure~~ this is the true account of such mens enmity to Religion, Religion is against them, and therefore they set themselves against Religion. The principles of Religion and the doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, they are continually flying in their faces and galling their consciences : And this is that which makes them kick against Religion and spurn at the doctrines of that holy Book. And this may probably be one reason why many men, who are observ'd to be sufficiently dull in other matters, yet can talk prophanely and speak against Religion with some kind of salt and smartness, because Religion is the thing that frets them ; and as in other things so in this, vexatio dat intellectum, the inward trouble and vexation of their minds gives them some kind of wit and sharpness in rallying upon Religion. Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them winch and sling as if they had some metal. For, let men pretend what they will, there is no ease and comfort of mind to be had from atheistical principles. 'Tis found by experience, that none are more apprehensive of danger or more fearful of death than this sort of men : Even when they are in prosperity they ever and anon feel many inward stings and lashes, but when any great affliction or calamity overtakes them they are the most poor-spirited creatures in the whole world.

The sum is; the true reason why any man is an Atheist is because he is a wicked man. Religion would curb him in his lusts, and therefore he casts it off and puts all the scorn upon it he can. Besides, that men think it some kind of apology for their vices that they do not act contrary to any principle they profess : Their practice is agreeable to what they pretend to believe, and so they think to vindicate themselves and their own practices by laughing at those for fools who believe any thing to the contrary.

III. The third thing I propounded was, to represent to you the heinousness and the aggravations of this vice. And to make this out we will make these three suppositions, which are as many as the thing will bear.

1. Suppose there were no God, and that the principles of Religion were false.

2. Suppose the matter were doubtful, and the arguments equal on both sides.

3. Suppose it certain that there is a God, and that the principles of Religion are true. Put the case how we will, I shall shew that the humour is intolerable.

1. Suppose there were no God, and that the principles of Religion were false. Not that there is any reason for such a supposition, but only to shew the unreasonableness of this humour ; Put the case that these men were in the right, in denying the principles of Religion, and that all that they pretend were true ; yet so long as the generality of mankind believes the contrary, it is certainly a great rudeness, or incivility at least, to deride and scoff at these things. Indeed upon this supposition there could be no such thing as sin, but yet it would be a great offence against the laws of civil conversation. Suppose then the Atheist were wiser than all the world, and that he did upon good grounds know that all mankind, besides himself and two or three more, were mistaken about the matters of Religion; yet if he were either so wise, or so civil as he should be, he would keep all this to himself, and not affront other men about these things.

I remember that that Law which God gave to the people of Israel, Thou shalt not speak evil of the Rulers of thy people; is rendred by Josephus in a very different sense: What other nations account Gods, let no man blaspheme. And this is not so different from the Hebrew as at first sight one would imagine, for the same Hebrew word signifies both Gods and Rulers. But whether this be the meaning of that Law or not there is a great deal of reason in the thing. For though every man have a right in dispute against a false Religion, and to urge it with all its absurd and ridiculous consequences, as the Ancient Fathers did in their disputes with the Heathen; yet it is a barbarous incivility for any man scurrilously to make sport with that which others account Religion, nor with any design to convince their reason but only to provoke their rage.

But now the Atheist can pretend no obligation of conscience why he should so much as dispute against the principles of Religion, much less deride them. He that pretends to any Religion may pretend conscience for opposing a contrary Religion: But he that denies all Religion, can pretend no conscience for any thing. A man may be obliged indeed in reason and common humanity to free his neighbour from a hurtful error; but supposing there were no God this notion of a Deity and the Principles of Religion have taken such a deep root in the mind of man that either they are not to be extinguished, or if they be it would be no kindness to any man to endeavour it for him, because it is not to be done but with so much trouble and violence that the remedy would be worse than the disease.

For if this notion of a Deity be founded in a natural fear, it is in vain to attempt to expel it; for whatever violence may be offer'd to nature by endeavouring to reason men into a contrary persuasion, nature will still recoil and at last return to it self, and then the fear will be augmented from the apprehension of the dangerous consequences of such an impiety. So that nothing can create more trouble to a man than to endeavour to dispossess him of this conceit, because nature is but irritated by the contest, and the man's fears will be doubled upon him.

But if we suppose this apprehension of a Deity to have no foundation in nature, but to have had its rise from tradition which hath been confirmed in the world by the prejudice of education, the difficulty of removing it will almost be as great as if it were natural, that which men take in by education being next to that which is natural. And if it could be extinguish'd, yet the advantage of it will not recompence the trouble of the cure. For except the avoiding of persecution for Religion, there is no advantage that the principles of Atheism if they could be quietly settled in a man's mind can give him. The advantage indeed that men make of them is to give themselves the liberty to do what they please, to be more sensual and more unjust than other men; that is, they have the privilege to surfeit themselves and to be sick oftner than other men, and to make mankind their enemy by their unjust and dishonest actions, and consequently to live more uneasily in the world than other men.

So that the principles of Religion, the belief of a God, and another life, by obliging men to be virtuous do really promote their temporal happiness.

And

And all the privilege that Atheism pretends to is to let men loose to vice, which is naturally attended with temporal inconveniences. And if this be true, then the Atheist cannot pretend this reason of charity, to mankind (which is the only one I can think of) to dispute against Religion, much less to rally upon it. For it is plain, that it would be no kindness to any man to be undeceived in these principles of Religion, supposing they were false. Because the principles of Religion are so far from hindring, that they promote a man's happiness even in this world, and as to the other world there can be no inconvenience in the mistake, for when a man is not, it will be no trouble to him that he was once deceived about these matters.

And where no obligation of Conscience nor of reason can be pretended, there certainly the laws of civility ought to take place. Now men do profess to believe that there is a God, and that the common principles of Religion are true, and to have a great veneration for these things. Can there then be a greater insolence, than for a man when he comes into company to rally and fall foul upon those things for which he knows the company have a reverence? Can one man offer a greater affront to another, than to expose to scorn him whom he owns and declares to be his best friend, the patron of his life, and the greatest benefactor he hath in the world? And doth not every man that owns a God say this of him?

But when the generality of Mankind are of the same opinion the rudeness is still the greater. So that whoever doth openly contemn God and Religion does delinquere in majestatem populi & humani generis, he does offend against the majesty of the People and that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether they be true or not; which is the greatest incivility that can be imagin'd.

This is the first consideration, and it is the least that I have to urge in this matter. But yet I have insisted the longer upon it, because it is such a one as ought especially to prevail upon those who I am afraid are too often guilty of this vice, I mean those who are of better breeding, because they pretend to understand the laws of behaviour and the decencies of conversation better than other men.

2. Supposing it were doubtful whether there be a God or not, and whether the Principles of Religion were true or not, and that the Arguments were equal on both sides; yet it would be a great folly to deride these things. And here I suppose as much as the Atheist can with any colour of reason pretend to. For no man ever yet pretended to demonstrate that there is no God, nor no life after this. For these being pure negatives are capable of no proof, unless a man could shew them to be plainly impossible. The utmost that is pretended is that the arguments that are brought for these things are not sufficient to convince. But if they were only probable, so long as no arguments are produced to the contrary, that cannot in reason be denied to be a great advantage.

But I will for the present suppose the probabilities equal on both sides. And upon this supposition I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous folly to deride these things. Because tho the arguments on both sides were equal, yet the danger and hazard is infinitely unequal.

If it prove true that there is no God the religious man may be as happy in this world as the Atheist, nay the principles of Religion and Virtue do in their own nature tend to make him happier. Because they give satisfaction to his mind, and his conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the Atheist feels. Besides, that the practice of Religion and virtue doth naturally promote our temporal felicity. It is more
for

for a man's health, and more for his reputation, and more for his advantage in all other worldly respects to lead a virtuous than a vicious course of life. And for the other world, if there be no God the case of the religious man and the Atheist will be alike, because they will both be extinguish'd by death and insensible of any farther happiness or misery.

But then if the contrary opinion should prove true, that there is a God; and that the souls of men are transmitted out of this world into the other, there to receive the just reward of their actions: Then it is plain to every man at first sight, that the case of the religious man and the Atheist must be vastly different: Then, where shall the wicked, and the ungodly appear? And what think we shall be the portion of those who have affronted God, and derided his word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred and religious? What can they expect but to be rejected by him whom they have renounced, and to feel the terrible effects of that power and Justice which they have despised? So that tho the arguments on both sides were equal, yet the danger is not so. On the one side there is none at all, but 'tis infinite on the other. And consequently, it must be a monstrous folly for any man to make a mock of those things which he knows not whether they be or not; and if they be, of all things in the world they are no jesting matters.

3. Suppose there be a God, and that the principles of Religion are true, then is it not only a heinous impiety but a perfect madness to scoff at these things. And that there is a God, and that the Principles of Religion are true, I have already in my former discourse endeavour'd to prove; both from the things which are made, and from the general consent of mankind in these principles; of which universal consent no sufficient Reason can be given unless they were true. And supposing they are so, it is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly that can be imagined to deride these things. To be disobedient to the commands of God is a great contempt, but to deny his Being, and to make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous by turning the wise and weighty sayings of that Holy Book into raillery, is a most direct affront to the God that is above. Thus the Psalmist describes these atheistical persons as levelling their blasphemies immediately against the Majesty of Heaven. They set their mouth against the heavens, and their tongue walketh through the earth; they do mischief among men, but the affront is immediately to God.

Besides, that this prophane spirit is an argument of a most incorrigible temper. The Wise man every where speaks of the scorner as one of the worst sort of sinners and hardest to be reclaimed, because he despiset instruction and mocks at all the means whereby he should be reformed.

And then, is it not a most black and horrid ingratitude thus to use the Author of our Beings and the Patron of our Lives; to make a scorn of him that made us, and to live in an open defiance of him in whom we live, move, and have our beings? But this is not all. As it is a most heinous so it is a most dangerous impiety, to despise him that can destroy us, and to oppose him who is infinitely more powerful than we are. Will ye (says the Apostle) provoke the Lord to jealousy? are ye stronger than he? What Gama-riel said to the Jews, in another case, may with a little change be applied to this sort of men; If there be a God, and the principles of Religion be true, ye cannot overthrow them, therefore refrain from speaking against these things, lest ye be found fighters against God.

I will but add one thing more to shew the folly of this prophane temper. And that is this, that as it is the greatest of all other sins so there is in truth the least temptation to it. When the Devil tempts men with riches or honour honour to ruin themselves he offers them some kind of consideration: But the prophane person serves the Devil for nought, and sins only for sin's sake, suffers himself to be tempted to the greatest sins and into the greatest dangers for no other reward but the slender reputation of seeming to say that wittily which no wise man would say. And what a folly is this, for a man to offend his conscience to please his humour, and only for his jest to lose two of the best Friends he hath in the world, God and his own soul?

I have done with the three things I propounded to speak to upon this Argument. And now I beg your patience to apply what I have said to these three purposes.

1. To take men off from this impious and dangerous folly of prophane-ness which by some is miscalled wit.
2. To caution men not to think the worse of Religion, because some are so bold as to despise and deride it.
3. To persuade men to employ that reason and wit which God hath given them, to better and nobler purposes, in the service and to the glory of that God who hath bestowed these gifts on men.

1. To take men off from this impious and dangerous folly. I know not how it comes to pass that some men have the fortune to be esteemed Wits only for jesting out of the common road, and for making bold to scoff at those things which the greatest part of mankind reverence. As if a man should be accounted a Wit for reviling those in Authority which is no more an argument of any man's wit than it is of his discretion. A wise man would not speak contemptuously of a great Prince though he were out of his Dominions, because he remembers that Kings have long hands, and that their power and influence does many times reach a great way farther than their direct Authority. But God is a great King, and in his hands are all the corners of the earth; we can go no whither from his Spirit, nor can we flee from his presence; where ever we are his eyes see us and his right hand can reach us. If men did truly consult the interest either of their safety or reputation, they would never exercise their wit in dangerous matters. Wit is a very commendable quality, but then a wise man should always have the keeping of it. It is a sharp weapon, as apt for mischief as for good purposes if it be not well manag'd. The proper use of it is to season conversation, to represent what is praise-worthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men, such things as are in themselves truly ridiculous: But if it be applied to the abuse of the gravest and most serious matters it then loses its commendation. If any man think he abounds in this quality and hath wit to spare there is scope enough for it within the bounds of Religion and decency, and when it transgresseth these it degenerates into insolence and impiety. All wit which borders upon prophane-ness and makes bold with those things to which the greatest reverence is due deserves to be branded for folly.

And if we would preserve our selves from the infection of this vice we must take heed how we scoff at Religion, under any form, lest insensibly we derive some contempt upon Religion it self. And we must likewise take heed how we accustom our selves to a slight and irreverent use of the Name of God, and of the phrases and expressions of the Holy Bible, which ought not to be applied upon every light occasion. Men will easily slide into the highest degree of prophane-ness who are not careful to preserve a due reverence of the great and glorious Name of God, and an awful regard to the Holy Scriptures. None so nearly disposed to scoffing at Religion as those who have accustomed themselves to swear upon trifling occasions. For it is just with God to permit those who allow themselves in one degree of prophaneſs to proceed to another, till at laſt they come to that height of impiety as to condemn all Religion.

2. Let no man think the worſe of Religion, becauſe ſome are ſo bold as to deſpiſe and deride it. For 'tis no diſparagement to any perſon or thing to be laugh't at, but to deſerve to be ſo. The moſt grave and ſerious matters in the whole world are liable to be abus'd. It is a known ſaying of Epictetus, that every thing hath two handles; By which he means, that there is nothing ſo bad but a man may lay hold of ſomething or other about it that will afford matter of excuſe and extenuation, nor nothing ſo excellent but a man may faſten upon ſomething or other belonging to it whereby to traduce it. A ſharp wit may find ſomething in the wiſeſt man whereby to expoſe him to the contempt of injudicious people. The graveſt Book that ever was written may be made ridiculous by applying the ſayings of it to a fooliſh purpoſe. For a jeſt may be obtruded upon any thing. And therefore no man ought to have the leſs reverence for the principles of Religion, or for the holy Scriptures, becauſe idle and prophane Wits can break jeſts upon them. Nothing is ſo eaſy as to take particular phraſes and expreſſions out of the beſt Book in the world and to abuſe them by forcing an odd and ridiculous ſenſe upon them. But no wiſe man will think a good Book fooliſh for this reaſon, but the man that abuſes it; nor will he eſteem that to which every thing is liable to be a juſt exception againſt any thing. At this rate we muſt deſpiſe all things, but ſurely the better and the ſhorter way is to condemn thoſe who would bring any thing that is worthy into contempt.

3. And laſtly, to perſuade men to employ that reaſon and wit which God hath given them to better and nobler purpoſes in the ſervice and to the glory of that God who hath beſtowed theſe gifts on men, as Aboliah and Bezaleel did their mechanical ſkill in the adorning and beautifying of God's Tabernacle. For this is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all thoſe gifts and endowments which God hath given us is to glorify the giver.

Here is ſubject enough to exerciſe the wit of men and angels: To praiſe that infinite goodneſs, and almighty power, and exquisite wiſdom which made us and all things; and to admire what we can never ſufficiently praiſe; To vindicate the wiſe and juſt providence of God, in the government of the world; and to endeavour, as well as we can upon an imperfect view of things, to make out the beauty and harmony of all the ſeeming diſcords and irregularities of the Divine adminiſtrations; To explain the oracles of the holy Scriptures, and to adore that great myſtery of Divine love (which the Angels, better and nobler Creatures than we are, deſire to pry into) God's ſending his only Son into the world to ſave ſinners, and to give his life a ranſom for them: Theſe would be noble exerciſes indeed for the tongues and pens of the greateſt Wits. And ſubjects of this nature are the beſt trials of our ability in this kind. Satyr and invective are the eaſieſt kind of wit. Almoſt any degree of it will ſerve to abuſe and find fault. For wit is a keen inſtrument, and every one can cut and gaſh with it, but to carve a beautiful image and to poliſh it requires great art and dexterity. To praiſe any thing well is an argument of much more wit, than to abuſe. A little wit, and a great deal of ill nature will furniſh a man for Satyr, but the greateſt inſtance of wit is to commend well. And perhaps the beſt things are the hardeſt to be duly commended. For tho' there be a great deal of matter to work upon yet there is great judgment required to make choice. And where the ſubject is great and excellent it is hard not to ſink below the dignity of it.

Thus I say on purpose to recommend to men a nobler exercise for their wits, and if it be possible, to put them out of conceit with that scoffing humour which is so easy, and so ill-natur'd, and is not only an enemy to Religion but to every thing else that is wise and worthy. And I am very much mistaken, if the state as well as the Church, the civil government as well as Religion, do not in a short space find the intolerable inconvenience of this humour.

But I confine my self to the consideration of Religion. And it is sad indeed, that in a Nation professing Christianity so horrid an impiety should dare to appear. But the Scripture hath foretold us that this sort of men should arise in the Gospel-age, and they did appear even in the Apostles days. That which is more sad and strange is, that we should persist in this prophaneness notwithstanding the terrible judgments of God which have been abroad in this Nation. God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety. And now that those judgments have done no good upon us we may justly fear that he will appear once for all. And 'tis time for him to shew himself when his very Being is call'd in question, and to come and judge the world when men begin to doubt whether he made it.

The Scripture mentions two things as the fore-runners and reasons of his coming to judgment, infidelity, and prophane scoffing at Religion. When the Son of man comes, shall he find faith on the earth? And St. Jude out of an ancient prophecy of Enoch expressly mentions this as one reason of the coming of the Lord, to convince ungodly sinners of all their hard speeches which they had spoken against him.

Luk. 18.8.

Jude. 15.
ver.

And if these things be a sign and reason of his coming, I wish that we in this Age had not too much cause to apprehend the Judge to be at the door. This impiety did forerun the destruction of Jerusalem, and the utter ruin of the Jewish Nation. And if it hold on amongst us, may not we have reason to fear that either the end of all things is at hand, or that some very dismal calamity greater than any our eyes have yet seen does hang over us? But I would fain hope that God hath mercy still for us, and that men will pity themselves, and repent, and give glory to God, and know in this their day the things that belong to their peace. Which God of his infinite mercy grant for the sake of Christ, To whom with the Father, &c.

S E R M O N III.

The Advantages of Religion to Societies.

P R O V. XIV. 34.

Righteousness exalteth a Nation; but sin is the reproach of any people.

ONE of the first principles that is planted in the nature of man, and which lies at the very root and foundation of his being is the desire of his own preservation and happiness. Hence it is that every man is led by interest, and does love or hate, chuse or refuse things, according as he apprehends them to conduce to this end, or to contradict it. And because the happiness of this life is most present and sensible, therefore human nature (which in this degenerate state is extremely sunk down into sense) is most powerfully affected with sensible and temporal things. And consequently, there cannot be a greater prejudice raised against any thing than to have it represented as inconvenient and hurtful to our temporal interests.

Upon this account it is that Religion hath extremely suffer'd in the opinion of many as if it were opposite to our present welfare, and did rob men of the greatest advantages and conveniences of life. So that he that would do right to Religion, and make a ready way for the entertainment of it among men, cannot take a more effectual course than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind and by giving satisfaction to our reason, that it is so far from being an enemy that it is the greatest friend to our temporal interests; and that it doth not only tend to make every man happy consider'd singly and in a private capacity, but is excellently fitted for the benefit of human society.

How much Religion tends even to the temporal advantage of private persons I shall not now consider, because my Text leads me to discourse of the other, namely, to shew how advantageous Religion and Virtue are to the publick prosperity of a Nation, which I take to be the meaning of this Aphorism of Solomon, Righteousness exalteth a Nation, &c.

And here I shall not restrain righteousness to the particular virtue of justice (tho in this sense also this saying is most true) but enlarge it according to the genius and strain of the Book of the Proverbs, in which the words wisdom and righteousness are commonly used very comprehensively so as to signify all Religion and Virtue. And that this word is so to be taken in the Text may appear farther from the opposition of it to sin or vice in general; Righteousness exalteth a Nation, but Sin is the reproach of any People.

You see then what will be the subject of my present discourse; namely, that Religion and Virtue are the great causes of publick happiness and prosperity.

And though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged and long enough experienced in the world, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy mens reason about it. To which end I shall do these two things.

1. Endeavour to give an account of this Truth.
2. To vindicate it from the pretences and insinuations of atheistical persons.

I shall give you this twofold account of it.

1. From the justice of the Divine providence.
2. From the natural tendency of the thing.

1. From the justice of the Divine providence. Indeed, as to particular persons, the providences of God are many times promiscuously administered in this world; so that no man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person by any thing that befalls him in this life. But God does not deal thus with Nations. Because publick bodies and communities of men, as such, can only be rewarded and punished in this world. For in the next, all those publick societies and combinations wherein men are now link'd together under several Governments, shall be dissolved. God will not then reward or punish Nations, as Nations; But every man shall then give an account of himself to God, and receive his own reward, and bear his own burthen. For altho' God account it no disparagement to his justice to let particular good men suffer in this world and pass through many tribulations into the kingdom of God, because there is another day a coming which will be a more proper season of reward; yet in the usual course of his providence he recompenceth religious and virtuous Nations with temporal blessings and prosperity. For which reason St. Austin tells us that the mighty success and long prosperity of the Romans was a reward given them by God for their eminent justice and temperance, and other virtues. And on the other hand, God many times suffers the most grievous sins of particular persons to go unpunished in this world, because he knows that his justice will have another and better opportunity to meet and reckon with them. But the general and crying sins of a Nation cannot hope to escape publick judgments, unless they be prevented by a general repentance. God may defer his judgments for a time and give a People a longer space of repentance, he may stay till the iniquities of a Nation be full, but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. And usually the longer punishment is delay'd it is the heavier when it comes.

Now all this is very reasonable, because this world is the only season for National punishments. And indeed they are in a great degree necessary for the present vindication of the honour and majesty of the Divine Laws, and to give some check to the overflowing of wickedness. Publick judgments are the banks and shores upon which God breaks the insolency of sinners and stays their proud waves. And though among men the multitude of offenders be many times a cause of impunity, because of the weakness of human Governments which are glad to spare where they are not strong enough to punish, yet in the government of God, things are quite otherwise. No combination of sinners is too hard for him, and the greater and more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concern'd to vindicate the affront. However God may pass by single sinners in this world, yet when a Nation combines against him, when hand joins in hand the wicked shall not go unpunished.

This the Scripture declares to be the settled course of God's providence; That a righteous Nation shall be happy; The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effects of righteousness, quietness and assurance for ever. And on the other hand, that he useth to shower down his judgments upon a wicked people, he turneth a fruitful land into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein. And

And the experience of all ages hath made this good. All along the History of the Old Testament, we find the interchangeable providences of God towards the People of Israel always suited to their manners. They were constantly prosperous or afflicted according as piety and virtue flourished or declined amongst them. And God did not only exercise this providence towards his own People, but he dealt thus also with other nations. The Roman Empire whilst the virtue of that people remained firm was strong as iron, as 'tis represented in the Prophecy of Daniel: But upon the dissolution of their manners the iron began to be mixt with miry clay, and the feet upon which that Empire stood, to be broken. And tho God in the administration of his justice be not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue from Scripture-examples that the providences of God towards other Nations shall in all circumstances be conformable to his dealings with the People of Israel; yet thus much may with great probability be collected from them, that as God always blessed that People while they were obedient to him, and followed them with his judgments when they rebelled against him, so he will also deal with other Nations. Because the reason of those dispensations as to the main and substance of them seems to be perpetual, and founded in that which can never change, the justice of the Divine providence.

2dly. The truth of this farther appears from the natural tendency of the thing. For Religion in general, and every particular virtue, doth in its own nature conduce to the publick Interest.

Religion, where-ever it is truly planted is certainly the greatest obligation upon conscience to all civil offices and moral duties. Chastity and temperance and industry do in their own nature tend to health and plenty. Truth and fidelity in all our dealings do create mutual love and good-will and confidence among men, which are the great bands of peace. And on the contrary, wickedness doth in its own nature produce many publick mischiefs. For as sins are link'd together and draw on one another, so almost every vice hath some temporal inconvenience annexed to it and naturally following it. Intemperance and lust breed infirmities and diseases, which being propagated spoil the strain of a Nation. Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice, and that causeth enmity and animosities, and these bring on strife and confusion and every evil work. This Philosophical account of publick troubles and confusions St. James gives us, Whence come wars and fightings among you? are they not hence, even from your lusts that war in your members? Jam. 4: 1

But I shall shew more particularly, that Religion and virtue do naturally tend to the good order and more easy government of human Society, because they have a good influence both upon Magistrates and Subjects.

1. Upon Magistrates. Religion teacheth them to rule over men in the fear of God, because tho they be Gods on earth yet they are subjects of Heaven, and accountable to Him who is higher than the highest in this world. Religion in a Magistrate strengthens his authority, because it procures veneration and gains a reputation to it. And in all the affairs of this world so much reputation is really so much power. We see that piety and virtue, where they are found among men of lower degree, will command some reverence and respect: But in persons of eminent place and dignity they are seated to a great advantage, so as to cast a lustre upon their very Place and by a strong reflexion to double the beams of Majesty. Whereas impiety and vice do strangely lessen greatness, and do secretly and unavoidably derive some weakness upon authority it self. Of this the Scripture gives us a remarkable instance in David. For among other things which made the Sons of Zeruiah too hard for him this probably was none of the least, that they were particularly conscious to his crimes.

2. Religion hath a good influence upon the People ; to make them obedient to Government, and peaceable one towards another.

1. To make them obedient to Government, and conformable to Laws ; and that not only for wrath and out of fear of the Magistrates power, which is but a weak and loose principle of obedience, and will cease, when ever men can rebel with safety, and to advantage ; but out of Conscience, which is a firm, and constant and lasting principle, and will hold a man fast when all other obligations will break. He that hath entertain'd the true principles of Christianity is not to be tempted from his obedience and subjection by any worldly considerations, because he believes that whosoever resisteth authority resisteth the ordinance of God, and that they who resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

2. Religion tends to make men peaceable one towards another. For it endeavours to plant all those qualities and dispositions in men which tend to peace and unity, and to fill men with a spirit of universal love and good will. It endeavours likewise to secure every man's interest by commanding the observation of that great rule of equity, Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them ; by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably observed in all our words, promises and contracts. And in order hereunto it requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unfociable and troublesome to one another, as pride, covetousness and injustice, hatred and revenge and cruelty ; and those likewise which are not so commonly reputed vices, as self-conceit and peremptoriness in a man's own opinion, and all peevishness, and in compliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent.

And that these are the proper effects of true piety the doctrine of our Saviour and his Apostles every where teacheth us. Now if this be the design of Religion to bring us to this temper, thusto heal the natures of men and to sweeten their spirits, to correct their passions and to mortify all those lusts which are the causes of enmity and division, then it is evident that in its own nature it tends to the peace and happiness of human society ; and that if men would but live as Religion requires they should do, the world would be a quiet habitation, a most lovely and desirable place in comparison of what now it is. And indeed the true reason why the societies of men are so full of tumult and disorder, so troublesome and tempestuous, is because there is so little of true Religion among men ; so that were it not for some small remainders of piety and virtue which are yet left scatter'd among mankind, human society would in a short space disband and run into confusion, the earth would grow wild and become a great forest, and mankind would become beasts of prey one towards another. And if this discourse hold true surely then one would think that virtue should find it self a seat where-ever human societies are, and that Religion should be owned and encouraged in the world until men cease to be governed by reason.

II. I come to vindicate this truth from the insinuations and pretences of atheistical persons. I shall mention two.

1. That government may subsist well enough without the belief of a God and a state of rewards and punishments after this life.

2. That as for virtue and vice they are arbitrary things.

1. That Government may subsist well enough without the belief of a God or a state of rewards and punishments after this life. And this the Atheist does and must assert, otherwise he is by his own confession a declared enemy to Government and unfit to live in humane society.
† or

For answer to this, I will not deny but that tho the generality of men did not believe any superior Being nor any rewards and punishments after this life, yet notwithstanding this there might be some kind of Government kept up in the world. For supposing men to have reason, the necessities of humane nature and the mischiefs of confusion would probably compel them into some kind of order. But then I say withal, that if these principles were banished out of the world Government would be far more difficult than now it is, because it would want its firmest Basis and foundation; there would be infinitely more disorders in the world if men were restrained from injustice and violence only by humane laws, and not by principles of conscience and the dread of another world. Therefore Magistrates have always thought themselves concerned to cherish Religion, and to maintain in the minds of men the belief of a God and another life. Nay that common suggestion of atheistical persons, that Religion was at first a politick device and is still kept up in the world as a State engine to awe men into obedience, is a clear acknowledgment of the usefulness of it to the ends of Government, and does as fully contradict that pretence of theirs which I am now confuting as any thing that can be said.

2. That virtue and vice are arbitrary things founded only in the imaginations of men and in the constitutions and customs of the world, but not in the nature of the things themselves; and that that is virtue or vice, good or evil, which the Supreme Authority of a Nation declares to be so. And this is frequently and confidently asserted by the ingenious Author of a very bad Book, I mean the Leviathan.

Now the proper way of answering any thing that is confidently asserted is to shew the contrary, namely, That there are some things that have a natural evil and deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness and ingratitude, which are things not only condemned by the positive laws and constitutions of particular Nations and Governments but by the general verdict of humane nature: And that the virtues contrary to these have a natural goodness and comeliness in them, and are suitable to the common principles and sentiments of humanity.

And this will most evidently appear by putting this supposition. Suppose the reverse of all that which we now call virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud, and rapine, and perjury, and falseness to a man's word, and all manner of vice and wickedness were established by a Law. I ask now, if the case between virtue and vice were thus alter'd, would that which we now call vice in process of time gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious and contemptible to human nature? If it would not, then is there something in the nature of good and evil, of virtue and vice, which does not depend upon the pleasure of authority, nor is subject to any arbitrary Constitution. But that it would not be thus I am very certain, because no Government could subsist upon these terms. For the very enjoining of fraud and rapine and perjury and breach of trust doth apparently destroy the greatest end of Government, which is to preserve men in their rights against the encroachments of fraud and violence. And this end being destroyed human societies would presently fly in pieces and men would necessarily fall into a state of war. Which plainly shews that virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but that there is a natural and immutable and eternal reason for that which we call goodness and virtue, and against that which we call vice and wickedness.

Thus I have endeavoured to evidence and vindicate this truth. I shall only draw an Inference or two from this discourse, and so conclude.

1. If this discourse be true, then those who are in place of power and authority are peculiarly concerned to maintain the honour of Religion.
2. It concerns every one to live in the practice of it.

1. Magistrates are concerned to maintain the honour of Religion, which doth not only tend to every man's future happiness, but is the best instrument of Civil Government and of the temporal prosperity of a Nation. For the whole design of it is to procure the private and publick happiness of mankind, and to restrain men from all those things which would make them miserable and guilty to themselves, unpeaceable and troublesome to the world. Religion hath so great an influence upon the felicity of men that it ought to be upheld, and the veneration of it maintained, not only out of a just dread of the Divine vengeance in another world, but out of regard to the temporal peace and prosperity of men. It will requite all the kindness and honour we can do it by the advantages it will bring to Civil Government, and by the blessings it will draw down upon it. God hath promised that those that honour him, he will honour, and in the common course of his providence he usually makes this good, so that the civil Authority ought to be very tender of the honour of God and Religion, if for no other reason yet out of reason of State.

It were to be wish'd that all men were so piously disposed, that Religion by its own authority and the reasonable force of it might be sufficient to establish its Empire in the minds of men. But the corruptions of men will always make a strong opposition against it. And therefore at the first planting of the Christian Religion in the world God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power: But after it was planted this extraordinary power ceased, and God hath now left it to be maintained and supported by more ordinary and human ways, by the countenance of Authority, and assistance of Laws; which were never more necessary than in this degenerate age, which is prodigiously sunk into Atheism and prophaneness, and is running headlong into an humour of scoffing at God and Religion and every thing that is sacred. For some ages before the Reformation Atheism was confined to Italy, and had its chief residence at Rome. All the mention that is of it in the History of those times the Papists themselves give us in the lives of their own Popes and Cardinals, excepting two or three small Philosophers that were retainers to that Court. So that this Atheistical humour among Christians was the spawn of the gross superstitions and corrupt manners of the Romish Church and Court. And indeed nothing is more natural than for extremes in Religion to beget one another, like the vibrations of a pendulum which the more violently you swing it one way the farther it will return the other. But in the last age, Atheism travell'd over the Alps and infected France, and now of late it hath crossed the Seas and invaded our Nation and hath prevailed to amazement: For I do not think that there are any people in the World that are generally more indisposed to it and can worse brook it, seriousness and zeal in Religion being almost the natural temper of the English. So that nothing is to me matter of greater wonder, than that in a grave and sober Nation prophaneness should ever come to gain so much ground, and the best and the wisest Religion in the world to be made the the scorn of fools. For besides the prophane and atheistical discourses about God and Religion, and the bold and senseless abuses of this sacred Book the great instruments of our salvation, which are so frequent in the publick places of resort; I say, besides these (I speak it knowingly) a man can hardly pass the streets without having his ears grated and pierced with such horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses as are enough, if we were guilty of no other sin, to sink a Nation. And this not only from the Tribe that wear Liveries, but from those that go before them and should give better example. Is it not then high time that the Laws should provide by the most prudent and effectual means to curb these bold and insolent defiers of Heaven, who take a pride in being monsters, and boast themselves in the follies and deformities of human nature? The Heathens would never suffer their Gods to be reviled, which yet were no Gods. And shall it among the professors of the true Religion be allowed to any man to make a mock of Him that made Heaven and Earth, and to breathe out blasphemies against Him who gives us life, and breath and all things? I doubt not but hypocrisy is a great wickedness and very odious to God, but by no means of so pernicious example as open prophaneness. Hypocrisy is a more modest way of sinning, it shews some reverence to Religion, and does so far own the worth and excellency of it as to acknowledge that it deserves to be counterfeited: Whereas prophaneness declares openly against it, and endeavours to make a party to drive it out of the world.

2. It concerns every one to live in the practice of Religion and Virtue; Because the publick happiness and prosperity depends upon it. It is most apparent that of late years Religion is very sensibly declin'd among us. The manners of men have almost been universally corrupted by a Civil War. We should therefore all jointly endeavour to retrieve the ancient virtue of the Nation, and to bring into fashion again that solid and substantial, that plain and unaffected piety, (free from the extremes both of superstition and enthusiasm) which flourished in the age of our immediate Forefathers. Which did not consist in idle talk but in real effects, in a sincere love of God and of our neighbour, in a pious devotion and reverence towards the Divine Majesty, and in the virtuous actions of a good life; in the denial of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly and righteously and godly in this present world. This were the true way to reconcile God to us, to stop the course of his judgments, and to bring down the blessings of Heaven upon us.

God hath now been pleased to settle us again in peace both at home and abroad, and he hath put us once more into the hands of our own counsel. Life and Death, blessing and cursing, prosperity and destruction are before us. We may chuse our own fortune, and if we be not wanting to our selves we may under the influences of God's grace and assistance, which is never wanting to our sincere endeavours, become a happy and a prosperous People.

The good God make us all wise to know and to do the things that belong to the temporal peace and prosperity of the Nation, and to the eternal happiness and salvation of every one of our souls; which we humbly beg for the sake of Jesus Christ, to whom, &c.

S E R M O N IV.

The Advantages of Religion to particular Persons.

P S A L M XIX. 11.

And in keeping of them there is great reward.

IN this Psalms David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his Works, and the perfection of his Laws. From the greatness of his Works, verse 1. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work, &c. From the perfection of his Laws, ver. 7. The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul, &c. And among many other excellencies of the Divine Laws, he mentions in the last place the benefits and advantages which come from the observance of them, verse 11. and in keeping of them there is great reward.

I have already shown how much Religion tends to the publick welfare of mankind; to the support of Government, and to the peace and happiness of human Societies. My work at this time shall be to shew that Religion and obedience to the Laws of God do likewise conduce to the happiness of particular persons, both in respect of this world and the other. For tho' there be but little express mention made in the Old Testament of the immortality of the Soul and the rewards of another life, yet all Religion does suppose these principles, and is built upon them.

I. And First, I shall endeavour to shew how Religion conduceth to the happiness of this life; and that both in respect of the inward and outward man.

First, As to the mind; to be pious and religious brings a double advantage to the mind of man. 1. It tends to the improvement of our understandings. 2. It brings peace and pleasure to our minds.

1. It tends to the improvement of our understandings: I do not mean only that it instructs us in the knowledge of divine and spiritual things, and makes us to understand the great interest of our souls and the concerns of eternity better, but that in general it does raise and enlarge the minds of men and make them more capable of true knowledge. And in this sense I understand the following Texts; The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightning the eyes; The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, a good understanding have all they that keep his commandments; Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies, which plainly refers to political prudence; I have more understanding than all my teachers, for thy Testimonies are my meditation, I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts; Through thy precepts I get understanding; The entrance of thy word giveth light, it giveth understanding to the simple.

Psal. 198.
Psal. 111.
10.
Psal. 119.
98.
ver. 99.

ver. 104.
ver. 130.

Now Religion doth improve the understandings of men by subduing their lusts, and moderating their passions. The lusts and passions of men do fully and darken their minds, even by a natural influence. Intemperance and sensuality and fleshly lusts do debase mens minds, and clog their spirits, make make them gross and foul, listless and unactive; they sink us down into sense, and glew us to these low and inferior things like birdlime; they hamper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards; they indispose and unfit our minds for the most noble and intellectual considerations. So likewise the exorbitant passions of wrath and malice, envy and revenge, do darken and distort the understandings of men, do tincture the mind with false colours and fill it with prejudice and undue apprehensions of things.

There is no man that is intemperate, or lustful, or passionate, but besides the guilt he contracts which is continually fretting and disquieting his mind, besides the inconveniences he brings upon himself as to his health, he does likewise stain and obscure the brightness of his Soul and the clearness of his discerning faculty. Such persons have not that free use of their reason that they might have; their understandings are not bright enough, nor their spirits pure and fine enough for the exercise of the highest and noblest acts of reason. What clearness is to the eye, that purity is to our mind and understanding, and as the clearness of the bodily eye doth dispose it for a quicker sight of material objects, so doth the purity of our minds, that is, freedom from lust and passion, dispose us for the clearest and most perfect acts of reason and understanding.

Now Religion doth purify our minds and refine our spirits by quenching the fire of lust and suppressing the fumes and vapours of it, and by scattering the clouds and mists of passion. And the more any man's soul is cleansed from the filth and dregs of sensual lusts the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. The more any man conquers his passions, the more calm and sedate his spirit is, and the greater equality he maintains in his temper, his apprehensions of things will be the more clear and unprejudic'd, and his judgment more firm and steady. And this is the meaning of that saying of Solomon, He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding, but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Ira furor brevis est — Anger is a short fit of madness, and he that is passionate and furious deprives himself of his reason, spoils his understanding, and helps to make himself a fool: whereas he that conquers his passions and keeps them under, doth thereby preserve and improve his understanding. Freedom from irregular passions doth not only signify that a man is wise, but really contributes to the making of him such.

2. Religion tends to the ease and pleasure, the peace and tranquility of our minds; wherein happiness chiefly consists and which all the wisdom and Philosophy of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life. And that this is the natural fruit of a Religious and virtuous course of life, the Scripture declares to us in these Texts; Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart; Great peace have all they that love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them; Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace; The fruit of righteousness is peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever; The plain sense of which Texts is, that pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. When a man hath once engag'd himself in a Religious course, and is habituated to piety and holiness, all the exercises of Religion and devotion, all acts of goodness and virtue are delightful to him. To honour and worship God, to pray to him and to praise him, to study his will, to meditate upon him and to love him, all these bring great pleasure and peace along with them. What greater contentment and satisfaction can there be to the mind of man, when it is once purifi'd and refin'd from the dregs of sensual pleasures and delights, and rais'd to its true height and pitch, than to con-temple and admire the infinite excellencies and perfections of God, to adore his greatness and to love his goodness? How can the thoughts of God be troublesome to any one who lives soberly and righteously and godly in the world? No man that loves goodness and righteousness hath any reason to be afraid of God, or to be disquieted with the thoughts of him. There is nothing in God that is terrible to a good man, but all the apprehensions which we naturally have of him speak comfort and promise happiness to such a one. The consideration of his attributes is so far from being a trouble to him that it is his recreation and delight. It is for wicked men to dread God and to endeavour to banish the thoughts of him out of their minds; but a holy and virtuous man may have quiet and undisturb'd thoughts even of the justice of God, because the terror of it doth not concern him.

Now Religion doth contribute to the peace and quiet of our minds these two ways. First, By allaying those passions which are apt to ruffle and discompose our spirits. Malice and hatred, wrath and revenge are very fretting and vexatious and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy, but he that can moderate these affections will find a strange ease and pleasure in his own spirit. Secondly, by freeing us from the anxieties of guilt, and the fears of divine wrath and displeasure; than which nothing is more stinging and tormenting and renders the life of man more miserable and unquiet. And what a spring of peace and joy must it needs be to apprehend upon good grounds that God is reconcil'd to us and become our friend; that all our sins are perfectly forgiven and shall never more be remembred against us! What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious and devout soul from the remembrance of a holy and well-spent life and a conscience of its own innocence and integrity! And nothing but the practice of Religion and Virtue can give this ease and satisfaction to the mind of man. For there is a certain kind of temper and disposition which is necessary to the pleasure and quiet of our minds, and consequently to our happiness; and that is holiness and goodness, which as it is the perfection so is it likewise the happiness of the Divine nature: And on the contrary, the chief part of the misery of wicked men, and of those accursed spirits the Devils is this, that they are of a disposition contrary to God; they are envious and malicious and cruel, and of such a temper as is naturally a torment and disquiet to it self. And here the foundation of Hell is laid, in the evil disposition of mens minds; and till this be cur'd, which can only be done by Religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleas'd and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Because such a man hath that within him which torments him, and he cannot be at ease till that be remov'd. The mans spirit is out of order and off the hinges, and till that be put into its right frame he will be perpetually disquieted and can find no rest within himself. The Prophet very fitly describes to us the unquiet condition of wicked men, The wicked is like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace (saith my God) to the wicked. So long as sin and corruption abound in our hearts they will be restlessly working, like wine which will be in a perpetual motion and agitation till it have purg'd it self of its dregs and foulness.

Secondly, Religion does likewise tend to the happiness of the outward man. Now the blessings of this kind are such as either respect our health, or estate, or reputation, or relations; and in respect of all these Religion is highly advantageous to us.

1. As to our health, a Religious and virtuous life doth eminently conduce to that, and to long life as a consequent of it. And in this sense I understand these these following Texts; My Son forget not my Law, but let thy heart keep my Commandments; for length of days, and long life, shall they add to thee; and v. 7, and 8. Fear the Lord and depart from evil, it shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones; and v. 16. among the temporal advantages of wisdom or Religion this is mention'd as the first and principal, length of days is in her right hand; and v. 18. she is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her; and again, Whofo findeth me, findeth life, but he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul; (that is, is injurious to his own life) all they that hate me love death; all which is undoubtedly true in a spiritual sense, but is certainly meant by Solomon in the natural sense. And these promises, of the blessings of health and long life to good men are not only declaratory of the good pleasure and intention of God towards them, but likewise of the natural tendency of the thing. For Religion doth oblige men to the practice of those virtues which do in their own nature conduce to the preservation of our health, and the lengthening of our days; such as temperance and chastity and moderation of our passions. And the contrary vices to these do apparently tend to the impairing of mens health and the shortning of their days. How many have wasted and consum'd their bodies by lust, and brought grievous pains and mortal diseases upon themselves! See how the wise man describes the sad consequences of this sin, He goes as an Ox to the slaughter, till a dart strike through his Liver; as a Bird hasteneth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for his life; and v. 25, 26, 27. Let not thy heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths; for she hath cast down many wounded; yea many strong men have been slain by her; her house is the way to Hell (that is, to the grave) going down to the chambers of death. How many have been ruin'd by intemperance and excess, and most unnaturally have perverted those blessings which God hath given for the support of nature to the overthrow and destruction of it? How often hath mens malice and envy and discontent against others terminated in a cruel revenge upon themselves? How many by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and fir'd their spirits; and by stirring up their rage and choler against others have arm'd that fierce humour against themselves?

2. As to our estates, Religion is likewise a mighty advantage to men in that respect. Not only in regard of God's more especial providence and peculiar blessing which usually attends good men in their undertakings and crowns them with good success, but also from the nature of the thing. And this, I doubt not, is the meaning of those expressions of the Wise man concerning the temporal benefits and advantages of wisdom or Religion; In her left hand are riches and honour; They that love me shall inherit substance, and I will fill their treasures. And this Religion principally does, by charging men with truth and fidelity and justice in their dealings, which are a sure way of thriving and will hold out when all fraudulent arts and devices will fail. And this also Solomon observes to us; He that walketh uprightly walketh surely, but he that perverteth his way shall be known; his indirect dealing will be discover'd one time or other, and then loses his reputation, and his interest sinks. Falshood and deceit only serve a present turn, and the consequence of them is pernicious; but truth and fidelity are a lasting advantage; The righteous hath an everlasting foundation; The lip of truth is established for ever, but a lying tongue is but for a moment. And Religion does likewise engage men to diligence and industry in their Callings, and how much this conduces to the advancement of mens fortunes daily experience teaches, and the Wise man hath told us, The diligent hand makes rich; and again,

20. again, Seest thou a man diligent in business, he shall stand before Princes, he shall not stand before mean persons.

And where men by reason of the difficult circumstances of their condition cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet Religion makes a compensation for this by teaching men to be contented with that moderate and competent fortune which God hath given them. For the shortest way to be rich is not by enlarging our estates, but by contracting our desires. What Seneca says of Philosophy, is much more true of Religion, præstat opes sapientia, quas cuicumque fecit supervacuas dedit, it makes all those rich to whom it makes riches superfluous, and they are so to those who are taught by Religion to be contented with such a portion of them as God's Providence hath thought fit to allot to them.

3. As to our reputation. There is nothing gives a man a more firm and establish'd reputation among wise and serious persons (whose judgment is only valuable) than a prudent and substantial Piety. This doth many times command reverence and esteem from the worse sort of men, and such as are no great friends to Religion; and sometimes the force of truth will extort an acknowledgment of its excellency, even from its greatest enemies. I know very well that good men may, and often do, blemish the reputation of their piety by over-acting some things in Religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein Religion is not concerned, by an ungrateful austerity and sowness which Religion doth not require; by little affectations, and an imprudent ostentation of devotion; but a substantial and solid, a discreet and unaffected piety, which makes no great noise and show, but expresses it self in a constant and serious devotion, and is accompanied with the fruits of goodness and kindness and righteousness towards men, will not only give a man a credit and value among the sober and the virtuous, but even among the vicious and more degenerate sort of men. Upon this account it is that the Apostle adviseth Christians, if they would recommend themselves to the esteem of God and men, earnestly to mind the weighty and substantial parts of Religion; Let not then your good be evil spoken of; for the Kingdom of God is not meats and drinks, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost; for he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

It is true indeed, there are some persons of so profligate a temper, and of such an inveterate enmity to all goodness, as to scorn and reproach even Religion and Virtue it self. But the reproach of such persons does not really wound a man's reputation. For why should any man be troubled at the contumelies of those whose judgment deserves not to be valued, who despise goodness and good men out of malice and ignorance? If these reproaches which they cast upon them were the censures of wise and sober men, a man's reputation might be concern'd in them; but they are the rash words of inconsiderate and injudicious men, the extravagant speeches of those who are unexperienc'd in the things they speak against; and therefore no wise man will be troubled at them, or think either Religion or himself disparaged by them.

4. As to our Relations. Religion also conduceth to the happiness of these, as it derives a large and extensive blessing upon all that belongs to us; the goodness of God being so diffusive as to scatter his blessings round about the habitations of the just, and to shew mercy unto thousands of them that love him and keep his Commandments. So David tells us, Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, and delighteth greatly in his Commandments. His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed. Wealth and riches riches are in his house, and his righteousness endureth for ever. And so Solomon; A good man leaveth an inheritance to his Childrens Children; and again, In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his Children shall have a place of refuge. But the wicked derives a curse upon all that is related to him, he is said to trouble his own house; and again, The wicked are overthrown and are not, but the house of the righteous shall stand.

Prov. 13.
22.
Prov. 14.
26.
Prov. 11.
29.
Prov. 12.
7.

But setting aside the consideration of God's Providence, Religion doth likewise in its own nature tend to the welfare of those who are related to us; because it lays the strictest obligations upon men to take care of their Families and Relations, and to make the best provision both for their comfortable subsistence here in this world and their salvation in the next. And those who neglect these duties, the Scripture is so far from esteeming them Christians that it accounts them worse than Heathens and Infidels, He that provideth not for his own, especially those of his own house, is worse than an Infidel, and hath denied the faith. This I know is spoken in respect of temporal provision, but it holds à fortiori as to the care of their souls.

Besides, it is many times seen that the posterity of holy and good men, especially of such as have evidenc'd their piety towards God by bounty and charity to men, have met with unusual kindness and respect from others, and have by a strange and secret disposition of Divine providence been unexpectedly car'd and provided for; and that, as they have all the reason in the world to believe, upon the account and for the sake of the piety and charity of their Parents. This David tells us from his own particular observation; I have been young, and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread. And that by the righteous is here meant the good and merciful man appears from the description of him in the next words, He is ever merciful and lendeth, and his seed is blessed. And on the contrary, the posterity of the wicked do many times inherit the fruit of their fathers sins and vices; and that not only by a just judgment of God, but from the natural course and consequence of things. And in this sense that expression in Job is often verified, that God lays up the iniquity of wicked men for their Children. And doth not experience testify that the intemperate and unjust do many times transmit their bodily infirmities and diseases to their Children, and entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it? Thus you see how Religion in all respects conduces to the happiness of this life.

Pf. 37. 25.

Ver. 26.

Job 21. 19.

II. Religion and Virtue do likewise most certainly and directly tend to the eternal happiness and salvation of men in the other world. And this is incomparably the greatest advantage that redounds to men by being Religious, in comparison of which all temporal considerations are less than nothing and vanity. The worldly advantages that Religion brings to men in this present life are a sensible recommendation of Religion even to the lowest and meanest spirits: But to those who are rais'd above sense and aspire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their souls and the resurrection of their bodies; to those who are thoroughly convinc'd of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life and of all the concerns of it, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life; to these, I say, the consideration of a future happiness and of those unspeakable and everlasting rewards which shall then be given to holiness and virtue, is certainly the most powerful motive and the most likely to prevail upon them. For those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever cannot chuse but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration, nor can any thing thing that is conscious to its self of its own immortality be satisfied and contented with any thing less than the hopes of an endless felicity. And this hope Religion alone gives men, and the Christian Religion only can settle men in a firm and unhaken assurance of it. But because all men who have entertain'd any Religion have consented to these principles, of the immortality of the soul and the recompences of another world, and have always promis'd to themselves some rewards of piety and virtue after this life ; and because I did more particularly design from this Text to speak of the temporal benefits and advantages which redound to men from Religion, therefore I shall content my self to shew very briefly how a religious and virtuous life doth conduce to our future happiness. And that upon these two accounts ; from the promise of God, and from the nature of the thing.

1. From the promise of God. Godliness (saith the Apostle) hath the promise of the life that is to come. God hath all along in the Scripture suspend'd the promise of eternal life upon this condition. He hath peremptorily declar'd that without obedience and holiness of life no man shall ever see the Lord. And this very thing, that it is the constitution and appointment of God, might be argument enough to us (if there were no other) to convince us of the necessity of obeying the Laws of God in order to our happiness, and to persuade us thereunto. For eternal life is the gift of God, and he may do what he will with his own. He is master of his own favours and may dispense them upon what terms and conditions he pleases. But it is no hard condition that he hath impos'd upon us. If Religion brought no advantages to us in this world, yet the happiness of Heaven is so great as will abundantly recompence all our pains and endeavours ; there is temptation enough in the reward to engage any man in the work. Had God thought fit to have impos'd the most grievous and difficult things upon us, ought we not to have submitted to them and to have undertaken them with cheerfulness upon such great and glorious encouragements ? As Naaman's servants said to him in another case, Had he bid thee do some great thing wouldest thou not have done it ? So if God had said that without poverty and actual martyrdom no man shall see the Lord, would not any man that believes Heaven and hell and understands what these words signify and what it is to escape extreme and eternal misery, and to enjoy unspeakable and endless glory, have been willing to accept these conditions ? How much more, when he hath only said, Wash and be clean ; and Let every man that hath this hope in Him, purify himself as he is pure ? But God hath not dealt thus with us, nor is the imposing of this condition of eternal life a mere arbitrary constitution, therefore I shall endeavour to shew, 2dly, That a Religious and Holy life doth from the very nature and reason of the thing conduce to our future happiness, by way of necessary disposition and preparation of us for it. We cannot be otherwise happy but by our conformity to God, without this we cannot possibly love him nor find any pleasure or happiness in communion with him. For we cannot love a nature contrary to our own, nor delight to converse with it. Therefore Religion, in order to the fitting of us for the happiness of the next life, does design to mortify our lusts and passions, and to restrain us from the inordinate love of the gross and sensual delights of this world ; to call off our minds from these inferior things, and to raise them to higher and more spiritual objects, that we may be disposed for the happiness of the other world, and taught to relish the delights of it ; whereas should we set our hearts only upon these things, and be able to taste no pleasure in any thing but what is sensual and earthly, we must needs be extremely miserable ble when we come into the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain our selves withal, no employment suitable to our disposition, no pleasure that would agree with our deprav'd appetites and vicious inclinations. All that Heaven and happiness signifies is unsuitable to a wicked man, and therefore could be no felicity to him. But this I shall have occasion to speak more fully to in my last Discourse.

From all that hath been said, the reasonableness of Religion clearly appears which tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is upon all accounts calculated for our benefit. Let but all things be truly considered and cast up and it will be found that there is no advantage to any man from an irreligious and vicious course of Life. I challenge any one to instance in any real benefit that ever came to him this way. Let the sinner declare what he hath found by experience. Hath lewdness and intemperance been more for his health than if he had liv'd chastly and soberly? Hath falsehood and injustice prov'd at the long run more for the advancement and security of his estate, than truth and honesty would have done? Hath any vice that he hath lived in made him more true friends, and gain'd him a better reputation in the world than the practice of holiness and virtue would have done? Hath he found that peace and satisfaction of mind in an evil course, and that quiet enjoyment of himself, and comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a Religious and virtuous life would have given him? Nay on the contrary, have not some of his vices weaken'd his body and broken his Health, have not others dissipated his estate, and reduc'd him to want? What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish a man's reputation, and make him either hated or despis'd, and that not only by the wise and the virtuous but even by the generality of men? But was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience and the torment of a restless and uneasy mind, from the secret dread of Divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Let the sinner freely speak the very inward sense of his soul in this matter, and spare not; and I doubt not, if he will deal clearly and impartially, but that he will acknowledge all this to be true, and is able to confirm it from his own sad experience. For this is the natural fruit of sin and the present revenge which it takes upon sinners, besides that fearful punishment which shall be inflicted on them in another life.

What reason then can any man pretend against Religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit not only of human society but of every particular person, when there is no real interest of this world but may ordinarily be as effectually promoted and pursued to as great advantage, nay usually to far greater, by a man that lives soberly and righteously and godly in the world, than by any one that leads the contrary course of life? Let no man then say, with those prophane persons whom the Prophet speaks of, It is in vain to serve the Lord, and what profit is it that we have kept his Commandments? Mal. 3. 14 God has not been so hard a master to us that we have reason thus to complain of him. He hath given us no Laws but what are for our good, nay so gracious hath he been to us as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. The Devil was so far in the right, when he charg'd Job that he did not serve God for nought. 'Tis he himself that is the hard master and makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame and sorrow and misery. But God requires no man's service upon hard and unreasonable terms. The greatest part of our work is a present reward to it self, and for whatever else we do or suffer for him, he offers us abundant consideration. And if men did but truly and wisely love themselves they would upon this very ground if there were no other, become Religious. For when all is done there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Religion conduceth both to our present and future happiness, and when the Gospel chargeth us with piety towards God, and justice and charity towards men, and temperance and chastity in reference to our selves, the true interpretation of these Laws is this, God requires of men in order to their eternal happiness that they should do those things which tend to their temporal welfare, that is, in plainer words, he promises to make us happy for ever upon condition that we will but do that which is best for our selves in this World. To conclude, Religion is founded in the interest of men rightly apprehended. So that if the God of this world and the lusts of men did not blind their eyes, so as to render them unfit to discern their true interest, it would be impossible, so long as men love themselves and desire their own happiness to keep them from being religious; for they could not but conclude that to be their interest, and being so convinc'd they would resolve to pursue it and stick to it.

S E R M O N V.

The Excellency of the Christian Religion.

P H I L. III. 8.

Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord.

IN the beginning of this Chapter the Apostle makes a comparison between the Jewish and the Christian Religion, and shews the Christian to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow, v. 3. We are the Circumcision which worship God in the spirit. And then he enumerates the several privileges he was partaker of by virtue of his being born in the Jewish Church, v. 4, 5, 6. Though I might also have confidence in the flesh, if any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more; circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, &c. And yet he tells us he was contented to forgo all these advantages for Christ and the Christian Religion, v. 7. But what things were gain to me those I counted loss for Christ. And not only these, but if there were any thing else that men value in this world he was willing to hazard that also upon the same account, v. 8. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord.

In which words the Apostle declares the high esteem he had for the Christian Religion which he calls the the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord; the excellency whereof appear'd so great to him that he valued nothing in comparison of the advantages which he had by the knowledge of it.

My design at this time from this Text is to represent the excellency of this knowledge of the Christian Religion above that of any other Religion or Institution in the world. And here I shall not consider the external evidence which we have of the truth of Christianity and of the Divinity of its doctrine, in which respect it hath incomparably the advantage of any other Religion: but only the internal excellency of the Doctrine it self, abstracting from the Divine authority of it: And that in these four respects:

First, As it does more clearly reveal to us the nature of God, which is the great foundation of all Religion.

Secondly, As it gives us a more certain and perfect Law for the government of our lives.

Thirdly, As it propounds to us more powerful Arguments to persuade men to the obedience of this Law.

Fourthly, As it furnishes us with better motives and considerations to patience and contentedness under the evils and afflictions of this life. Now these are the greatest advantages that any Religion can have; To give men right apprehensions of God, a perfect rule of good life, and efficacious arguments to persuade men to be good, and patiently to bear the evils and sufferings of this life. And these shall be the heads of my following discourse.

I. The Christian Religion doth more clearly reveal to us the nature of God, than any Religion ever did. And to have right apprehensions of God is the great foundation of all Religion. For according as mens notions of God are such will their Religion be. If men have gross and false conceptions of God their Religion will be absurd and superstitious. If men fancy God to be an ill-natur'd Being arm'd with infinite power, one that delights in the misery and ruin of his Creatures and is ready to take all advantages against them, they may fear him but they will hate him; and they will be apt to be such towards one another as they fancy God to be towards them, for all Religion doth naturally incline men to imitate him whom they worship.

Now the Christian Religion gives us a more perfect, and a more lovely character of God than any Religion ever did. It represents him to us as a pure Spirit, (which the Heathens did not generally believe) and that he is to be worshipp'd in such a manner as is most suitable to his spiritual nature, (which not only the Heathens but even the Jews themselves were extremely mistaken about) God is a spirit (says our Saviour) and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth. It is true indeed God himself did command sacrifices to the Jews, and all those external and troublesome observances of which their Religion did consist: But then it is to be consider'd that he did not institute this way of Worship because it was most suitable to his own nature, but because of the carnality of their hearts and the proneness of that people to Idolatry. God did not prescribe these things because they were best, but because the temper of that People would then admit of nothing better. And this the Scripture gives us several intimations of, Thou desirest not sacrifice, thou delightest not in burnt-offerings, saith David: And elsewhere more expressly to this purpose; I spake not unto your Fathers (says God by the prophet Jeremiah) nor commanded them, in the day that I brought them forth out of the Land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings and sacrifices; but this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice: A sufficient intimation that God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon them as that which was most proper and agreeable to him, but that he condescended to it as most accommodate to their present state and inclination. And in this sense also some understand what God says to the same people by the Prophet Ezekiel, that he gave them statutes that were not good.

Jer. 22

Ezek. 20.

And as the Christian Religion gives a more perfect, so a more amiable and lovely character of the Divine nature. No Religion that ever was in the world does so fully represent the goodness of God and his tender love to mankind, which is the best and most powerful argument to the love of God. The Heathens did generally dread God, and looked upon him as fierce and cruel and revengeful; and therefore they endeavoured to appease him by the horrid and barbarous sacrifices of men, and of their own Children. And all along in the Old Testament God is generally represented as very strict and severe. But there are no where so plain and full declarations of his mercy and love to the sons of men as are made in the Gospel. In the Old Testament God is usually stiled the Lord of Hosts, the great and the terrible God: But in the New Testament he is represented to us by milder titles, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the father of mercies, and the God of all consolations; the God of all patience, the God of love and peace; nay he is said to be love it self and to dwell in love. And this difference between the stile of the Old and New Testament is so remarkable, that one of the greatest Seits in the Primitive Church (I mean that of the Gnosticks) did upon this very ground found their heresy of two Gods; the one evil and fierce and cruel, cruel, whom they call'd the God of the Old Testament; the other good and kind and merciful, whom they call'd the God of the New. So great a difference is there between the representations which are made of God in the Books of the Jewish and the Christian Religion, as to give at least some colour and pretence for an imagination of two Gods.

II. Christian Religion hath given us a more certain and perfect Law for the government of our lives. It hath made our duty more plain and certain in many instances, than either the Philosophy of the Heathen, or the precepts of Moses had done. It commands universal love and kindness and good will among men, a readiness to forgive our greatest enemies, to do good to them that hate us, to bless them that curse us, and to pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us. And does inculcate these precepts more vehemently, and forbid malice and hatred and revenge and contention more strictly and peremptorily than any Religion ever did before: as will appear to any one that does but attentively read our Saviour's Sermon upon the Mount.

And as Christianity hath given us a more certain so likewise a more perfect Law for the government of our lives. All the precepts of it are reasonable and wise, requiring such duties of us as are suitable to the light of nature and do approve themselves to the best reason of mankind, such as have their foundation in the nature of God, and are an imitation of the Divine excellencies, such as tend to the perfection of humane nature and to raise the minds of men to the highest pitch of goodness and virtue. The Laws of our Religion are such as are generally useful and beneficial to the world, as do tend to the outward peace and the health, to the inward comfort and contentment, and to the universal happiness of mankind. They command nothing that is unnecessary and burdensome, as were the numerous rites and ceremonies of the Jewish Religion, but what is reasonable, and useful, and substantial: And they omit nothing that may tend to the glory of God or the welfare of men, nor do they restrain us in any thing but what is contrary either to the regular inclinations of nature or to our reason and true interest. They forbid us nothing but what is base and unworthy, to serve our humours and passions, to reproach our understandings and to make ourselves fools and beasts; in a word, nothing but what tends either to our private harm and prejudice, or to publick disorder and confusion.

And that this is the tenor of the Laws of the Gospel will appear to any one from our Saviour's Sermons and Discourses: particularly that upon the Mount; wherein he charges his Disciples and followers to be humble, and meek, and righteous, and merciful, and pure, and peaceable, and patient under sufferings and persecutions, and good and kind to all even to those that are evil and injurious to us, and to endeavour to excel in all goodness and virtue. This will appear likewise from the Writings of the holy Apostles; I will instance but in some few passages in them. St. Paul represents to us the design of the Christian doctrine in a very few words, but of admirable sense and weight; The grace of God that bringeth salvation Tit. 2. 11; bath appear'd to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts 12. we should live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present World. The same Apostle makes this the main and fundamental condition of the Covenant of the Gospel on our part, Let every one that names the name of Christ 2 Tim. 2. 19. depart from iniquity. St. James describes the Christian doctrine (which he calls the wisdom that is from above) by these characters, It is first pure, then James 3. peaceable, gentle and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without 17. partiality,

2 Pct. 1 partiality, and without hypocrisy. St. Peter calls the Gospel, the knowledge of 3' 4' him that hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby (saith he) are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these you might be partakers of
 V. 5, 6, 7 a divine nature having escap'd the corruption that is in the world through lust; and upon this consideration he exhorts them to give all diligence to add to their faith the several virtues of a good life, without which he tells them they are barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. I Phil. 4, 8. will conclude with that full and comprehensive passage of St. Paul to the Philippians, Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, (ἡσυχία, whatsoever things are of venerable esteem) whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure (or chaste) whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things.

But the perfection and the reasonableness of the Laws of Christianity will most plainly appear by taking a brief survey of them. And they may all be referr'd to these two general heads. They are either such as tend to the perfection of humane nature and to make men singly and personally good, or such as tend to the peace and happiness of humane Society.

First, Such as tend to the perfection of humane nature and to make men good singly and personally consider'd. And the precepts of this kind may be distributed likewise into two sorts, such as enjoin Piety towards God, or such as require the good order and government of our selves in respect of the enjoyments and pleasures of this life.

1. Such as enjoin Piety towards God. All the duties of Christian Religion which respect God are no other but what natural light prompts men to, excepting the two Sacraments (which are of great use and significance in the Christian Religion) and praying to God in the name and by the mediation of Jesus Christ. For the sum of natural Religion as it refers more immediately to God is this, That we should inwardly reverence and love God, and that we should express our inward reverence and love to him by external worship and adoration, and by our readiness to receive and obey all the revelations of his will: And that we should testify our dependance upon him, and our confidence of his goodness, by constant prayers and supplications to him for mercy and help for our selves and others; And that we should acknowledge our obligations to him for the many favours and benefits which every day and every minute we receive from him, by continual praises and thanksgivings: And that on the contrary we should not entertain any unworthy thoughts of God, nor give that honour and reverence which is due to him, to any other; that we should not worship him in any manner that is either unsuitable to the excellency and perfection of his nature, or contrary to his reveal'd will; that we should carefully avoid the prophane and irreverent use of his Name by cursing, or customary swearing, and take heed of the neglect or contempt of his Worship or any thing belonging to it. This is the sum of the first part of natural Religion, and these are the general heads of those duties which every man's reason tells him he owes to God: And these are the very things which the Christian Religion does expressly require of us, as might be evidenc'd from particular Texts in the New Testament. So that there is nothing in this part of Christianity but what agrees well with the reason of mankind.

2. Such precepts as require the good order and government of our selves in respect of the pleasures and enjoyments of this life. Christian Religion commands whatsoever things are pure and chaste, all manner of sobriety and temperance and moderation in reference to our appetites and passions; and and forbids whatever is unnatural, and unreasonable, and unhealthful in the use of pleasures and of any of God's creatures. Hither belong all those Texts which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh but after the spirit, that we should cleanse our selves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, that we should be holy in all manner of conversation. St. John distributes the lusts and irregular appetites of men into three kinds, voluptuousness, covetousness, and ambition, answerable to the three sorts of tempting objects that are in the world, pleasures, riches and honours. All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, &c. And Christianity doth strictly forbid all these, Take heed and beware of Covetousness (says our Saviour, and he adds this excellent reason) for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. It forbids pride and ambition and vain-glory and commands humility and modesty and condescension to others; Learn of me (says our Saviour) for I am meek and lowly in spirit; Mind not high things, but condescend to them that are of low degree; Let nothing be done through vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. And in reference to sensual pleasures it forbids all irregularity and excess, and strictly enjoins purity and temperance; cautioning us to take heed lest we be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness; charging us to walk decently as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness; to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul. Now all these precepts do not only tend to beget in us such virtues and dispositions as are reasonable and suitable to our nature and every way for our temporal convenience and advantage, but such as do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. For covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth; intemperance and lust cloud a man's understanding, and indispose it for the contemplation of things spiritual and divine. Thus you see how the Precepts of Christianity do tend to the perfection of humane nature, considering men singly and personally.

Secondly, The other sort of Precepts are such as tend to the peace and happiness of humane Society. And the reason of mankind can devise nothing more proper to this end than the Laws of Christianity are. For they command all those virtues which are apt to sweeten the spirits and allay the passions and animosities of men one towards another. They require us to love our neighbour (that is, every man in the world, even our greatest enemies) as our selves. And for this end among others was the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the Feast of love instituted: that by commemorating the love of our dying Saviour, who laid down his life for his enemies, we might be put in mind how we ought to love one another.

And by this Law of loving all men even our enemies, Christian Religion discovers it self not only to be the most innocent and harmless, but the most generous and best-natur'd Institution that ever was in the world. For in pursuance of this general precept it commands us, to do good to all men; if it be possible, and as much as in us lies to live peaceably with all men; to be kind one to another, ready to gratify and oblige men; to be tender-hearted and compassionate towards those that are in want or misery, and ready to supply and relieve them; to sympathize with one another in our joys and sorrows, to mourn with those that mourn, and to rejoice with them that rejoice; to bear one another's burdens, and to forbear one another in love; to be easily reconcil'd to them that have offended us, and to be ready to forgive from our hearts the greatest injuries that can be done to us, and that without bounds and limits even to seventy seven times; as our Saviour expresseth it.

The Laws of Christianity do likewise secure both the private interests of men and the publick peace, by confirming and enforcing all the dictates of nature concerning Justice and Equity, and our doing to others as we would have them to do to us; and by commanding obedience to humane Laws which decide mens rights and submission to government under pain of Damnation: And by forbidding whatever is contrary to these, violence and oppression, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery, breach of trusts, oaths or promises, undutifulness to superiors, sedition and rebellion against Magistracy and Authority: And if there be any thing else that is apt to disturb the peace of the world and to alienate the affections of men from one another, as fowrenness of disposition, and rudeness of behaviour, censoriousness and sinister interpretation of things, all cross and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another: All these are either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction forbidden in the New Testament.

And now what could any Religion do more towards the reforming of the dispositions and manners of men? What Laws can be devis'd more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, to procure the tranquility of mens minds and the peace and happiness of the world, than these precepts of Christianity are? Several of which (as those of loving our enemies, of not revenging injuries, of rendering good for evil, &c.) tho they have been esteem'd reasonable by some of the wisest among the Heathen, yet by reason of the degeneracy of the world, and of the obscurity and uncertainty of humane reason, they never obtain'd to have the estimation and force of natural Laws. So that we owe to Christianity the discovery of the most certain and perfect Rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal.

III. Christian Religion propounds the most powerful arguments to persuade men to the obedience of these Laws. The Gospel offers such considerations to us, as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind of man, our hopes and our fears. To encourage our hopes it gives us the highest assurance of the greatest and most lasting happiness, in case of obedience; and to awaken our fear it threatens sinners with the most dreadful and durable torments, in case of disobedience. To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, it promiseth eternal life: But unto them that obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness, it threatens indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish. And this is that which makes the doctrine of the Gospel so powerful an instrument for the reforming of the world, that it proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no Religion ever did; and to make the consideration of them more effectual, it gives us far greater assurance of the reality, and certainty of these things than ever the world had before. This account the Apostle gives us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men, and for this reason he calls it the power of God unto salvation, because therein the wrath of God is reveal'd from Heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Before the revelation of the Gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the Heathen world was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life, and had generally but very uncertain and obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins, and are the most prevalent arguments guments to a good life. So St. Paul tells the Athenians the most knowing among the Heathen, The times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead hath given the world that full assurance of another life after this and of a future Judgment which it never had before, for He whom God rais'd from the dead did declare and testify that it was he who was ordain'd of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. And the firm belief of a future Judgment, which shall render to every man according to his deeds, if it be well consider'd, is to a reasonable nature the most forcible motive of all other to a good life; because it is taken from the consideration of the greatest and most lasting happiness and misery that human nature is capable of. So that the Laws of Christianity have the firmest sanction of any Laws in the world to secure the obedience and observance of them: For what can restrain men from sin if the terrors of the Lord and the evident danger of eternal destruction will not? What encouragement can be given to goodness beyond the hopes of Heaven and the assurance of an endless felicity?

IV. The Christian Religion furnisheth us with the best motives and considerations to patience and contentedness under the evils and afflictions of this life. This was one great design of Philosophy, to support men under the evils and calamities which this life is incident to, and to fortify their spirits against sufferings. And to this end the wisest among the Heathens rack'd their wits and cast about every way, they advanc'd all sorts of principles and manag'd every little argument and consideration to the utmost advantage. And yet after all these attempts they have not been able to give any considerable comfort and ease to the mind of man under any of the great evils and pressures of this life. The bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself upon it, and the covering narrower than that a man can wrap himself in it. All the wise sayings and advices which Philosophers could muster up to this purpose have prov'd ineffectual to the common people and the generality of mankind, and have help'd only to support some few stout and obstinate minds, which without the assistance of Philosophy would have held up pretty well of themselves.

Some of the Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain as to call every thing into question, and to doubt whether there were any such thing as sense or pain. And yet for all that when any great evil has been upon them, they would certainly sigh and groan as pitifully and cry out as loud as other men.

Others have sought to ease themselves of all the evil of affliction by disputing subtilly against it, and pertinaciously maintaining that afflictions are no real evils but only in opinion and imagination, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. But he must be a very wise man that can forbear being troubled at things that are very troublesome. And yet thus Possidonius (as Tully tells us) distinguish'd, he could not deny pain to be very troublesome, but for all that he was resolv'd never to acknowledge it to be an evil. But sure it is a very slender comfort that relies upon this nice distinction between things being troublesome and being evils, when all the evil of affliction lies in the trouble it creates to us. But when the best that can be is made of this argument, it is good for nothing but to be thrown away as a stupid Paradox and against the common sense of mankind.

Others have endeavoured to delude their trouble by a graver way of reasoning, that these things are fatal and necessary and therefore no body ought to be troubled at them, it being in vain to be troubled at that which we cannot help. And yet perhaps it might as reasonably be said on the other side that this very consideration, that a thing cannot be help'd, is one of the justest causes of trouble to a wise man. For it were some kind of comfort if these evils were to be avoided, because then we might be careful to prevent them another time ; but if they be necessary then my trouble is as fatal as the calamity that occasions it ; and though I know it in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot help yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that ministred this comfort to him of the fatality of things, Hoc ipsum est (says he) quod me male habet, this was so far from giving any ease to his mind that this was the very thing that troubled him.

Others have try'd to divert and entertain the troubles of other men by pretty and plausible sayings, such as this, That if evils are long they are but light, if sharp but short, and a hundred such like. Now I am apt to imagine that it is but a very small comfort that a plain and ordinary man, lying under a sharp fit of the Stone for a week together, receives from this fine Sentence. For what pleasure soever men that are at ease and leisure may take in being the Authors of witty sayings, I doubt it is but poor consolation that a man under great and stinging afflictions finds from them.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience it self. To bear evils as quietly as we can is the way to make them lighter and easier. But to toss and fling and to be restless is good for nothing but to fret and enrage our pain, to gall our sores and to make the burthen that is upon us sit more uneasy. But this is properly no consideration of comfort, but an art of managing our selves under afflictions so as not to make them more grievous than indeed they are.

But now the arguments which Christianity propounds to us are such as are a just and reasonable encouragement to men to bear sufferings patiently. Our Religion sets before us not the example of a stupid Stoick, who had by obstinate principles harden'd himself against all sense of pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example that lies level to all mankind, of a man like our selves, that had a tender sense of the least suffering and yet patiently endur'd the greatest ; of Jesus the Author and finisher of our Faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

God thought it expedient that the first Christians should by great hardships and persecutions be train'd up for glory, and to animate and encourage them hereto the Captain of our salvation was crown'd by sufferings. Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience against the common and ordinary calamities of this life, especially if we consider his example with this advantage, that tho his sufferings were wholly undeserv'd, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently.

But the main consideration of all is, the glory which shall follow our sufferings as the reward of them, if they be for God and his cause ; and if upon any other innocent account, as reward of our patience. Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of Glory. Christian Religion hath secur'd us that we shall be infinite gainers by our sufferings. And who would not be content to suffer upon terms of such advantage ? to pass through many tribulations into the Kingdom of God, and to endure a short affliction for an endless happiness ? The assurance urance of a future blessedness is a cordial that will revive our spirits more in the day of adversity, than all the wise sayings and considerations of Philosophy.

These are the arguments which Christianity propounds to us, and they are firm and found at the bottom; they have strength and substance in them, and are apt to work upon humane nature, and the most ordinary understanding is capable of the force of them. In the strength and virtue of this great example, and in contemplation of this glorious reward, with what resolution and cheerfulness, with what courage and patience did vast numbers of all sorts of people in the first Ages of Christianity, not only men but women, not only those of greater spirit and more generous education but those of the poorest and lowest condition, not only the learned and the wise but the ignorant and illiterate, encounter all the rage and malice of the world and embrace torments and death? Had the precepts and counsels of Philosophy ever any such effect upon the minds of men? I will conclude this with a passage in the life of Lipsius, who was a great studier and admirer of the Stoical Philosophy. When he lay upon his death-bed, and one of his friends who came to visit him told him that he needed not use arguments to persuade him to patience under his pains, the Philosophy which he had studied so much would furnish him with motives enough to that purpose, he answers him with this ejaculation, Domine Jesu, da mihi patientiam Christianam, Lord Jesus, give me Christian patience. No patience like to that which the considerations of Christianity are apt to work in us.

And now I have as briefly and plainly as I could endeavour'd to represent to you the excellency of the Christian Religion, both in respect of the clear discoveries which it makes to us of the nature of God which is the great foundation of all Religion, and likewise in respect of the perfection of its Laws and the power of its arguments to persuade men both to obey and suffer the will of God. By which you may see, what the proper tendency and design of this Religion is, and what the Laws and precepts of it would make men if they would truly observe them and live according to them, substantially Religious towards God, chaste and temperate, patient and contented in reference to themselves and the dispensations of God's providence towards them, just and honest, kind and peaceable and good-natur'd towards all men. In a word, the Gospel describes God to us in all respects such a one as we would wish him to be, gives us such Laws as every man that understands himself would chuse to live by, propounds such arguments to persuade to the obedience of these Laws as no man that wisely loves himself and hath any tenderness for his own interest and happiness either in this world or the other, can refuse to be mov'd withal.

And now methinks I may with some confidence challenge any Religion in the world to shew such a compleat body and collection of holy and reasonable Laws establish'd upon such promises and threatnings as the Gospel contains. And if any man can produce a Religion that can reasonably pretend to an equal or a greater confirmation than the Gospel hath, a Religion the precepts and promises and threatnings whereof are calculated to make men wiser and better, more temperate and more chaste, more meek and more patient, more kind and more just, than the laws and motives of Christianity are apt to make men; if any man can produce such a Religion, I am ready to be of it. Let but any man shew me any Book in the world, the doctrines whereof have the seal of such miracles as the doctrine of the Scriptures hath; a Book which contains the heads of our duty so perfectly, and without the mixture of any thing that is unreasonable, or vicious, or any ways unworthy of God; that commands us every thing in reason necessary to be done, and abridgeth us of no lawful pleasure without offering us abundant recompence for our present self-denial; a Book the rules whereof, if they were practis'd, would make men more pious and devout, more holy and sober, more just and fair in their dealings, better friends and better neighbours, better magistrates and better subjects and better in all relations, and which does offer to the understanding of men more powerful arguments to persuade them to be all this; let any man, I say, shew me such a Book, and I will lay aside the Scripture and preach out of that.

And do we not all profess to be of this excellent Religion, and to study and believe this holy Book of the Scriptures? But alas! who will believe that we do so, that shall look upon the actions and consider the lives of the greatest part of Christians? How grossly and openly do many of us contradict the plain precepts of the Gospel, by our ungodliness and worldly lusts, by living intemperately or unjustly, or prophanely in this present world? As if the grace of God which brings salvation, had never appear'd to us, as if we had never heard of Heaven or Hell, or believ'd not one word that the Scripture says concerning them, as if we were in no expectation of the blessed hope and the glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, whom God hath appointed to judge the world in righteousness, and who will bestow mighty rewards upon those who faithfully serve him, but will come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Let us not then deceive our selves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. For tho we know these things never so well, yet we are not happy unless we do them: Nay, we are but the more miserable for knowing them if we do them not; Therefore it concerns every one of us to consider seriously what we believe; and whether our belief of the Christian Religion have its due effect upon our lives. If not, all the Precepts and Promises and Threatnings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the Articles of our Faith will be so many Articles of Accusation, and the great weight of our charge will be this that we did not obey that Gospel which we profess'd to believe, that we made confession of the Christian Faith but liv'd like Heathens. Not to believe the Christian Religion, after so great evidence and confirmation as God hath given to it, is very unreasonable; but to believe it to be true, and yet to live as if it were false, is the greatest repugnancy and contradiction that can be. He that does not believe Christianity, either hath, or thinks he hath some reason for withholding his assent from it. But he that believes it, and yet lives contrary to it, knows that he hath no reason for what he does, and is convinc'd that he ought to do otherwise: And he is a miserable man indeed that does those things, for the doing of which he continually stands condemn'd by his own mind. And accordingly God will deal more severely with such persons. He will pardon a thousand defects in our understandings, if they do not proceed from gross carelessness and neglect of our selves; but the faults of our wills have no excuse, because we knew to do better and were convinc'd in our minds that we ought not to have done so.

Dost thou believe that the wrath of God is reveal'd from Heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, and dost thou still allow thy self in ungodliness and worldly lusts? Art thou convinc'd that without holiness no man shall see the Lord, and dost thou still persist in a wicked course? Art thou fully

fully persuaded that no whoremonger, nor adulterer, nor covetous, nor unrighteous person shall have any inheritance in the Kingdom of God and Christ, and dost thou for all that continue to practise these vices? What canst thou say (man) why it should not be to thee according to thy faith? If it so fall out that thou art miserable and undone for ever, thou hast no reason to be surpriz'd as if some unexpected thing had happen'd to thee. It is but with thee just as thou believed'st it would be when thou didst these things. For how could'st thou expect that God should accept of thy good belief when thou didst so notoriously contradict it by a bad life? How couldst thou look for other but that God should condemn thee for the doing of those things for which thine own Conscience did condemn thee all the while thou wast doing of them; When we come into the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly when we knew to have done better, and chose to make our selves miserable when we understood the way to have been happy. To conclude, we Christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable Religion in the world; but then we are in the worst condition of all mankind, if the best Religion in the world do not make us good.

The Precepts of Christianity not grievous,

1 JOHN V. 3.

---And his commandments are not grievous.

ONE of the great prejudices which men have entertain'd against the Christian Religion is this, that it lays upon men heavy burthens and grievous to be born, that the Laws of it are very strict and severe, difficult to be kept and yet dangerous to be broken; That it requires us to govern and keep under our passions, and to contradict many times our strongest inclinations and desires, to cut off our right hand and to pluck out our right eye, to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to do good to them that hate us, and to pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us; to forgive the greatest injuries that are done to us, and to make reparation for the least that we do to others; to be contented with our condition, patient under sufferings, and ready to sacrifice our dearest interests in this world, and even our very lives, in the cause of God and Religion: All these seem to be hard sayings and grievous commandments.

For the removal of this prejudice I have chosen these words of the Apostle, which expressly tells us the contrary, that the commandments of God are not grievous.

And though this be a great truth if it be impartially consider'd, yet it is also a great paradox to men of corrupt minds and vicious practices, who are prejudic'd against Religion and the holy Laws of God by their interest and their lusts. This seems a strange proposition to those who look upon Religion at a distance and never try'd the experiment of a holy life, who measure the Laws of God not by the intrinsical goodness and equity of them, but by the reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them.

Upon this account it will be requisite to take some pains to satisfy the reason of men concerning this truth, and if it be possible to make it so evident that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be asham'd to deny it. And methinks I have this peculiar advantage in the argument I have now undertaken, that every reasonable man cannot chuse but wish me success in this attempt, because I undertake the proof of that which it is every man's interest that it should be true: And if I can make it out, this pretence against Religion will not only be baffled but we shall gain a new and forcible argument to persuade men over to it.

Now the easiness or difficulty of the observation of any Laws or commands depends chiefly upon these three things.

First, Upon the Nature of the Laws themselves and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given.

Secondly,

Secondly, Upon the ability or weakness of those on whom these Laws are impos'd for the keeping of them. For easiness and difficulty are relative terms and refer to some power, and a thing may be difficult to a weak man which yet may be easy to the same person when assisted with a greater strength.

Thirdly, Upon the encouragement that is given to the observation of them. For the proposal of great rewards does very much qualify and allay the difficulty of any undertaking.

Now if I can make these three things evident ; 1. That the Laws of God are reasonable, that is, suitable to our nature and advantageous to our interest. 2. That we are not destitute of sufficient power and ability for the performance of them. And 3. That we have the greatest encouragements to this purpose : Then have we all imaginable reason to assent to the truth of this Proposition that the commandments of God are not grievous.

I. The Laws of God are reasonable, that is, suitable to our nature and advantageous to our interest. 'Tis true God hath a sovereign right over us as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right he might without injustice have impos'd difficult tasks upon us and have requir'd hard things at our hands. But in making Laws for us he hath not made use of this right. He hath commanded us nothing in the Gospel that is either unsuitable to our reason, or prejudicial to our interest ; nay, nothing that is severe and against the grain of our nature, but when either the apparent necessity of our interest does require it, or an extraordinary reward is promis'd to our obedience. He hath shew'd thee, O man, what is good ; and what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God ? This is the sum of the natural Law, that we should behave our selves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men ; and that in order to the fitting of us for the better discharge of these duties, we should govern our selves in the use of sensual delights with temperance and moderation. And if we go over the Laws of Christianity, we shall find that, excepting a very few particulars, they enjoyn the very same things ; only they have made our duty more clear and certain. But this I have had occasion to make out largely in the foregoing discourse, and therefore I shall say the less to it now.

As to the several parts of God's worship and service, prayer and thanksgiving, hearing and reading the Word of God, and receiving of the Sacrament ; these are all no less for our own comfort and advantage than for the honour of God and Religion. And there is nothing of difficulty or trouble in the external performance of them, but what hypocrisy can make tolerable to it self : And certainly they must be not only much more easy, but even delightful, when they are directed by our understandings, and accompanied with our hearts and affections.

As for those Laws of Religion which concern our duty to our selves, as temperance and chastity ; or to others, as the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as our selves, and of doing to others as we would have them to do to us : There is nothing in all these Laws but what is most reasonable and fit to be done by us, nothing but what if we were to consult our own interest and happiness, and did rightly understand our selves, we would chuse for our selves ; nothing but what is easy to be understood, and as easy to be practis'd by an honest and a willing mind.

Now the practice of all these is suitable to our nature, and agreeable to the frame of our understandings; proper to our condition and circumstances in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. And no man's reason did ever dictate to him the contrary of any of these; that it is fit for a Creature not to love God, to be undutiful to his great Sovereign, and ungrateful to his best benefactor; that it is reasonable for a man to debauch himself by intemperance and brutish sensuality; to hate, defraud and oppress other men. Our very natural reason, if we will but listen to the dictates of it, is an enemy to all these sins, and a law against all these vices.

And as the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it likewise for the interest of mankind; both of private persons, and of publick Societies, as I have already shown. Some virtues plainly tend to the preservation of our health, others to the improvement and security of our estates, all to the peace and quiet of our minds; and which is somewhat more strange, to the advancement of our esteem and reputation; for though the world be generally bad, and men are apt to approve nothing so much as what they do themselves; yet, I know not how it comes to pass, men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others even when they do not practise it themselves.

And as for those precepts of Christianity which seem to be most harsh and difficult at first appearance, (as repentance and restitution, mortification of our lusts and passions, humility, patience and contentedness with our condition, and resignation of our selves to the will of God; forgiving and loving our enemies, and self-denial for the cause of God and Religion) if we look well into them and consider thoroughly the nature and tendency of them, even these will appear to be both reasonable in themselves, and upon one account or other really for our advantage.

What more reasonable than repentance, than that a man when he hath done amiss and contrary to his duty should be heartily sorry for it, and resolve to do so no more? And how grievous soever it be, it is necessary, being the only way to pardon and peace. And in case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution as far as we are able, according to the nature of the injury. For without this our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault as much as we can, or at least to hinder the injurious consequences of it from proceeding any farther: Nor can any man be judg'd to be truly sorry for his sin that retains the profit and advantages of it to himself. Besides, that till reparation be made to the utmost of our power we can have no peace in our own consciences, nor any well-grounded hopes of forgiveness from God.

Mortification of our lusts and passions, though, like repentance, it have something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable, or really to our prejudice. If we give way to our Passions, we do but gratify our selves for the present in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace and tranquility in our minds. If we govern our selves in the use of sensual delights by the Laws of God and reason, we shall find our selves more at ease than if we should let loose the reins to our appetites and lusts. For the more we gratify our lusts the more craving they will be, and the more impatient of denial. Crescit indulgens sibi dirus hydrops, every lust is a kind of hydro-pick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. So that by retrenching our inordinate desires we do not rob our selves of any true pleasure, but only prevent the pain and trouble of farther dissatisfaction.

Humility,

Humility, though it may seem to expose a man to some contempt, yet it is truly the readiest way to honour : as on the contrary, pride is a most improper and absurd means for the accomplishing of the end it aims at. All other vices do in some measure attain their end ; covetousness does usually raise an estate, and ambitious endeavours do often advance men to high places ; but pride and insolence and contempt of others do infallibly defeat their own design. They aim at respect and esteem but never attain it, for all mankind do naturally hate and slight a proud man.

What more reasonable than patience and contentedness, and that we should in all things reign up our selves to the will of God, who loves us as well as we do our selves, and knows what is good for us better than we do our selves ? this certainly is the best way to prevent anxiety and perplexity of mind, and to make the worst condition as tolerable as it can be, and much more easy than it would be otherwise.

As for that peculiar Law of Christianity which forbids revenge, and commands us to forgive injuries and to love our enemies, no man can think it grievous who considers the pleasure and sweetness of love and the glorious victory of overcoming evil with good, and then compares these with the restless torment and perpetual tumults of a malicious and revengeful spirit.

And lastly, Self-denial for the cause of God and Religion ; this is neither unreasonable nor to our disadvantage. If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world ; especially if we consider withal, how disproportionably great the reward of our sufferings shall be in another world. Besides that the interest of Religion is of so great concernment to the happiness of mankind, that every man is bound for that reason to assert the truth of it with the hazard of any thing that is most valuable to him in this world.

II. We are not destitute of sufficient power and strength for the performing of God's commands. Had God given us Laws but no power to keep them, his commandments would then indeed have been grievous. 'Tis true we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness, but that grace which the Gospel offers to us for our assistance is sufficient for us. And this seems to be the particular reason why the Apostle says here in the Text that his commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance proportionable to the difficulty of his commands, and the necessity of our condition : for it follows immediately after the Text, For whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world. Therefore the commandments of God are not grievous, because every Child of God, that is, every Christian is endued with a power whereby he is enabled to resist and conquer the temptations of the world. The same Apostle elsewhere encourages Christians upon the same consideration, greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. Though we be encompass'd with many and potent enemies who make it their business to tempt and to deter us from our duty, yet our case is not hard so long as we have a great strength on our side: And this the Apostle tells us is the case of every Christian, greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world. Are there ^{1 Jo 4.4} legions of Devils who are continually designing and working our ruin ? there are also myriads of good Angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. For I doubt not, but as those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on and to push them forward in an evil course ; so on the other hand, those who apply themselves seriously to the business of Religion, and yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the good spirit of God more ready and active to encourage them than the Devil can be to pull them back ; unless we think that God hath given a greater power and a larger commission to the Devil to do men mischief, than to his holy Spirits and his holy Angels for our assistance and encouragement. But then we are to understand that this assistance is only offer'd to men , and not forc'd upon them whether they will or no. For if we beg God's grace but neglect to make use of it, if we implore his assistance for the mortifying of our lusts but will not contribute our own endeavours, God will withdraw his grace and take away his holy Spirit from us. Nay, if after we have begun well we do notoriously slacken our endeavours, we forfeit the Divine assistance : If when by God's grace we have in a good measure conquer'd the first difficulties of Religion, and gain'd some habitual strength against sin ; if after this we grow careless and remiss, and neglect our guard, and lay our selves open to temptations, God's Spirit will not always strive with us : Notwithstanding all the promises of the Gospel, and the mighty assistances there offer'd to us, if we love any lust, and will with Sampson lay our head in Dalilah's lap, we shall be insensibly robb'd of our strength, and become like other men.

III. We have the greatest encouragement to the observance of God's commands. Two things make any course of life easy ; present pleasure , and the assurance of a future reward. Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort and satisfaction of having done our duty ; and for the rest, it offers us the best security that Heaven can give. Now these two must needs make our duty very easy ; a considerable reward in hand, and not only the hopes but the assurance of a far greater recompence hereafter.

1. Present peace and satisfaction of mind , and unexpressible joy and pleasure flowing from the testimony of a good conscience. This is present payment , besides that it is the earnest of a future and greater happiness. And this does naturally spring up in the mind of a good man ; great peace have they that love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them. All Acts of piety and virtue are not only delightful for the present, but they leave peace and contentment behind them : a peace that no outward violence can interrupt or take from us. The pleasures of a holy life have moreover this peculiar advantage of all worldly joys, that we shall never be weary of them ; we cannot be cloy'd by the frequent repetition of these pleasures , nor by the long enjoyment of them. I know that some vices pretend to bring great pleasure along with them, and that the delights of a sensual and voluptuous life make a glorious show and are attended with much pomp and noise, like the sports of children and fools which are loud and clamorous ; or, as Solomon elegantly compares them, like the crackling of thorns under a pot, which makes a little noise and a sudden blaze that is presently over. But the serious and the manly pleasures, the solid and substantial joys, are only to be found in the ways of Religion and virtue. The most sensual man that ever was in the world never felt his heart touch'd with so delicious and lasting a pleasure as that is which springs from a clear conscience, and a mind fully satisfied with his own actions.

2. But the great encouragement of all is the assurance of a future reward. The firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world, and to animate us with courage and resolution against the greatest difficulties. So the Apostle reasons ; His commandments are not grievous ; for whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith. The belief of a future happiness and glory was that which made the primitive Christians so victorious over the world, and gave them the courage to resist all the pleasures and terrors of ~~Sense~~. It cannot be deny'd, but that a religious course of life is liable to be incumbered with many difficulties which are naturally grievous to flesh and blood. But a Christian is able to comfort himself under all these with the thoughts of his end, which is everlasting life. He considers the goodness of God which he believes would not deny him the free enjoyment of the things of this world, were it not that he hath such joys and pleasures in store for him as will abundantly recompence his present self-denial and sufferings.
 † what:-

Let us now put both these together, the pleasures of Religion and the rewards of it, and they cannot but appear to be a mighty encouragement. With what pleasure does a man that lives a holy and a virtuous life despite the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persist resolutely in his Course? And how is such a man confirm'd in his purpose and animated in his holy resolution, when he finds that God and his own conscience do applaud his choice; when all along in the course of Religion and a virtuous life, in his conflicts with sin; and resistance of temptations, he hath for his present reward the two great pleasures of innocence and of victory, and for his future encouragement the joyful hopes of a Crown and a Kingdom? A recompence so great, as is sufficient to make a lame man walk, enough to make any one willing to offer violence to his strongest passions and inclinations. A man would be content to strive with himself and to conflict with great difficulties, in hopes of a mighty reward. What poor man would not cheerfully carry a great burthen of gold and silver, that were assur'd to have the greatest share of it for his pains, and thereby to be made a man for ever? Whatever difficulties Religion is attended withal they are all sweeten'd and made easy by the proposal of a great and eternal reward.

But are there no difficulties then in Religion? Is every thing so plain and easy? Are all the ways of virtue so smooth and even as we have here represented them? Hath not our Saviour told us, that strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it? Does not the Apostle say, that through much tribulation we must enter into the Kingdom of God? And, that all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution? And does not the Scripture every where speak of striving and wrestling, and running, and fighting; of labouring, and watching, and giving all diligence? And is there nothing grievous in all this?

This is a very material objection; and therefore I shall be the more careful to give a satisfactory answer to it. And that I may do it the more distinctly be pleas'd to consider these six things. 1. That the suffering of persecution for Religion is an extraordinary case, which did chiefly concern the first Ages of Christianity. 2. That this discourse concerning the easiness of God's commands does all along suppose and acknowledge the difficulties of the entrance upon a Religious course. 3. Nor is there any reason it should exclude our after-care and diligence. 4. All the difficulties of Religion are very much mitigated and allayed by hope and by love. 5. There is incomparably more difficulty and trouble in the ways of sin and vice than in the ways of Religion and Virtue. 6. If we do but put virtue and vice, a religious and a wicked course of life in equal circumstances; if we will but suppose a man as much accusom'd and inur'd to the one as he has been to the other, then I shall not doubt to pronounce that the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of Religion.

I. The suffering of persecution for Religion is an extraordinary case, and did chiefly concern the first Ages of Christianity. And therefore the general sayings of our Saviour and his Apostles concerning the persecuted state of Christians are to be limited, as doubtless they were intended, principally to those first times, and by no means to be equally extended to all Ages of the Church. At first indeed whoever embrac'd the profession of Christianity did thereby expose themselves to all the sufferings which the power and malice of the world could afflict them withal: But since the Kingdoms of the Earth became the Kingdoms of the Lord and of his Christ, and the Governours of the world began to be Patrons of the Church, 'tis so far from being universally true that every Christian hath suffer'd the violence of persecution, that it hath been a rare case and happen'd only in some few ages, and to some persons. So that this is accidental to a state of Religion, and therefore ought not to be reckon'd among the ordinary difficulties of it. And when it happens God gives extraordinary supports, and promises mighty rewards to make it tolerable.

II. This discourse concerning the easiness of God's commands does all along suppose and acknowledge the difficulties of the first entrance upon a religious course, except only in those persons who have had the happiness to be train'd up to Religion by the easy and insensible degrees of a pious and virtuous education. These indeed are freed from a great deal of pains and difficulty which others who are reclaim'd from a bad course of life must expect to undergo. They are in a great measure excused from the pangs of the new birth, from the pains of a sudden and violent change, from the terrors of an affrighted mind, and from the deep and piercing sorrows of a more solemn repentance. Whereas those who have lived wickedly before must look to meet with a great deal more trouble, because they are put upon changing the whole course of their life at once, and must contend with inveterate habits, and offer no small violence to themselves in plucking up those vices which have been rooted in them by long custom and continuance. This indeed is grievous and must needs be sensibly painful, like the plucking out of a right eye, or the cutting off a right hand: For in this case a man must strive against the very bent and inclination of his strongest appetites, against the tyranny of custom and the mighty power of a second nature. But this is no just reflection upon religion, because this does not proceed from the nature of God's laws, but from an accidental indisposition in our selves, which Religion is apt to remove: And if we will but allow some time of trouble and uneasiness for the cure, when that is once wrought the commands of God will be more easy and delightful to us than ever our sins and lusts were.

III. Nor does this exclude our after-care and diligence. For when the Apostle says that the commandments of God are not grievous, he does by no means intend to insinuate that they are calculated for slothful and lazy persons, that they are so easy as to require no industry and endeavour on our part; he only aims to prevent a tacit objection which lies at the bottom of many mens hearts, as if Religion were a most grievous and intollerable burthen, and there were more trouble and less pleasure in it than in any other action of humane life. This he utterly denies, but does not hereby intend to exclude such diligence and industry as men use about other matters. And if I should tell you, that the business of Religion does not require a very vigorous prosecution and great earnestness of endeavour, I shall speak quite besides the holy Scriptures, which so frequently command seeking and striving and labouring, besides many other such phrases that import port diligence and earnestness. And indeed it were unfit that so excellent and glorious a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down like fruit upon a full-laden bough to be pluck'd by every idle and wanton hand; that Heaven should be prostituted to the lazy desires and faint wishes, to the cheap and ordinary endeavours of slothful men. God will not so much disparage eternal life and happiness, as to bestow it upon those who have conceived so low an opinion of it as not to think it worth the labouring for. And surely this is sufficient to recommend Religion to any considerate man, if the advantages of it be much greater than of any worldly design that we can propound to our selves, and the difficulties of it not greater. If the same seriousness and industry of endeavour, which men commonly use to raise a fortune and advance themselves in the world, will serve to make a man a good man and to bring him to Heaven, what reason hath any man to complain of the hard terms of Religion? And I think I may truly say that usually less than this does it. For God considers our condition in this world and the pressing necessities of this life, that we are flesh as well as spirit, and that we have great need of these things, and therefore he allows us to be very sedulous and industrious about them. However this I am sure of, that if men would be as serious to save their immortal souls as they are to support these dying bodies; if they would but provide for eternity with the same solicitude and real care as they do for this life; if they would but seek Heaven with the same ardor of affection, and vigour of prosecution as they seek earthly things; if they would but love God as much as many men do the World, and mind godliness as much as men usually do gain; if they would but go to Church with as good a will as men ordinarily do to their Markets and Fairs, and be in as good earnest at their devotions as men commonly are in driving a bargain; if they would but endure some troubles and inconveniences in the ways of Religion with the same patience and constancy as they can do storms, and foul ways and mischances, when they are travelling about their worldly occasions; If they would but avoid bad company as men use to do cheaters, and reject the temptations of the Devil and the world as they would do the kind words and insinuations of a man whom they verily believe to have a design to over-reach them; I am confident that such a one could not fail of Heaven, and would be much surer of it upon these terms, than any man that doth all the other things could be of getting an estate, or of attaining any thing in this world.

And cannot every man do thus much? All that I have said signifies no more but that men should use their sincere endeavours: And this surely every man can do. For to use our sincere endeavours is nothing else but to do as much as we can, and it is nonsense for any man to deny that he can do as much as he can. And if we would do thus much we are sure of God's grace and assistance, which is never wanting to the sincere endeavours of men. But men expect that Religion should cost them no pains, that happiness should drop into their laps without any design and endeavour on their part, and that after they have done what they please while they live God should snatch them up to Heaven when they dye. But though the commandments of God be not grievous, yet it is fit to let men know that they are not thus easy.

— IV. All the difficulties of Religion are very much allay'd and sweeten'd by hope and by love. By the hopes of a mighty reward; so great as is enough to raise us above our selves, and to make us break through all difficulties and discouragements. And by the love of God, who hath taken all imaginable ways to endear himself to us. He gave us our beings, and when we were fallen from that happiness to which at first we were design'd, he was pleas'd to restore us to a new capacity of it by sending his only Son into the world to dye for us. So that if we have any sense of kindness we cannot but love Him who hath done so much to oblige us, and if we love him entirely nothing that he commands will be grievous to us; nay, so far from that, that the greatest pleasure we are capable of will be to please him. For nothing is difficult to love. It will make a man deny himself and cross his own inclinations to pleasure them whom he loves. It is a passion of a strange power where it reigns, and will cause a man to submit to those things with delight which in other circumstances would seem grievous to him. Jacob serv'd for Rachel seven years, and after that seven years more; and they seem'd unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her. Did but the love of God rule in our hearts, and had we as real an affection for him as some men have for their friends, there are no such difficulties in Religion but what love would conquer, and the severest parts of it would become easy when they were once undertaken by a willing mind.

V. There is incomparably more trouble in the ways of sin and vice than in those of Religion and Virtue. Every notorious sin is naturally attended with some inconvenience of harm, or danger, or disgrace; which the sinner seldom considers till the sin be committed, and then he is in a labyrinth, and in seeking the way out of a present inconvenience he entangles himself in more. He is glad to make use of indirect arts, and laborious crafts, to avoid the consequence of his faults; and many times is fain to cover one sin with another, and the more he strives to disentangle himself the more is he snar'd in the work of his own hands. Into what perplexities did David's sin bring him? such as by all his power and arts he could not free himself from: He was glad to commit a greater crime to avoid the shame of a less, and could find no other way to conceal his adultery but by plunging himself into the guilt of murder. And thus it is proportionably in all other vices. The ways of sin are crooked paths, full of windings and turnings; but the way of holiness and virtue is a high-way, and lies so plain before us that way-faring men, though fools, shall not err therein. There needs no skill to keep a man's self true and honest; if we will but resolve to deal justly and to speak the truth to our neighbour, nothing in the whole world is easier: For there is nothing of artifice and reach required to enable a man to speak as he thinks, and to do to others as he would be dealt withall himself.

And as the ways of sin are full of intricacy and perplexities, so likewise of trouble and disquiet. There is no man that wilfully commits any sin but his conscience smites him for it, and his guilty mind is frequently gall'd with the remembrance of it, but the reflection upon honest and virtuous actions hath nothing of regret and disquiet in it. No man's conscience ever troubled him for not being dishonest, no man's reason ever challeng'd him for not being drunk, no man ever broke his sleep or was haunted with fears of divine vengeance because he was conscious to himself that he had liv'd soberly, and righteously, and godly in the world. But with the ungodly it is not so. There is no man that is knowingly wicked but he is guilty to himself, and there is no man that carries guilt about him but he hath received a sting into his Soul which makes him restless, so that he can never have any perfect ease and pleasure in his mind.

I might have descended to particular Instances, and have shewn how much more troublesome the practice of every sin and vice is than the exercise of the contrary grace and virtue; but that would be too large a Subject to be brought within the limits of a single discourse.

VI. Let

VI. Let but virtue and vice, a religious and wicked course of life be put in equal circumstances, do but suppose a man to be as much accusom'd and inur'd to the one as he has been to the other, and then I doubt not but the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of Reli-

And if we do not put the case thus we make an unequal comparison. For there is no man but when he first begins a wicked course feels a great deal of regret in his mind, the terrors of his conscience and the fears of damnation are very troublesome to him. It is possible that by degrees a man may harden his conscience, and by a long custom of sinning may in a great measure wear off that tender sense of good and evil which makes sin so uneasy: But then if in the practice of a holy life a man may by the same degrees arrive to far greater peace and tranquility of mind than ever any wicked man found in a sinful course, if by custom virtue will come to be more pleasant than ever vice was, then the advantage is plainly on the side of Religion. And this is truly the case. It is troublesome at first for a man to begin any new course, and to do contrary to what he hath been accusom'd to; but let a man but habituate himself to a religious and virtuous life, and the trouble will go off by degrees, and unspeakable pleasure succeed in the room of it. It is an excellent rule which Pythagoras gave to his Scholars, optimum vitæ genus eligito, nam consuetudo faciet jucundissimum; pitch upon the best course of life, resolve always to do that which is most reasonable and virtuous, and custom will soon render it the most easy. There is nothing of difficulty in a good life but what may be conquer'd by custom as well as the difficulties of any other course, and when a man is once us'd to it the pleasure of it will be greater than of any other course.

Let no man then decline or forsake Religion for the pretended difficulties of it, and lay aside all cares of God's commandments upon this suggestion that they are impossible to be kept. For you see they are not only possible but easy. And those who upon pretence of the trouble and difficulties of Religion abandon themselves to a wicked course of life may easily be convinc'd that they take more pains to make themselves miserable than would serve to bring them to happiness. There is no man that is a servant of sin, and a slave to any base lust, but might if he pleas'd get to Heaven with less trouble than he goes to hell.

So that upon consideration of the whole matter, there is no reason why any man should be deterr'd from a holy and virtuous life for fear of the labour and pains of it. Because every one that is wicked takes more pains in another way, and is more industrious only to a worse purpose. Now he that can travel in deep and foul ways ought not to say that he cannot walk in fair. He that ventures to run upon a precipice when every step he takes is with danger of his life and his soul, ought not to pretend any thing against the plain and safe paths of Religion, which will entertain us with pleasure all along in the way, and crown us with happiness at the end.

S E R M O N VII.

Of the Obligation of Christians to a Holy Life.

2 T I M. II. 19.

Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity.

THE whole verse runs thus: Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

In which words the Apostle declares to us the terms of the covenant between God and man. For the word θεμελίον which is here translated foundation, according to the usual signification of it, is likewise (as learned men have observ'd) sometimes used for an instrument of contract whereby two parties do oblige themselves mutually to each other. And this notion of the word agrees very well with what follows concerning the seal affix'd to it, which is very suitable to a Covenant but not at all to a foundation. 'Tis true indeed, as the learned Grotius hath observ'd there used anciently to be inscriptions on foundation-stones, and the word σφραγίς which we render seal may likewise signify an inscription; and then the sense will be very current thus, The foundation of God standeth sure, having this inscription. But it is to be considered, that though σφραγίς may signify an inscription, yet it is only an inscription upon a seal, which hath no relation to a foundation, but is very proper to a covenant or mutual obligation. And accordingly the seal affix'd to this instrument, or covenant between God and man is in allusion to the custom of those countries said to have an inscription on both sides agreeable to the condition of the persons contracting. On God's part there is this impress or inscription, The Lord knoweth them that are his, that is, God will own and reward those that are faithful to him: And on our part, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity.

Let every one that nameth the name of Christ, that is, that calls himself a Christian. For to name the name of any one or to have his name call'd upon by us does according to the use of this Phrase among the Hebrews, signify nothing else but to be denominated from him. Thus 'tis frequently used in the Old Testament, and sometimes in the New, Do they not blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called? that is, the name or title of Christians; and that expression, if ye be reproached for the name of Christ, is at the sixteenth verse varied, if any man suffer as a Christian. So that to name the name of Christ is to call our selves Christians.

Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. The word ἀδικία is often taken strictly for injustice or unrighteousness, but sometimes used more largely for sin and wickedness in the general. And so it seems to be used here in the Text, because there is no reason from the context to restrain it to any particular kind of sin or vice, and because Christianity lays an equal obligation upon men to abstain from all sin. Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity, that is, every Christian obligeth himself by his profession to renounce all sin and to live a holy life.

In speaking to this argument I shall do these two things.

1. Shew what obligation the profession of Christianity lays upon men to live holy lives.
2. Endeavour to perswade those who call themselves Christians to answer this obligation.

I. What obligation the profession of Christianity lays upon men to live holy lives. He that calls himself a Christian professeth to entertain the Doctrine of Christ, to live in the imitation of his holy example, and to have solemnly engaged himself to all this. I shall speak briefly to these, and then come to that which I principally intend, to perswade men to live accordingly.

1. He that professeth himself a Christian professeth to entertain the doctrine of Christ, to believe the whole Gospel, to assent to all the articles of the Christian faith, to all the precepts and promises and threatnings of the Gospel. Now the great design, the proper intention of this doctrine is to take men off from sin, and to direct and encourage them to a holy life. It teacheth us what we are to believe concerning God and Christ, not with any design to entertain our minds with the bare speculation of those truths but to better our lives. For every article of our faith is a proper argument against sin, and a powerful motive to obedience. The whole history of Christ's appearance in the world, all the discourses and actions of his life, and the sufferings of his death do all tend to this; the ultimate issue of all is the destroying of sin; so St. John tells us, for this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil.^{1 John 3. 8.} But this is most expressly and fully declar'd to us, Tit. 2. 11, 12, 13, 14. The Grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

The precepts of the Gospel do strictly command holiness, and that universal; the purity of our souls, and the chastity of our bodies; to cleanse our selves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit; to abstain from all kind of evil; to be holy in all manner of conversation.^{2 Cor. 7. 1. 1 Thes. 5. 22. 1 Pet. 1. 15.} They require us to endeavour after the highest degrees of holiness that are attainable by us in this imperfect state, to be holy as he that hath called us is holy; to be perfect as our father which is in heaven is perfect.^{Mat. 5. 48.}

And all the promises of the Gospel are so many encouragements to obedience and a holy life; having therefore these promises, let us cleanse our selves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God.^{2 Cor. 7. 1.} We are told by St. Peter that these exceeding great and precious promises are given to us that by these we might be partakers of a Divine nature,^{2 Pet. 1. 4.} having escaped the pollution that is in the world through lust; and that we might give all diligence to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance and patience and brotherly kindness and charity.

And the threatnings of the Gospel are so many powerful arguments against sin.

Therefore the Apostle calls the Gospel the power of God unto salvation, because therein the wrath of God is reveal'd from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. So that if we call our selves Christians we profess to embrace the holy doctrine of the Christian Religion which is perfectly opposite to all impiety and wickedness of life. We profess to be governed by those laws which do strictly enjoin holiness and virtue. We profess to be persuaded that all the promises and threatnings of the Gospel are true, which offer such great and glorious rewards to obedience, and threaten transgression and disobedience with such dreadful punishments. And if so, we are obliged both by our reason and our interest to live accordingly.

2. He that professeth himself a Christian professeth to live in the imitation of Christ's example and to follow his steps who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. The Son of God came into the World not only by his Doctrine to instruct us in the way to happiness and by his death to make expiation of Sin, but by his life to be an example to us of holiness and virtue. Therefore in Scripture we find several Titles given him which import his exemplariness, as of a Prince and a Captain, a Master and a Guide. Now if he be our pattern we should endeavour to be like him, to have the same mind that was in Christ Jesus; to walk in love as he also hath loved us and given himself for us. We should aspire after the highest degree of holiness, make it our constant and sincere endeavour to please God and do his will and to fulfil all righteousness as he did. Does any man profess himself a Christian and yet abandons himself to intemperance and filthy lusts? is this like our Saviour? Are we cruel and unmerciful? is this like the High-Priest of our profession? Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? is this to be like-minded with Christ who was meek and lowly in Spirit, who prayed for his enemies and offer'd up his blood to God on the behalf of them that shed it? If we call our selves Christians we profess to have the life of Christ continually before us, and to be always correcting and reforming our lives by that pattern.

Rom. 6. 2.
3, 4, 5, 6.

3. He that calls himself a Christian hath solemnly engaged himself to renounce all sin and to live a holy life. By Baptism we have solemnly taken upon us the profession of Christianity, and engaged our selves to renounce the Devil and all his works, and obediently to keep God's commandments. Anciently those who were baptised put off their garments, which signified the putting off the body of sin; and were immers'd and buried in the water, to represent their death of sin; and then did rise up again out of the water, to signify their entrance upon a new life. And to these customs the Apostle alludes when he says, How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein; Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life: For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroy'd, that henceforth we should not serve sin. So that by Baptism we profess to be entered into a new state, and to be endued with a new nature; to have put off the old man with his deeds; to have quitted our former conversation, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and to be renewed in the spirit of our minds, and to have put on the new man which after God is created in

in righteousness and true holiness. And therefore Baptism is called the putting on of Christ; As many of you as have been baptiz'd into Christ, have put on Christ. Now if we profess to have put on Christ we must quit and renounce our lusts, because these are inconsistent, as appears by the opposition which the Apostle makes between them; Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof. Gal. 3. 27.
Rom. 13. 14.

And as we did solemnly covenant with God to this purpose in Baptism, so we do solemnly renew this obligation so often as we receive the blessed Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood. Therefore the cup in the Sacrament is called the new Covenant in his Blood, that is, this represents the shedding of Christ's blood, by which rite the covenant between God and man is ratified. And as by this God doth confirm his promises to us, so we do oblige our selves to be faithful and obedient to him, and if we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, that is, after we are become Christians, we account the blood of the Covenant a common thing, that is, we make nothing of the solemnest rite that ever was used in the world for confirmation of any covenant, the shedding of the blood of the Son of God. And that this was always understood to be the meaning of this holy Sacrament, to renew our Covenant with God, and solemnly to confirm our resolutions of a holy life is very plain from that account which Pliny * gives us of the worship of the Christians in a Letter to Trajan the Emperor; in which he tells him, that they assembled early in the morning before day, to sing a Hymn to Christ as God; and then (saith he) they do sacramento se obstringere, bind themselves by a sacrament or oath not to rob or steal or commit adultery, not to break their word or falsify their trust, and after they have eaten together they depart home. Which is plainly an account of the Christians celebrating of the holy Sacrament, which it seems was then look'd upon as an oath whereby Christians did solemnly covenant and engage themselves against all wickedness and vice: * Plin. Epist. I. 10. Epist. 97.

Thus you see what obligation the profession of Christianity lays upon us to holiness of life. From all which it is evident that the Gospel requires something on our part. For the Covenant between God and us is a mutual engagement, and as there are blessings promised on his part so there are conditions to be performed on ours. And if we live wicked and unholy lives, if we neglect our duty towards God we have no title at all to the blessings of this Covenant. The contrary doctrine to this hath been greedily entertained to the vast prejudice of Christianity, as if in this new Covenant of the Gospel God took all upon himself, and required nothing, or as good as nothing, of us, that it would be a disparagement to the freedom of God's grace to think he expects any thing from us. That the Gospel is all promises, and our part is only to believe and embrace them, that is, to be confident that God will perform them if we can but think so, though we do nothing else; which is an easy condition to fools but the hardest in the world to a wise man, who if his salvation depended upon it could never persuade himself to believe that the holy God without any respect at all to his repentance and amendment would bestow upon him forgiveness of sins and eternal life, only because he was confident that God would do so. As if any man could think that it were a thing so highly acceptable to God that men should believe of him that he loves to dispense his grace and mercy upon the most unfit and unreasonable terms. A Covenant does necessarily imply a mutual obligation, and the Scripture plainly tells us what are the terms and conditions of this covenant both on God's part and ours, namely, that he will be our God and we shall be his people. But he hath no where said that though we be not his people yet he will be our God. The seal of this Covenant hath two inscriptions upon it; one on God's part, that he will know them that are his; and another on our part, that we shall depart from iniquity. But if we will not submit to this condition God will not know us, Mat. 7. 23. but will bid us depart from him. So our Saviour tells us, I will say unto them depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I know you not. If we deal falsely in covenant with God and break loose from all our engagements to him, we release God from all the promises that he hath made to us. If we neglect to perform those conditions upon which he hath suspended the performance of his promises, we discharge the obligation on God's part, and he remains faithful though he deny us that happiness which he promised under those conditions which we have neglected.

II. I come now to the second thing propounded, and that is to persuade those who profess Christianity to answer those obligations to a holy life which their Religion lays upon them. We all call our selves Christians, and would be very much offended at any man that should deny us this title. But let us not cheat our selves with an empty and insignificant name, but if we will call our selves Christians let us fill up this great title, and make good our profession by a suitable life and practice. And to persuade us hereto, I will urge these three considerations.

1. The indecency of the contrary.
2. The great scandal of it to our blessed Saviour and his holy Religion: And
3. The infinite danger of it to our own souls.

1. Consider how unbecoming it is for a man to live unsuitably to his profession. If we call our selves Christians we profess to entertain the doctrine of the Gospel, to be taught and instructed by the best master, to be the disciples of the highest and most perfect institution that ever was in the world, to have embraced a Religion which contains the most exact rules for the conduct and government of our lives, which lays down the plainest precepts, sets before us the best patterns and examples of a holy life, and offers us the greatest assistances and encouragements to this purpose. We profess to be furnished with the best arguments to excite us to holiness and virtue, to be awed with the greatest fears and animated with the best hopes of any men in the world.

Now whoever makes such a profession as this obligeth himself to live answerably, to do nothing that shall grossly contradict it. Nothing is more absurd than for a man to act contrary to his profession, to pretend to great matters and perform nothing of what he pretends to. Wise men will not be caught with pretences nor be imposed upon with an empty profession, but they will enquire into our lives and actions, and by these they will make a judgment of us. They cannot see into our hearts nor pry into our understandings to discover what it is that we inwardly believe, they cannot discern those secret and supernatural principles that we pretend to be acted by: But this they can do, they can examine our actions and behold our good or bad works, and try whether our lives be indeed answerable to our profession and do really excel the lives of other men who do not pretend to such great things. There are a great many sagacious persons who will easily find us out, will look under our mask, and see through all our fine pretensions, and will quickly discern the absurdity of telling the world that we believe one thing when we do the contrary. If

If we profess to believe the Christian Religion, we expose our selves to the scorn and contempt of every discerning man if we do not live up to it. With what face can any man continue in the practice of any known sin that professeth to believe the holy doctrine of the Gospel which forbids all sin under the highest and severest penalties? If we did but believe the history of the Gospel as we do any ordinary credible story, and did we but regard the laws of Christianity as we do the laws of the Land; were we but persuaded, that fraud and oppression, lying and perjury, intemperance and uncleanness, covetousness and pride, malice and revenge, the neglect of God and Religion will bring men to hell as certainly as treason and felony will bring a man under the sentence of the Law: Had we but the same awe and regard for the threatnings and promises of the Gospel that we have for the frowns and smiles of those who are in power and authority, even this would be effectual to keep us from sin. And if the Gospel have not this effect upon us it is an argument that we do not believe it.

'Tis to no purpose to go about to persuade men that we do heartily enter into the doctrine of Christ, that doctrine which hath all the characters of piety and justice, of holiness and virtue upon it; which obligeth men to whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are chaste, whatsoever things are lovely, and of good report, if we have no regard to these things in our lives. He that would know what a man believes, let him attend rather to what he does than to what he talks. He that leads a wicked life makes a more credible and effectual profession of infidelity than he who in words only denies the Gospel. It is the hardest thing in the world to imagine that that man believes Christianity who by ungodliness and worldly lusts does deny and renounce it. If we profess our selves Christians, it may justly be expected from us that we should evidence this by our actions, that we should live at another rate than the Heathens did; that we who worship a holy and just God should not allow our selves the liberty to sin as those did who worshipped such Gods as were examples of sin and patrons of their vices. Thou who professest thy self a Christian may'st not walk in the lusts of the flesh and of uncleanness as those were who worshipped a lustful Jupiter and a wanton Venus. Thou may'st not be intemperate as those were who worshipped a drunken Bacchus. Thou may'st not be cruel and unmerciful as those were who worshipped a fierce Saturn: Nor may'st thou steal as those did who worshipped a thievish Mercury. Thou must remember that thou art a Christian, and when thou art ready to debase thy self to any vile lust consider what title thou bearest, by what name thou art called, whose disciple thou art; and then say to thy self, shall I allow my self in any impiety or wickedness of life who pretend to be instructed by that grace of God which teaches men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts? Shall I cherish any sinful passion who pretend to have mortified all these and to have put off the old man with his deeds?

It is not being gilded over with the external profession of Christianity that will avail us, our Religion must be a vital principle inwardly to change and transform us. What the Apostle says concerning Circumcision we may apply to them that are baptized and make an outward profession of Christianity; Baptism verily profiteth if we obey the Gospel, but if we walk contrary to the precepts of it our Baptism is no Rom Baptism, and our Christianity is Heathenism. If by our lives and acti- 25.

ons we do contradict that Religion which we profess, we do by this very thing prove our selves to be counterfeits and hypocrites; and that we have only taken up our Religion for a fashion, and received it according to custom; we were born in a Country where it is revered, and therefore we are of it. And the reason why we are Christians rather than Jews, or Turks, or Heathens, is because Christian Religion had the fortune to come first in our way and to bespeak us at our entrance into the world.

Are we not ashamed to take up a profession upon such slight grounds, and to wear about us such an empty title? It should make our blood to rise in our faces to consider what a distance there is between our Religion and our lives. I remember Tully upbraids the Philosophers very smartly for living unsuitably to their Doctrines. A Philosopher (saith he) is unpardonable if he miscarry in his life, quod in officio cujus magister esse vult, labitur; artemque vitæ professus, delinquit in vita; because he is faulty in that wherein he pretends to be a master, and whilst he professeth an Art of living better than other men he miscarries in this life. With how much greater reason may we challenge Christians for the miscarriages of their lives, which are so directly contrary to their profession? It may justly be expected that so perfect an Institution as the Gospel is, which the Son of God came from Heaven on purpose to propagate in the world, should make men more strictly holy and virtuous, and set the professors of it at a greater distance from all impurity and vice than ever any institution in the world did. If a man profess any other Art or Calling it is expected that he should be skill'd in it, and excel in it, who do not pretend to it. 'Tis the greatest disparagement to a Physician that can be, to say of him, that he is in other respects an excellent man only he hath no great skill in diseases, and the methods of cure, because this is his Profession: He might be pardon'd for other defects, but the proper skill of his Art may justly be expected from him. So for a Christian; to say of him, the worst thing in him is his life; he is very orthodox in his opinions, but he's an ill-natur'd man, one of very violent passions, he will be very frequently drunk, he makes no conscience of his dealings, he is very uncharitable to all that differ from him: This man is faulty in his profession, he is defective in that which should be his excellency; he may have orthodox opinions in Religion, but when all is done there is no such error and herefy, nothing so fundamentally opposite to Religion as a wicked life. A Christian does not pretend to have a better wit or a more piercing understanding than a Turk or Heathen, but he professeth to live better than they, to be more chaste and more temperate, more just and more charitable, more meek and gentle, more loving and peaceable than other men: If he fail in this, where is the Art the man boasts of? to what purpose is all this noise and stir about the Gospel and the holy Doctrine of Christ? If any man profess himself a Christian and do not live better than others he is a mere pretender and Mountebank in Religion, he's a bungler in his own Art and unskill'd in his proper profession. This is the first, the indecency of the thing.

2. Consider how great a scandal this must needs be to our blessed Saviour and his holy Religion. The Christian Religion hath undergone many a hard censure for the miscarriages of the professors of it. The impieties and vices of those who call themselves Christians have have caused many sharp reflections upon Christianity, and made the Son of God and the Blessed Saviour of the world to wear the odious names of deceiver and impostor. If a man did design to do the greatest spight to Religion he could not give it a deeper wound, he could not take a more effectual course to disparage it than by a lewd and debauch'd life. For this will still be an objection in the minds of those who are strangers and enemies to our Religion. If the Gospel were so excellent an institution as it is reported to be, surely we should see better effects of it in the lives of those who profess it. When we would persuade a Heathen to our Religion, and tell him how holy a God we serve, what excellent patterns we imitate, what spiritual and divine precepts of holiness and virtue our Religion does contain; may not he reply, would you have me to believe you when I see you do not believe your selves? If you believed your Religion you would live according to it. For if the Gospel were every word of it false, if there were neither a Heaven to be hoped for nor a Hell to be feared after this life, how could many Christians live worse than they do?

As we would not proclaim to the world that the Gospel is an unholy and vicious Institution, let us take heed that we bring no scandal upon it by our lives, lest the enemies of our Religion say as Salvian tells us they did in his time, Si Christus Sancta docuisset Christiani sancte vixissent, surely if Christ had taught so holy a doctrine Christians would have lived holier lives. Tully tells us that one of the shrewdest arguments that ever was brought against Philosophy was this, quosdam perfectos Philosophos turpiter vivere, that some great Philosophers led very filthy lives. Celsus and Porphry, Hierocles and Julian, among all their witty invectives against Christian Religion have nothing against it that reflects so much upon it as do the wicked lives of so many Christians. The greatest enmity to Religion is to profess it and to live unanswerably to it.

This consideration ought greatly to affect us. I am sure the Apostle speaks of it with great passion and vehemency, for many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are enemies of the Cross of Christ, whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. Phil. 18. A Jew or a Turk is not so great an enemy to Christianity as a lewd and vicious Christian. Therefore let me beseech Christians, as they tender the honour of their Saviour and the credit of their Religion, that they would conform their lives to the holy precepts of Christianity. And if there be any who are resolved to continue in a vicious course to the injury and disparagement of Christianity, I could almost intreat of them that they would quit their profession and renounce their Baptism, that they would lay aside their title of Christians and initiate themselves in Heathenish rites and superstitions, or be circumcised for Jews or Turks: For it were really better, upon some accounts, that such men should abandon their Profession, than keep on a vizard which serves to no other purpose but to scare others from Religion.

3. And Lastly, Let us consider the danger we expose our selves to by not living answerably to our Religion. And this, I hope, may prevail upon such as are not moved by the former considerations. Hypocrites are instanc'd in Scripture, as a sort of sinners that shall have the sharpest torments and the fiercest damnation. When our Saviour would set forth the great severity of the Lord towards the evil servant

Mat. 24. servant he expresseth it thus, he shall cut him asunder and appoint him his portion with Hypocrites. So that the punishment of Hypocrites seems to be made in the measure and standard of the highest punishment. Thou professest to believe in Christ and to hope in him for salvation, but in the mean time thou livest a wicked and unholy life, thou dost not believe but presume on him, and wilt find at the great day that this thy confidence will be thy confusion, and he whom thou hopest will be thy Advocate and Saviour will prove thy Accuser and thy Judge. What our Saviour says to the Jews, There is one that accuseth you even Moses in whom ye trust, may very well be applied to false Christians, there is one that accuseth you and will condemn you, even Jesus in whom ye trust.

Joh. 5. 45.

The profession of Christianity and mens having the name of Christ named upon them will be so far from securing them from Hell, that it will sink them the deeper into it. Many are apt to pity the poor Heathens who never heard of the name of Christ, and sadly to condole their case, but as our Saviour said upon another occasion, Weep not for them, weep for your selves. There's no such miserable person in the world as a degenerate Christian, because he falls into the greatest misery from the greatest advantages and opportunities of being happy. Dost thou lament the condition of Socrates, and Cato, and Aristides, and doubt what shall become of them at the day of Judgment? and canst thou, who art an impious and prophane Christian, think that thou shalt escape the damnation of Hell?

Dost thou believe that the moral Heathen shall be cast out? and canst thou who hast led a wicked life under the profession of Christianity have the impudence to hope that thou shalt sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God? No, those sins which are committed by Christians under the enjoyment of the Gospel are of deeper dye and cloathed with blacker aggravations than the sins of Heathens are capable of. A Pagan may live without God in the World, and be unjust towards men, at a cheaper rate and upon easier terms than thou who art a Christian. Better had it been thou hadst never known one syllable of the Gospel, never heard of the name of Christ than that having taken it upon thee thou shouldst not depart from iniquity. Happy had it been for thee, that thou hadst been born a Jew, or a Turk, or a poor Indian, rather than that being bred among Christians, and professing thy self of that number, thou shouldst lead a vicious and unholy life.

I have insisted the longer upon these arguments, that I might, if possible, awaken men to a serious consideration of their lives, and persuade them to a real reformation of them; that I may oblige all those who call themselves Christians to live up to the essential and fundamental Laws of our Religion; to love God, and to love our Neighbour; to do to every man as we would have him to do to us, to mortify our lusts, and subdue our passions, and sincerely to endeavour to grow in every grace and virtue, and to abound in all the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God.

This indeed would become our profession and be honourable to our Religion, and would remove one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of the Gospel. For how can we expect that the doctrine of God our Saviour should gain any considerable ground in the world, so long as by the unworthy lives of so many Christians 'tis represented to the world at so great disadvantage; If ever we would have Christian Religion effectually ably recommended, it must be by the holy and unblameable lives of those who make profession of it. Then indeed it would look with so amiable a countenance as to invite many to it, and carry so much majesty and authority in it as to command reverence from its greatest enemies, and make men to acknowledge that God is in us of a truth, and to glorify our Father which is in Heaven.

The good God grant that as we have taken upon us the profession of Christianity, so we may be careful so to live that we may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things; that the grace of God which bringeth salvation may teach us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, &c.

Of the Happiness of a Heavenly Conversation.

P H I L. III. 20.

For our Conversation is in Heaven.

FOR the understanding of which words we need to look back no further than the 18th. verse of this Chapter, where the Apostle with great vehemency and passion speaks of some among the Philippians, who indeed profess'd Christianity but yet would do any thing to decline suffering for that profession; there are many that walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are enemies to the Cross of Christ; they cannot endure to suffer with him and for him, they are so sensual and wedded to this world that they will do any thing to avoid persecution; so he describes them in the next verse, whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. Now in opposition to these sensual and earthly-minded men the Apostle gives us the character of the true Christians, they are such as mind Heaven and another world, and prefer the hopes of that to all the interests of this life, our conversation is in Heaven.

For the right understanding of which phrase be pleased to observe that it is an allusion to a City or Corporation, and to the privileges and manners of those who are free of it. And Heaven is several times in Scripture represented to us under this notion of a City. It is said of Abraham that he looked for a City which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, It is called likewise the City of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. And the same Apostle speaking of the uncertain condition of Christians in this world says of them, that here they have no continuing City, but look for one that is to come.

Now to this City the Apostle alludes here in the Text, when he says our conversation is in Heaven. For the word πολιτεία, which is rendred conversation, may either signify the privilege of Citizens, or their conversation and manners, or may take in both these.

In the first sense of the privilege of Citizens, we find πολιτεία a word of near affinity with this sometimes us'd; with a great sum (says the Captain to Paul) obtained I τὴν πολιτείαν πύττω, this freedom. According to this sense, ἡμῶν το πολιτεία may very well be rendred, as Tertullian often does this Text, municipatus noster, our Citizenship is in Heaven; an allusion perhaps (as the learned Dr. Hammond observes) to those who though they were not born at Rome, and it may be lived at a great distance from it, had yet jus civitatis Romanæ, the privilege of Roman Citizens. In like manner the Apostle here describes the condition of Christians. 'Tis true, we are born here in this world and live in it, but we belong to another Corporation; we are denizens of another Country and free of that City which is above.

In the other sense of the conversation of Citizens we find the verb πολιτεύεσθαι used towards the beginning of this Epistle, Let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ. And why may not the word πολιτῆμα in the Text, without any inconvenience include both these? as if the Apostle had said, there are some that mind earthly things, and are so addicted to them that rather than part with them they will forsake their Religion; but as for us, we consider that we are Citizens of Heaven, and accordingly we converse and demean our selves in this world as those that are free of another City and do belong to it.

So that to have our conversation in heaven does imply these two things.

First, The serious thoughts and considerations of Heaven.

Secondly, The effect which those thoughts ought to have upon our lives.

These two things take up the meaning of my Text, and shall be the subject of the following discourse.

I. The serious thoughts and considerations of Heaven, that is, of the happy and glorious state of good men in another life. And concerning this, there are two things principally which offer themselves to our consideration. First, The happiness of this state. Secondly, The way and means whereby we may come to partake of this happiness.

First, We will consider the happiness of this state. But what, and how great this happiness is, I am not able to represent to you. These things are yet in a great measure within the veil, and it does not now fully appear what we shall be. The Scriptures have reveal'd so much in general concerning the reality and unspeakable felicities of this state as may satisfy us for the present, and serve to inflame our desires after it, and to quicken our endeavours for the obtaining of it; as namely, that it is incomparably beyond any happiness of this world; that it is very great; and that it is eternal; in a word, that it is far above any thing that we can now conceive or imagine.

1. It is incomparably beyond any happiness in this world. It is free from all those sharp and bitter ingredients which do abate and allay the felicities of this life. All the enjoyments of this world are mix'd, and uncertain, and unsatisfying; nay so far are they from giving us satisfaction, that the very sweetest of them are satiating and cloying.

None of the comforts of this life are pure and unmixt. There is something of vanity mingled with all our earthly enjoyments, and that causeth vexation of spirit. There is no sensual pleasure but is either purchas'd by some pain, or attended with it, or ends in it. A great estate is neither to be got without care, nor kept without fear, nor lost without trouble. Dignity and greatness is troublesome almost to all mankind, it is commonly uneasy to them that have it, and it is usually hated and envy'd by those that have it not. Knowledge, that is one of the best and sweetest pleasures of humane life; and yet if we may believe the experience of one, who had as great a share of it as any of the Sons of men ever had, he will tell us, that this also is vexation of spirit; for in much wisdom there is much grief, and he that increaseth knowledge, increaseth sorrow.

17, 18.

Thus it is with all the things of this world; the best of them have a mixture of good and evil, of joy and sorrow in them: but the happiness of the next life is free from alloy and mixture. In the description of the new Jerusalem it is said, that there shall be no more curse, and there shall be no night there, nothing to embitter our blessings, or obscure our Glory. Heaven is the proper region of happiness, there only are pure joys and an unmingled felicity.

But the enjoyments of this world as they are mix'd, so they are uncertain. So wavering and inconstant are they that we can have no security of them, when we think our selves to have the fastest hold of them they slip out of our hands we know not how. For this reason Solomon very elegantly calls them things that are not, Why wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? for riches certainly make to themselves wings and fly like an Eagle towards heaven. So fugitive are they, that after all our endeavours to secure them they may break loose from us, and in an instant vanish out of our sight, riches make to themselves wings, and fly like an Eagle, intimating to us that riches are often necessary to their own ruin. Many times the greatness of a man's estate, and nothing else, hath been the cause of the loss of it, and of taking away the life of the owner thereof. The fairness of some mens fortune hath been a temptation to those who have been more powerful to ravish it from them, thus riches make to themselves wings. So that he that enjoys the greatest happiness of this world does still want one happiness more, to secure to him for the future what he possesses for the present. But the happiness of Heaven is a steady and constant light, fix'd and unchangeable as the fountain from whence it springs, the father of lights, with whom is no variableness nor shadow of turning.

And if the enjoyments of this life were certain, yet they are unsatisfying. This is the vanity of vanities, that every thing in this world can trouble us, but nothing can give us satisfaction. I know not how it is, but either we, or the things of this world, or both, are so phantastical, that we can neither be well with these things, nor well without them. If we be hungry, we are in pain; and if we eat to the full, we are uneasy. If we be poor we think our selves miserable, and when we come to be rich we commonly really are so. If we are in a low condition we fret and murmur, and if we chance to get up and to be rais'd to greatness we are many times farther from contentment than we were before. So that we pursue the happiness of this world just as little Children chase birds, when we think we are come very near it and have it almost in our hands it flies farther from us than it was at first.

Nay, so far are the enjoyments of this world from affording us satisfaction, that the sweetest of them are most apt to satiate and cloy us. All the pleasures of this world are so contriv'd as to yield us very little happiness. If they go off quickly they signify nothing, and if they stay long we are sick of them. After a full draught of any sensual pleasure we presently loath it, and hate it as much after the enjoyment as we courted it and long'd for it in the expectation. But the delights of the other world, as they will give us full satisfaction so we shall never be weary of them. Every repetition of them will be accompanied with a new pleasure and contentment. In the felicities of Heaven these two things shall be reconcil'd, which never met together in any sensual delight, long and full enjoyment, and yet a fresh and perpetual pleasure. As in God's presence there is fulness of joy, so at his right hand there shall be pleasures for evermore.

2. The happiness of the other life is not only incomparably beyond any happiness of this world (that, it may be, is no great commendation of it) it ; but it is very great in it self. The happiness of Heaven is usually in Scripture describ'd to us by such pleasures as are manly and excellent, chaste and intellectual, infinitely more pure and refin'd than those of sense ; and if the Scripture at any time descend to the metaphors of a feast, and a banquet, and a marriage, it is plainly by way of accommodation to our weakness and condescension to our capacities.

But the chief ingredients of this happiness, so far as the Scripture hath thought fit to reveal it to us, are the perfection of our knowledge, and the height of our love, and the perpetual society and friendship of all the blessed inhabitants of those glorious mansions ; and the joyful concurrence of all these in chearful expressions of gratitude, in the incessant praises and admiration of the fountain and author of all this happiness. And what can be more delightful than to have our understandings entertain'd with a clear sight of the best and most perfect Being, with the knowledge of all his works and of the wise designs of his providence here in the world ? than to live in the reviving presence of God, and to be continually attending upon him whose favour is life, and whose glory is much more above that of any of the Princes of this world than the greatest of them is above the poorest worm ? The Queen of Sheba thought Solomon's Servants happy in having the opportunity by standing continually before him to hear his wisdom ; but in the other world it shall be a happiness to Solomon himself, and to the wisest and greatest persons that ever were in this world, to stand before this great King to admire his wisdom and to behold his glory. Not that I imagine the happiness of Heaven to consist in a perpetual gazing upon God, and in an idle contemplation of the glories of that place. For as by that blessed sight we shall be infinitely transported, so the Scripture tells us we shall be also transformed into the image of the divine perfections ; we shall see God, and we shall be like him, and what greater happiness can there be than to be like the happiest and most perfect Being in the world ? Besides, who can tell what employment God may have for us in the next life ? We need not doubt but that he who is happiness it self, and hath promis'd to make us happy, can easily find out such employments and delights for us in the other world as will be proper and suitable to that state.

But then besides the improvement of our knowledge there shall be the most delightful exercise of love. When we come to heaven we shall enter into the society of the blessed Angels and of the spirits of just men made perfect, that is, freed from all those passions and infirmities which do now render the conversation, even of the best men, sometimes troublesome to one another. We shall then meet with all those excellent Persons, those brave Minds, those innocent and charitable Souls whom we have seen, and heard, and read of in this world. There we shall meet with many of our dear relations and intimate friends, and perhaps with many of our enemies, to whom we shall then be perfectly reconcil'd notwithstanding all the warm contests and peevish differences which we had with them in this world, even about matters of Religion. For Heaven is a state of perfect love and friendship, there will be nothing but kindness and good nature there, and all the prudent Arts of endearment and wise ways of rendering conversation mutually pleasant to one another. And what greater happiness can be imagin'd than to converse freely with so many excellent persons, without any thing of folly or disguise, of jealousy or design upon one another ? For then there will be none of those vices and passions, of covetousness and ambition, of envy and hatred, of wrath and peevishness, which do now so much spoil the pleasure and disturb the quiet of mankind. All quarrels and contentions, schisms and divisions will then be effectually hinder'd, not by force but by love, not by compulsion but by that charity which never fails; and all those controversies in Religion which are now so hotly agitated will then be finally determin'd, not as we endeavour to end them now by Canons and Decrees, but by a perfect knowledge and convincing light.

And when this blessed society is met together, and thus united by love, they shall all join in gratitude to their great Patrons and Benefactors, to him that sits upon the Throne, and to the Lamb that was slain, to God even our Father, and to our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath lov'd us and washed us from our sins in his own blood. And they shall sing everlasting songs of praise to God for all his works of wonder, for the effects of that infinite goodness, and admirable wisdom, and almighty power, which are clearly seen in the creation and government of the world and of all the Creatures in it; particularly for his favours to mankind, for the benefit of their beings, for the comfort of their lives, and for all his merciful providences towards them in this world: But above all for the redemption of their souls by the death of his Son, for the free forgiveness of their sins, for the gracious assistance of his holy Spirit, and for conducting them safely through all the snares and dangers, the troubles and temptations of this world to the secure possession of that glory and happiness which then they shall be partakers of, and are bound to praise God for to all eternity. This, this shall be the employment of the blessed spirits above, and these are the chief ingredients of our happiness which the Scripture mentions. And if there were no other, as there may be ten thousand more for any thing I can tell, yet generous and virtuous minds will easily understand how great a pleasure there is in the improvement of our knowledge, and the exercise of love, and in a grateful and perpetual acknowledgment of the greatest benefits that creatures are capable of receiving.

3. This happiness shall be eternal. And though this be but a circumstance and do not enter into the nature of our happiness, yet it is so material a one that all the felicities which heaven affords would be imperfect without it. It would strangely damp and allay all our joys to think that they should sometime have an end. And the greater our happiness were, the greater trouble it would be to us to consider that it must have a period.

It would make a man sorrowful indeed to think of leaving such vast possessions. Indeed if the happiness of heaven were such as the joys of this world are, it were fit they should be as short; for after a little enjoyment it would cloy us, and we should soon grow weary of it. But being so excellent, it would scarce be a happiness if it were not eternal. It would imbitter the pleasures of heaven, as great as they are, to see to an end of them, though it were at never so great a distance; to consider that all this vast treasure of happiness would one day be exhausted, and that after so many years were past we should be as poor and miserable again as we were once in this world. God hath so order'd things, that the vain and empty delights of this world should be temporary and transient, but that the great and substantial pleasures of the other world should be as lasting as they are excellent. For Heaven as it is an exceeding, so it is an eternal weight of glory. And this is that which crowns the joys of heaven and banishes all fear and trouble from the minds of the blessed. And thus to be secur'd in the possession of our happiness is an unspeakable addition to it. For that which is eternal as it shall never determine, so it can never be diminish'd; for for to be diminish'd and to decay is to draw nearer to an end, and that which shall never have an end can never come nearer to it.

O vast eternity ! how dost thou swallow up our thoughts and entertain us at once with delight and amazement ? This is the very top and highest pitch of our happiness, upon which we may stand secure and look down with scorn upon all things here below ; and how small and inconsiderable do they appear to us, compar'd with the vast and endless enjoyments of our future state ? But oh vain and foolish souls ! that are so little concern'd for eternity ; that for the trifles of time, and the pleasures of sin which are but for a season, can find in our hearts to forfeit an everlasting felicity. Blessed God ! why hast thou prepar'd such a happiness for those who neither consider it, nor seek after it ? Why is such a price put into the hands of fools, who have no heart to make use of it ; who fondly chuse to gratify their lusts rather than to save their souls, and sottishly prefer the temporary enjoyments of sin before a blessed immortality ?

4. And lastly, This happiness is far above any thing that we can now conceive or imagine. It is so great, that it cannot now enter into the heart of man. We cannot from the experience of any of those pleasures and delights which we have been acquainted withal in this world frame an equal Idea and conception of it. So that when we come to Heaven we shall be ready to say of it as the Queen of Sheba did of Solomon's wisdom and prosperity, that half of it hath not been told us ; that the felicities and glories of that state do far exceed all the fame which we heard of therein this world. For who can say how great a good God is ? and how happy he who is the fountain of happiness can make those souls that love him, and those whom he loves ?

In this imperfect state we are not capable of a full representation of those glories. We cannot now see God and live. A full description of Heaven and of the pleasures of that state would let in joys upon us too big for our narrow capacities, and too strong for weak mortality to bear. We are now but Children, and we speak as Children, and understand and think as Children concerning these things ; but in the other state we shall grow up to be men, and then we shall put away these childish thoughts ; now we know but in part, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is imperfect shall be done away ; now we see through a glass darkly (εἰς ἀινύσαν, in a riddle) but then we shall see face to face ; now we know in part, but then we shall know even as also we are known, as the Apostle discourseth excellently concerning this very matter. 1 Cor. 13. 9, 10, 11.

No sooner shall we enter upon the joys of the other world, but our minds shall be rais'd to a strength and activity as much above that of the most knowing persons in this world as the thoughts of the greatest Philosopher and wisest man upon earth are above the thoughts of a child or a fool. No man's mind is now so well fram'd to understand any thing in this world, as our understandings shall then be fitted for the knowledge of God and of the things that belong to that state. In the mean time let us bless God that he hath reveal'd so much of this happiness to us as is necessary to excite and encourage us to seek after it.

The Second thing to be consider'd concerning our future happiness, is the way and means whereby we may come to be made partakers of it. And that in short is by the constant and sincere endeavours of a holy life, in and through the mercies of God in our Lord Jesus Christ. Christ indeed is the author of our salvation, but obedience is the condition of it ;

Heb. 5. 1. so the Apostle tells us, that Christ is the author of eternal salvation to them that obey him. It is the grace of God in the Gospel which brings or offers this salvation to us, but then it is by the denying of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and by living soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world that we are to wait for the blessed hope. Our Saviour promises this happiness to the pure in heart, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God; and elsewhere the Scripture doth exclude all others from any share or portion in this blessedness, so the Apostle assures us that without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

And holiness is not only a condition but a necessary qualification for the happiness of the next life. This is the force of St. John's reasoning, we shall be like him, for we shall see him. To see God is to be happy, but unless we be like him we cannot see him. The sight and presence of God himself would be no happiness to that man who is not like to God in the temper and disposition of his mind. And from hence the Apostle infers in the next verse, every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure. So that if we live wicked lives, if we allow our selves in the practice of any known sin, we interrupt our hopes of Heaven and render our selves unfit for eternal life. By this means we defeat all the designs of God's grace and mercy towards us, and salvation it self cannot save us if we make our selves incapable of that happiness which God offers. Heaven is in Scripture call'd an inheritance among them that are sanctified, and the inheritance of the Saints in light; so that it is not enough that this inheritance is promis'd to us, but we must be qualified and prepar'd for it, and be made meet to be made partakers of it.

And this life is the time of our preparation for our future state. Our souls will continue for ever what we make them in this world. Such a temper and disposition of mind as a man carries with him out of this life he shall retain in the next. 'Tis true indeed, heaven perfects those holy and virtuous dispositions which are begun here; but the other world alters no man as to his main state, he that is filthy will be filthy still, and he that is unrighteous will be unrighteous still. If we do not in a good degree mortify our lusts and passions here, death will not kill them for us, but we shall carry them with us into the other world. And if God should admit us so qualified into the place of happiness, yet we shall bring that along with us which would infallibly hinder us from being happy. Our sensual inclinations and desires would meet with nothing there that would be suitable to them, and we should be perpetually tormented with those appetites which we brought with us out of this world, because we should find nothing there to gratify them withal. For as the Apostle says in another sense, The kingdom of God is not meats and drinks, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. The happiness of heaven consists in such things as a wicked man hath no gust and relish for. So that if a covetous, or ambitious, or voluptuous man were in Heaven, he would be just like the rich man in Hell, tormented with a continual thirst, and burnt up in the flames of his own ardent desires; and would not be able, amidst all the plenty and treasures of that place, to find so much as one drop of suitable pleasure and delight to quench and allay that heat. So likewise our fierce and unruly passions; if we should carry them with us into the other world, how inconsistent would they be with happiness? They would not only make us miserable our selves, but be a trouble to all those with whom we should converse. If a man of an envious and malicious, of a peevish and passionate temper, were admitted ted into the mansions of the blessed, he would not only be unhappy himself, but would disturb the quiet of others, and raise storms even in those calm regions. Vain man! that dreamest of being happy without any disposition or preparation for it. To be happy, is to enjoy what we desire and to live with those whom we love. But there is nothing in heaven suitable to the desires and appetites of a wicked man. All the joys of that place, and the delights of that state are purely spiritual, and are only to be relish'd by those who have purified themselves as God is pure. But if thou be carnal and sensual, what are these things to thee? What happiness would it be to thee to see God, and to have him always in thy view who was never in all thy thoughts; to be tied to live for ever in his company who is of a quite contrary temper and disposition to thy self, whose presence thou darest, and whom whilst thou wast in this world thou couldst never endure to think upon? So that the pleasures of Heaven it self could signify no good or happiness to that man who is not so dispos'd as to take pleasure in them. Heaven is too pure an air for corrupt souls to live and breathe in, and the whole employment and conversation of that place, as it would be unsuitable, so would it also be unacceptable to a sensual and vicious person.

From all this it appears how necessary it is for us to prepare our selves for this blessed state, by the constant and sincere endeavours of a holy life, and by mortifying every lust and inordinate passion in our souls. For till this be done we are not meet to be made partakers of the felicities of the other world. And thus I have done with the first thing imply'd in this phrase of having our conversation in heaven, viz. the serious thoughts and considerations of heaven; or the happiness of that state, and of the way and means whereby that happiness is to be attained.

II. The having our conversation in heaven does imply likewise the effect which those considerations ought to have upon our hearts and lives: As

I. To convince us of the vanity of this world. God hath on purpose made this world troublesome and uneasy to us, that there might be no sufficient temptation to reasonable and considerate men to take them off from the care and thought of their future happiness; that God and heaven might have no rival here below; that there might be nothing in this world that might pretend to our affection or court us with any advantage in comparison of everlasting life and glory.

When we come to dye and eternity shall present it self to our serious and waking thoughts, then things will put on another face, and those things which we valued so much in this life will then appear to be nothing worth; but those things which we neglected, to be of infinite concernment to us, and worthy to have been the care and endeavour of our whole lives. And if we would consider these things in time, while the opportunities of life and health are before us, we might be convinc'd at a cheaper rate, and come to be satisfied of the vanity of this world before we despair'd of the happiness of the other.

2. To make us very active and industrious to be as good, and to do as much good as we can in this life, that so we may be qualified and dispos'd for the happiness of the next. Men are usually very industrious for the things of this life, to be rich and great in the world: Did we but value heaven half, as much as it deserves we should take infinitely more pains for for that. So often as we consider the glories that are above, how does it accuse our sloth and condemn our folly that we are less concerned for our souls than most men are for their bodies, that we will not labour half so much for an eternal inheritance as men ordinarily do for these corruptible things?

Let us remember that we are hastening apace to another world, and that our eternal happiness now lies at the stake. And how should it quicken our endeavours to have such a reward set before us, to have Crowns and Scepters in our eyes? would we but often represent to our minds the glorious things of another world, what fervors should we feel in our hearts? we should be all life, and spirit, and wing; and should do God's will, almost with the same readiness and delight, as the Angels do who continually behold the face of their Father. The consideration of heaven and the firm persuasion of our future happiness should actuate all the powers of our souls, and be continually inspiring us with new vigor in the ways of holiness and virtue. How should this thought swell our resolutions and confirm our purposes of obedience, that if we have our fruit unto holiness our end will be everlasting life?

3. To mitigate and lighten the evils and affliction of this life. It is no great matter how rough the way be provided we be sure that it leads to happiness. The incomparably greater good of the next life will to a wise and considerate man weigh down all the evils of this. And the Scripture tells us that there is no comparison between them. The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. The evils of this life afflict men more or less according as the soul is fortified with considerations proper to support us under them. When we consider that we have but a little while to be here, that we are upon our journey travelling towards our heavenly Country where we shall meet with all the delights we can desire, it ought not to trouble us much to endure storms and foul ways, and to want many of those accommodations we might expect at home. This is the common fate of Travellers, and we must take things as we find them and not look to have every thing just to our mind. These difficulties and inconveniences will shortly be over, and after a few days will be quite forgotten, and be to us as if they had never been. And when we are safely landed in our own Countrey, with what pleasure shall we look back upon those rough and boisterous Seas which we have escap'd? The more troubles we have past through the kinder usage we shall find when we come to our Father's house. So the Apostle tells us, that our light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. When we come to heaven our happiness shall then be as real as our miseries were here upon earth, and far greater and more lasting. And what great matter is it tho' we suffer a while in this world, provided we escape the endless unsufferable torments of the next; though we have not our good things in this life, if infinitely greater be reserv'd for us, and we shall receive them with interest in the other?

Several of the evils and calamities of this life would be unsufferable indeed, if there were nothing better to be hoped for hereafter. If this were true, Christians would not only be of all men but of all creatures the most miserable. But our Religion hath abundantly assur'd us to the contrary. And the assurance of this was that which made the primitive Christians to embrace sufferings with so much cheerfulness, to glory in tribulation, and to take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing that in heaven they had a better and more enduring substance. The seven brethren in the History of the Maccabees upon this perswasion would not accept deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection. That storm of stones which was pour'd upon St. Stephen was no more to him than a common shower when he saw the heavens open'd, and Jesus (in whose cause he suffer'd) standing on the right hand of God.

4. To make us sincere in all our professions, words and actions. Did men firmly believe the rewards of another world their Religion would not be only in shew and pretence, but in life and reality, no man would put on a form of godliness that were destitute of the power of it; we should do nothing for the opinion of others, but all with regard to God and our own Consciences; and be as curious of our thoughts, and most retir'd actions, as if we were in an open theatre and in the presence of the greatest assembly. For in the next life men shall not be rewarded for what they seem'd to be, but for what they really were in this world. Therefore whatever we think, or speak, or do, we should always remember that the day of revelation is coming, when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclos'd, when all disguises shall be laid aside, and every one's mask shall be taken off, and all our actions and designs shall be brought upon the publick stage and expos'd to the view of men and Angels. There is nothing now hidden which shall not then be reveal'd, nor secret which shall not be made known.

5. To arm us against the fears of death. Death is terrible to nature, and the terror of it is infinitely increas'd by the fearful apprehensions of what may follow it. But the comfortable hopes of a blessed immortality do strangely relieve the fainting spirits of dying men, and are able to reconcile us to death, and in a great measure to take away the terror of it. I know that the thoughts of death are dismal even to good men, and we have never more need of comfort and encouragement than when we are conflicting with this last Enemy, and there is no such comfortable consideration to a dying man as the hopes of a happy eternity. He that looks upon death only as a passage to glory, may welcome the messengers of it as bringing him the best and most joyful news that ever came to him in his whole life; and no man can stay behind in this world with half the comfort that this man leaves it.

And now I have done with the two things implied in this phrase, of having our conversation in heaven, viz. the serious thoughts and considerations of heaven, and the effect of these thoughts and considerations upon our hearts and lives.

I crave your patience but a little longer, till I make some reflection upon what hath been deliver'd concerning the happiness of good men after this life. I have told you that it is incomparably beyond any happiness of this world, that it is great in it self, and eternal in its duration, and far above any thing that we can now conceive or imagine. And now after all this, I am very sensible how much all that I have said comes short of the greatness and dignity of the thing. So that I could almost begin again and make a new attempt upon this subject. And indeed who would not be loth to be taken off from so delightful an argument? Methinks 'tis good for us to be here, and to let our minds dwell upon these considerations. We are unworthy of heaven and unfit to partake of so great a glory, if we cannot take pleasure in the contemplation of those things now, the possession whereof shall be our happiness for ever.

With what joy then should we think of those great and glorious things which God hath prepar'd for them that love him, of that inheritance incorruptible, undefil'd, which fadeth not away, reserved for us in the heavens? How should we welcome the thoughts of that happy hour when we shall make our escape out of these prisons, when we shall pass out of this howling wilderness into the promis'd Land; when we shall be remov'd from all the troubles and temptations of a wicked and ill-natur'd world; when we shall be past all storms, and secur'd from all further danger of shipwreck, and shall be safely landed in the regions of bliss and immortality?

O blessed time! When all tears shall be wip'd from our eyes, and death and sorrow shall be no more; When mortality shall be swallowed up of life, and we shall enter upon the possession of all that happiness and glory which God hath promis'd, and our faith hath believ'd, and our hopes have rais'd us to the expectation of; when we shall be eas'd of all our pains, and resolv'd of all our doubts, and be purg'd from all our sins, and be freed from all our fears, and be happy beyond all our hopes, and have all the happiness secur'd to us beyond the power of time and change: When we shall know God and other things without study, and love him and one another without measure, and serve and praise him without weariness, and obey his will without the least reluctancy; and shall still be more and more delighted in the knowing, and loving, and praising, and obeying of God to all eternity.

How should these thoughts affect our hearts, and what a mighty influence ought they to have upon our lives? The great disadvantage of the arguments fetch'd from another world is this, that those things are at a great distance from us, and not sensible to us; and therefore are not apt to affect us so strongly, and to work so powerfully upon us. Now to make amends for this disadvantage we should often revive these considerations upon our mind, and inculcate upon our selves the reality and certainty of these things together with the infinite weight and importance of them. We should reason thus with our selves; If good men shall be so unspeakably happy, and consequently wicked men so extremely miserable in another world: If these things be true and will one day be found to be so, why should they not be to me as if they were already present? why should not I be as much afraid to commit any sin as if hell were naked before me, and I saw the astonishing miseries of the damned? and why should I not be as careful to serve God and keep his commandments, as if heaven were open to my view, and I saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God with crowns of glory in his hand ready to be set upon the heads of all those who continue faithful to him?

The lively apprehensions of the nearness of death and eternity are apt to make mens thoughts more quick and piercing, and according as we think our selves prepar'd for our future state to transport us with joy, or to amaze us with horror. For the soul that is fully satisfied of his future bliss is already entred into heaven, has begun to take possession of glory, and has (as it were) his blessed Saviour in his arms, and may say with old Simeon, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. But the thoughts of death must needs be very terrible to that man who is doubtful or despairing of his future condition. It would daunt the stoutest man that ever breathed, to look upon death when he can see nothing but hell beyond it. When the the Apparition at Endor told Saul, To morrow thou and thy Sons shall be with me, these words struck him to the heart, so that he fell down to the ground, and there was no more strength left in him. It is as certain that we shall dye as if an expresse messenger should come to every one of us from the other world and tell us so. Why should we not then always live as those that must dye, and as those that hope to be happy after death? To have these apprehensions vigorous and lively upon our minds, this is to have our conversation in heaven, from whence also we look for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working of that mighty power whereby he is able even to subdue all things to himself.*

S E R M O N I X

Of the End of Judgments, and the Reason of their Continuance.

I S A. XIX. 12, 13.

For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still: For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts.

IN the former part of this 12th verse, the Prophet threatens that Israel should be brought into great distress and set upon by Enemies on every side, the Syrians before and the Philistines behind, and that they should devour Israel with open mouth: And though this was like to be a very sore and dreadful judgment, yet he foretells that this would not stay God's hand nor satisfy his anger, because he foresaw that they would still grow worse and continue impenitent. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still: For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts.

In which words there are these two things very useful at all times, but at this time especially most proper and seasonable for our consideration.

1. The design and intention of God in sending Judgments upon a People; and that is to reclaim them from their sins, implied in these words, For the People turneth not to him that smiteth them; which intimate to us that this is the end which God aims at in his Judgments to take us off from our sins and to bring us to himself.

2. The reason of the continuance of God's Judgments, because the People were not reclaim'd by them. And this is fully express'd in the Text, that therefore God's anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still, because the People turneth not unto him that smiteth them, &c.

Of these Two I crave leave to speak, as plainly and briefly as I can.

1. The design and intention of God in sending Judgments upon a people; and that is to reclaim them from their sins. This indeed is the intention of all God's dispensations towards us in this world. The end of all his mercies and benefits is to take us off from sin, and to oblige and win us to our duty: So the Apostle tells us, Rom. 2. 4. That the design of God's goodness and long-suffering and forbearance towards us, is, to lead us to Repentance.

And this is the way wherein God delights to deal with us. The way of Judgment and severity is that which he is more averse from, a course which he unwillingly takes with us and not without some difficulty and reluctance. He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men: and were it not that we are such perverse Creatures as not to be wrought upon by kindness, so wild as not to be tamed by gentle usage, God would not handle us in any

^any other way. It is our obstinacy and intractableness to the methods of his goodness which constraineth, and almost forceth him against his inclination, to take the Rod into his hand, and to chastise us with it. He would draw us with the cords of Love and the bands of a man, (as he expresseth himself in the Prophet) but we will not follow him: And therefore we provoke him to turn these cords into whips, and to change the gentle methods of his kindness into ways of harshness and severity.

And yet when he comes to take this course with us, he still like a kind and tender-hearted Father aims at our benefit and advantage. He designs kindness to the sons of men by all those Judgments which do not kill them and cut them off from the opportunity and possibility of improving them. If he sends evils upon us, it is that thereby he may do us some greater good: If he afflicts us, it is not because it is pleasant to him to deal harshly with us, but because it is profitable and necessary for us to be so dealt with: And if at any time he embitter our lives by miseries and sufferings, it is because he is loath to see us perish in pleasant ways, and chuseth rather to be somewhat severe towards us than suffer us to be utterly undone.

This Moses declares to have been the great end of all the severe Providences of God towards the People of Israel in their long wandering in the Wilderness, and all the difficulties and hardships they were there exercised withal for the space of forty years, Deut. 8. 15, 16. Who led thee through that great and terrible Wilderness, wherein were fiery Serpents and Scorpions, &c. That he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end.

So that the afflicting providences of God are not only apt in their own nature to do us good, but which is a more express argument of the Divine goodness, God intends and aims at this end by them: He does not send Judgments upon this Theatre of the World for his sport and pastime, nor set on one part of his Creation to bait another for his own diversion: He does not, like some of the cruel Roman Emperors, take pleasure to exercise men with dangers and to see them play bloody prizes before him.

Nay he does nothing that is severe out of humour and passion; as our earthly Parents many times do. Indeed he is angry with us for our sins, but yet so as still to pity our persons: And when his Providence makes use of any sharp and cutting instruments, it is with this merciful design, to let out our corruption: If he cast us into the Furnace of affliction, it is that he may refine and purify us from our dross.

So that though the Judgments of God be Evils in themselves, yet considering the intentions of God in them they are no real objections against his goodness, but rather arguments for it; as will appear if we consider these three things.

1. That the Judgments of God are proper for the cure of a far greater Evil of another kind.
2. They are proper for the prevention of far greater Evils of the same kind.
3. They are not only proper to these Ends, but in many cases very necessary.

First, The Judgments of God are very proper for the cure of a far greater Evil of another kind; I mean the Evil of Sin. We take wrong measures of things, when we judge those to be the greatest evils which afflict our bodies, wound our reputation, and impoverish our Estates. For those certainly are far the greatest, which affect our noblest part; which vitiate our understandings, and deprave our wills, and wound and defile our souls.

What

What corrupt humours are to the body, that sin is to the souls of men, their disease and their death.

Now it is very agreeable with the goodness and mercy of the Divine Providence, to administer to us whatever is proper for the cure of so great an evil. If we make our selves sick, that is our own folly, and no fault of the Physician; but we are beholding to him if he recover us, though it be by very bitter and unpleasing means. All temporal Judgments which are short of Death, are properly Medicinal; and if we will but suffer them to have their kindly operation upon us, they will work a cure; and how grievous and distasteful soever they may be for the present, they will prove mercies and blessings in the issue. Upon this account David reckons afflictions among the happy blessings of his life, Psal. 119. 72. It is good for me (says he) that I have been afflicted; And he gives the reason of it in the same Psalms, ver. 67. Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now I have learnt thy precepts.

So that though all afflictions are Evils in themselves, yet they are good for us, because they discover to us our disease and tend to our cure. They are a sensible argument and conviction to us of the evil and danger of sin. We are commonly such fools as Solomon speaks of, who make a mock of sin; And like Children will be playing with the edge of it till it cut and wound us: We are not sufficiently sensible how great an evil it is till we come to feel the dismal effects and consequences of it. And therefore to rectify our apprehensions concerning it God makes us to suffer by it. Thus Elihu describes to us the happy effect of afflictions upon sinners, Job 36. 8, 9, 10. If they be bound in fetters and held in cords of affliction, then God sheweth them their work and their transgression that they have exceeded. He openeth also their ear to discipline and commandeth that they return from their iniquity. God doth but invite and intreat us by his mercies, but his Judgments have a more powerful and commanding voice. When he holds men in cords of affliction, then he openeth their ear to discipline. In prosperity we are many times incapable of counsel and instruction: but when we are under God's correcting hand then are we fit to be spoken withal.

Secondly. The Judgments of God are likewise proper for the preventing of far greater evils of the same kind; I mean farther punishments. In sending of temporal Judgments upon sinners, God usually proceeds with them by degrees. First he lets fly several single shots at them, and if upon these they will take warning and come in they may prevent the broad-sides and volleys of his wrath.

But the great advantage of all is, that temporal Judgments may prove to us the opportunities of preventing the miserable and unspeakable torments of a long Eternity. For all Judgments which are not final, leaving men a space of Repentance, have in them the mercy of a Reprieve, which by a serious and timely return to God may be improv'd into a Pardon.

Besides, that adversity and afflictions do usually dispose men, and put them into a fit temper for Repentance; They fix our minds and make us serious, and are apt to awaken us to consideration, and suggest to us such thoughts and meditations as these: If temporal evils be so grievous, how insupportable then will be the extream and endless torments of the next life? If in this day of God's grace and patience we sometimes meet with such severity, what may we not look for in the day of vengeance? If these drops of God's wrath which now and then fall upon sinners in this world, fill them with so much anguish and affliction, how deplorably miserable will those wretches be upon whom the storms of his fury shall fall? Who would would venture to continue in sin, when the greatest miseries and calamities which we feel in this life are but a small and inconsiderable earnest of those woful wages which sinners shall receive in the Day of Recompence ?

Thirdly, The Judgments of God are not only proper to these Ends, but in many cases very necessary. Our condition many times is such as to require this severe way of proceeding, because no other course that God hath taken, or can take with us, will probably do us good. God does not delight in the miseries and calamities of his Creatures, but we put him upon these extremities, or rather his own goodness and wisdom together do prompt and direct him to these harsh and rigorous ways. May be we have brought our selves into that dangerous state, and the malignity of our distemper is such that it is not to be remov'd without violent Physick, and that cannot be administred to us without making us deadly sick.

So that the Judgments of God which are many times abroad in the earth are nothing else but the wise Methods which the great Physician of the World uses for the cure of Mankind ; They are the Rods of his School and the Discipline of his Providence, that the inhabitants of the world may learn righteousness ; They are a merciful invention of Heaven to do men that good which many times nothing else will, and to work that blessed effect upon us which neither the wise counsels and admonitions of God's Word, nor his milder and gentler dealings with us can usually attain.

Thus we find in the Parable, Luke 15. that the Providence of God makes use of hunger and extreme necessity to bring home the Prodigal ; and by him our Saviour represents to us the temper of most sinners : For till we have spent that stock of mercies which God hath given us, till we come to be pinch'd with want and are ready to perish, we are not apt to entertain thoughts of returning to our Father.

It may be there are some sinners which are more tractable and easy to be reduced to goodness, that are not so headstrong and obstinate in their way but that they may be reclaimed by milder and softer means : But there are likewise a great many senseless and outrageous sinners, who are madly and furiously bent upon their own ruin : Now to treat these fairly, with the allurements of kindness and the gentle arts of persuasion, would be to no purpose : The only way that is left of dealing with them, is rigour and severity. When sinners are thus besides themselves, something that looks like Cruelty is perhaps the greatest mercy that can be shown to them ; nothing so proper for such persons as a dark Room, and a spare Diet, and severe Usage ; A rod for the back of fools ; as the Wise-man speaks.

Thus have I done with the first thing I propounded to speak to, namely The merciful design and intention of God in sending Judgments upon a People, which is to bring them to Repentance, and by Repentance to prevent their Ruin. I proceed to the

II. The Reason of the continuance of God's Judgments, because the People were not reclaimed by them ; therefore his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still, because the people turneth not to him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts.

And how can it be expected it should be otherwise, when incorrigibility under the Judgments of God is a provocation of so high a nature, a sign of a most deprav'd and incorrigible temper, and an argument of the greatest obstinacy in evil ? Upon this account we find that the Holy Spirit of God in Scripture brands Abaz as a singular and remarkable sort of sinner, (2 Chron. 28. 22.) because in the time of his distress he sinned yet more against the Lord. The longer Pharaoh and the Egyptians resisted the Judgments of God the more still they were harden'd, and the more they were plagu'd : Lev. 26. 22. after God had there threatned his people with several fore Judgments for their sins, he tells them, that if they will not be reform'd by all these things he will punish them seven times more, and after that seven times more for their sins : And if in such a case the just God will punish seven times more, we may safely conclude that sins after Judgments are seven times greater.

So likewise Deut. 28. after a long and dreadful Catalogue of Curses there denounc'd against the People of Israel in case of their disobedience, God at last threatens them with a Foreign Enemy that should distress them in their gates ; And if they would not be reclaim'd by all this, he tells them, that he hath still more and greater Judgments for them in store, v. 58, & 59. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law, that thou mayest fear this great and glorious Name, THE LORD THY GOD, then the Lord will make thy Plagues wonderful. If we be of so strange and monstrous a disposition as to grow worse under Judgments, God will deal with us after an unusual and prodigious manner, he will make our plagues wonderful.

This incorrigible temper the Prophets of old every where make the great aggravation of the sin of Israel, Isa. 1. 4, 5. Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity; and after a great many other expressions to set forth what heinous sinners they were, he sums up all in this, That they were so far from being reform'd by the several Judgments of God which had been inflicted upon them, that they were the worse for correction; Why should they be stricken any more : they will revolt more and more. So likewise, Hos. 7. 9, 10, Ephraim, though brought very low, is represented as of the same refractory temper, Strangers have devour'd his strength, &c. But they do not return to the Lord, nor seek him for all this. I will mention but one Text more (and methinks it bears but too near a resemblance with our own condition, both in respect of the Judgments which have been upon us, and our carriage under them) Amos 4. where God upbraids his people several times with this as the great aggravation of their sins, That they continued impenitent under all those terrible Judgments of God which had been upon them; I have sent among you (says he) Famine, and then Pestilence, and then the Sword, and last of all a terrible Fire which had almost utterly consumed them, verse 11. I have overthrown some of you as I overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and ye were as a firebrand pluck'd out of the burning; yet have ye not returned unto me. And because all these Judgments had not been effectual to reclaim them, He tells them that he was resolved to go on in punishing; and therefore he bids them to expect it and prepare themselves for it, v. 12. Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel; and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel. When God hath begun to punish a people and they are not amended by it, the honour of his Justice is concerned to proceed, and not to give over. By every sin that we commit we offend God, but if he smite us, and we stand out against him, then do we contend with him and strive for mastery. And when the sinner is upon these stubborn and insolent terms, then prepare to meet thy God; A bitter Sarcasm, as if man could be a match for God, and a poor weak creature in any wise able to encounter him to whom Power belongs. There's a severe expression concerning God's dealing with such perverse and obstinate sinners, Psalms 18. 26. With the froward thou wilt shew thy self froward, or, as the words may more properly and conveniently be rendred, with the froward, thou wilt wrestle. God will not be outbrav'd by the sins of men, and therefore if we continue impenitent we have all the reason in the world to expect that God will go on to punish.

But to come nearer to our selves and to consider our own case, which is in truth so very bad that we may almost be afraid to consider it. The wise and good God, like a prudent and indulgent Father, hath used all the arts of his providence towards this Nation to reclaim us. He hath invited us to him by many blessings, but we would not come; so (to borrow an apt illustration from a great Divine of our own) we have forced him to deal with us as Abraham did with Joab; he sent one civil message to him after another, but he would not come; at last he sets on fire his corn-field to try whether that would bring him: This course God hath taken with us, we would not be perswaded by messages of kindness (by his many blessings and favours) to return to him, and therefore hath he sent amongst us the terrible messengers of his wrath. First we were engag'd in a Foreign War, and tho' God was pleas'd to give us some considerable success in it, yet it seems our provocations were so great that he was resolv'd to punish us. He was loth to let us fall into the hands of men, and therefore he took the work into his own hand, and punish'd us himself, by sending a Pestilence amongst us, the most and most destructive that hath befallen this Nation for many Ages. But we did not upon this, return to him, and therefore his fierce anger kindled a fearful Fire amongst us, which hath laid the honour of our Nation, one of the greatest and richest Cities in the World in the dust; and that by so sudden and irresistible, so dismal and amazing a devastation, as in all the circumstances of it is scarce to be parallel'd in any History.

Bishop Saunderson.

I doubt not but most of us were mightily affected with this Judgment whilst it was upon us. So astonishing a calamity could not but make us open our eyes a little, and awaken us to consideration; Even the rich man in the Gospel, though he had all his life-time been immers'd in sensuality, yet could not but lift up his eyes when he was in flames.

And surely God expects that such Judgments as these should not only rouse us a little for the present, but that they should have a permanent operation and effect upon us, and work a thorough and lasting reformation amongst us; but yet I am afraid that this dreadful Fire hath had no other influence upon us but what it uses to have upon Metals, which are only melted by it for the present, but when the Fire is removed they suddenly cool and return to their former hardness.

One would have thought that the sense of such a calamity as this should have remain'd longer upon us. Methinks God seem'd to say to us after this Judgment as he did once to Jerusalem, Zeph. 3. 7. Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; but we (like them) have been but the more forward to provoke him, (they rose early and corrupted their doings) we have after all this, hardened our hearts from his fear and refused to return. And therefore God is now come to one of his last Judgments, Our Enemy distresseth us in our Gates. God hath begun to let us fall into the hands of men, and by giving our enemies a sudden and fatal advantage upon us, had smitten us with a Breach great as the Sea.

These were terrible calamities indeed to come so thick and so swiftly upon us, like desolation, and as a Whirlwind. Such a quick succession of Judgments, treading almost upon one anothers heels, does but too plainly declare that God is highly incens'd against us. For surely these are not the wounds of a Friend, but the terrible assaults of an Enemy. They do not look like the displeasure of a Father, but the severity of a Judge, not like visitation, but like vengeance.

And besides these more visible Judgments upon the Nation, we are by a secret curse of God insensibly decayed in our riches and strength. We are, I know not how, strangely impoverish'd in the midst of plenty, and almost undone by victories. And which adds to our misery, few among us seem to be sufficiently sensible of it, or to take any notice by what silent steps and imperceptible degrees (like gray hairs and the infirmities of old age) poverty and weakness are stealing in upon us: so that we may fitly apply to our selves what the Prophet says of Ephraim, Hos. 7. 9. Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not; yea grey hairs are here and there upon him, and yet he knoweth it not.

And our condition as we are a Church, is not much better. How is this famous Protestant Church of ours, which was once the Admiration of her Friends and the envy of her Enemies, sunk and declin'd in her glory, and reduc'd into a very narrow compass? So that she is left like the Daughter of Sion, (Isa. 1. 8.) as a Cottage in a Vineyard, as a Lodge in a Garden of Cucumbers, as a besieged City: straitned and hemm'd in on all parts, by the impudence of Atheism, the insolencies of Popery, and the turbulency of Faction; all which do every day visibly and apace gain ground upon her, and distress her on every side; just as the condition of the Jewish Church is described before my Text, The Syrians before, and the Philistines behind, both ready to devour Israel with open mouth.

And surely it is not for nothing that God hath brought us thus low, that he hath sent all these Judgments upon us, and that he doth still threaten us with more: The reason is plain, because we are still impenitent; The people turned not to him that smiteth them. There hath been almost an universal degeneracy amongst us, and there is still, I fear, a general impenitency, the people turneth not, &c. Notwithstanding all those dismal Calamities which our eyes have seen, wickedness doth still prevail in the Nation and overflows it like a mighty Deluge, so as to overspread all ranks and orders of men: And not only so, but is grown impudent and appears with a whores forehead; all kind of modesty seems to have forsaken the sinners of this Age.

And is this Repentance? to live in filthy and abominable lusts, to tear the Name of God by horrid Oaths and Imprecations; to be Atheistical and prophane, and by an unexampled boldness to turn the Word of God it self and the gravest and most serious matters of Religion into Raillery? This is not to turn to him that smiteth us, but to turn upon him and smite him again. And yet such crying and clamorous sins as these are almost come to be the garb and fashion of the Nation, and to be accounted the wit and gallantry of the Age.

And shall not God visit for these things? shall not his soul be avenged on such a Nation as this? Yes, he hath visited; and 'tis for these things that the wrath of God hath been so manifestly revealed from Heaven against us. For this cause misery and destruction have been in our way, and the way of peace have we not known, because there hath been no fear of God before our eyes. Hence it is that God's anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still, because the people turneth not to him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the Lord of Hosts.

But do not we seek God? Do we not every day acknowledge our sins to him, and pray that he would have mercy upon us miserable offenders, and grant that we may hereafter live godly, righteous, and sober lives? Do not we seek the Lord of Hosts, when we continually beg of him to save save and deliver us from the hand of our enemies? Indeed we do thus seek him, but we should first turn to him; otherwise if we hope our prayers will prevail with God to do us good we do but trust in lying words. If we go on in our sins our very prayers will become sin, and encrease our guilt: For the prayer of the wicked (that is, of one that is resolved to continue so) is an abomination to the Lord. Can we think it reasonable for men to address themselves to God after this manner? Lord, though we have no mind to turn to thee, yet we pray thee turn away thine anger from us; though we are resolved not to forsake our sins, yet we make no doubt but that thy mercy will forgive them; give peace in our time, O Lord, that we may pursue our lusts securely and without disturbance: Deliver us we pray thee from the hands of our Enemies, that we may sin against thee without fear all the days of our lives. Would it not be horrible impudence and impiety to put up any such petitions to God? And yet this, I fear, is the most genuine interpretation of our prayers and lives compar'd together.

And if this be our case, what can we expect? God may give us peace with our Enemies, but then he will find out some other way to punish us: For if we still persist in our Atheism and Prophaneness, in our contempt of God and of his holy Worship, in our scorn and derision of Religion, in our abominable lusts and horrid impieties, what can we look for but that God should be angry with us until he have consumed us and there be no escaping? Nothing can be a sadder presage of our ruin, than not to be reformed by those dreadful Judgments of God which have been upon us. This was that which brought final destruction upon the Egyptians in the Red Sea, that they had held out so obstinately against so many Judgments, and had been hardened under ten Plagues. To be impenitent after such severe corrections, is to poison our selves with that which is intended for our Physick, and by a miraculous kind of obstinacy to turn the Rods of God into Serpents.

And now perhaps some will be apt to say, That these are things fit for men of our Profession, because it is our Trade and we live by it. Indeed they are so, things very fit to be said, and withal very fit for every one to consider, who professeth himself a Christian, and who owns the belief of a God, and a Providence, and another World. And if they be so, where is the fault? Is it, that there is a peculiar Profession of men whose proper work it is to tell men of their faults, and to persuade them to reform? No, there is no harm in that neither. Is it then that they live by their Profession, and yet would be believed? Yes, there lies the force of the objection. To which I shall only at present return this answer, That men do not argue thus in other cases, when yet the reason seems to be the very same. In matters that concern their Bodies and Estates, the Physician and the Lawyer are believed, though it is verily thought that they live by their Professions, as well as we; why then should men deal so partially and unequally only with their Souls? were we not moved by better principles, and swayed by the arguments and considerations of another world, we might, for ought we know, with every whit as much advantage to our selves suffer men to be quiet and to sleep on securely in their sins; If we did not believe our selves in these matters, what should hinder but that we might with as much gravity and confidence cry Peace, Peace, when there is no Peace; and flatter men with as much art and with as good a grace, as any of those can do who live delicately and wear soft cloathing?

But we believe the threatnings of God, and therefore do we speak: We know the terror of the Lord, and therefore we endeavour to perswade men. And Oh! that we could perswade them to break off their sins by righteousness, and to turn every one from the evil of his way, and from the violence that is in his hands: And then who can tell but God may turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger that we perish not?

The good God make us all wise to know in this our day the things that belong to our peace, before they be hid from our eyes; and grant that we may all turn to him that hath smitten us, by Repentance and real Reformation of our lives; that God may be pleased to turn away his Anger from us, and to stretch out his hand for our Deliverance; which we humbly beg of him for the sake of Christ. To whom with the Father, &c.

Of the Deceitfulness and Danger of Sin.

H E B. III. 13.

Exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

AMong the many considerations which the Word of God and our own Reason offer to us to discourage us from sin this is none of the least considerable, that he that once engages in a vicious course is in danger to proceed in it, being insensibly trained on from one degree of wickedness to another; so that the farther he advances, his retreat grows more difficult, because he is still pushed on with a greater violence. All error, as well of practice as of judgment is endless; and when a man is once out of the way, the farther he shall go on the harder he will find it to return into the right way. Therefore there is great reason why men should be so often cautioned against the beginnings of sin; or if they have been so unhappy as to be engaged in a bad course, why they should be warned to break it off presently and without delay, lest by degrees they be hardened in their wickedness, till their case grow desperate and past remedy. And to this purpose is the Apostle's advice here in the Text, Exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

From which words I shall

1. Endeavour to represent to you the growing danger of sin, and by what steps and degrees bad habits do insensibly gain upon men and harden them in an evil course.

2. I shall from this consideration take occasion to shew what great reason and need there is to warn men of this danger, and to endeavour to rescue them out of it. And then

3. I shall apply my self to the duty here in the Text, of exhorting men with all earnestness and importunity to resist the beginnings of sin; or if they be already entred upon a wicked course, to make hast out of this dangerous state; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

I. First, I shall endeavour to represent to you the growing danger of sin, and by what steps and degrees bad habits do insensibly gain upon men and harden them in an evil course. All the actions of men which are not natural, but proceed from deliberation and choice have something of difficulty in them when we begin to practise them, because at first we are rude and unexercised in that way: but after we have practised them awhile they become more easy: and when they are easy, we begin to take pleasure in them: and when they please us we do them frequently, and think we cannot repeat them too often; and by frequency of Acts a thing grows into a habit: and a confirm'd habit is a second kind of nature: and so far as any thing is natural so far it is necessary, and we can hardly do otherwise; nay, we do it many times when we do not think of it. For by virtue of a habit a man's mind or body becomes pliable and inclined to such kind of actions as it is accustomed to, and does as it were stand bent and charged such a way; so that being touched and awakened by the least occasion, it breaks forth into such or such actions. And this is the natural progress of all habits indifferently considered, whether they be good or bad.

But vicious habits have a greater advantage, and are of a quicker growth. For the corrupt nature of man is a rank soil to which vice takes easily, and wherein it thrives apace. The mind of man hath need to be prepared for piety and virtue; it must be cultivated to that end, and ordered with great care and pains: But vices are weeds that grow wild and spring up of themselves. They are in some sort natural to the Soil, and therefore they need not to be planted and watered, 'tis sufficient if they be neglected and let alone. So that vice having this advantage from our nature, it is no wonder if occasion and temptation easily draw it forth.

But that we may take a more distinct account of the progress of sin and by what steps vice gains upon men, I shall mark out to you some of the chief and more observable gradations of it.

1. Men begin with lesser sins. No man is perfectly wicked on the sudden. Sunt quædam vitiorum elementa; there are certain rudiments of vice, in which men are first entred, and then they proceed by degrees to greater and fouler crimes. For sin hath its infancy and tender age, and its several states of growth. Men are not so totally degenerate but at first they are ashamed when they venture upon a known sin, though it be but small in comparison. Hence it is that at first men are very solicitous to palliate and hide their faults by excuses, but after they have frequently committed them, and they grow too visible to be concealed, then they will attempt to defend and maintain them; and from thence they come by degrees to take pleasure in them, and in those that do the same things.

2. After men have been some time initiated in these lesser sins, by the commission of these they are prepared and disposed for greater; such as lay waste the conscience, and offer more violence to the light and reason of their minds. By degrees a sinner may grow to be so hardy as to attempt those crimes which at first he could not have had the thought of committing without horror. Like Hazael, who when he was told by the Prophet Elisha what barbarous cruelties he should one day be guilty of towards the People of Israel when he should come to be King of Syria, he abominated the very thought and mention of them; Is thy servant a dog that he should do this great thing? and yet for all this we know he did it afterwards. 'Tis true indeed when a sinner is first tempted to the commission of a more gross and notorious sin, his conscience is apt to boggle and start at it, he doth it with great difficulty and regret; the terrors of his own mind and the fears of damnation are very troublesome to him; But this trouble wears off by degrees, and that which was at first difficult does by frequent practice and long custom become tolerable.

3. When a man hath proceeded thus far he begins to put off shame, one of the greatest restraints from sin which God hath laid upon humane nature. And when this curb once falls off, there is then but little left to restrain and hold us in. At first setting out upon a vicious course men are a little nice and delicate, like young Travellers, who at first are offended at every speck of dirt dirt that lights upon them; but after they had been accustomed to it, and have travell'd a good while in foul ways, it ceaseth to be troublesome to them to be dash'd and bespatter'd.

4. After this, it is possible, men may come to approve their vices. For if mens Judgments do not command their wills and restrain their lusts, it is great odds in process of time the vicious inclinations of their Wills will put a false byass upon their Judgments; And then it is no wonder if men come to boast of their sins and to glory in their vices, when they are half perswaded that they are generous and commendable qualities. Thus much is certain in experience, that some men have gotten so perfect a habit of some sins as not to know and take notice many times when they commit them. As in the case of swearing, which some men have so accustomed themselves to, that without any consideration they do of course put an oath or two into every sentence that comes from them. And it hath been observed of some persons that they have told an untruth so often, and averr'd it with so much confidence, till at last, forgetting that it was a lye at first, they themselves have in process of time believed it to be true.

5. From this pitch of wickedness men commonly proceed to draw in others and to make Profelytes to their vices. Now this signifies not only a great approbation of sin but even a fondness for it, when men are not content to sin upon their own single accounts, but they must turn zealous agents and factors for the Devil; become teachers of sin and ministers of unrighteousness, and are factiously concerned to propagate together with their Atheistical principles their lewd practices, and to draw Followers and Disciples after them.

And when they are arrived to this height it is natural for them to hate reproof, and to resist the means of their recovery; to quarrel against all the remedies that shall be offer'd to them, and to count those their greatest enemies who have so much courage and kindness as to deal plainly with them, and to tell them the truth. And then all the wise counsels of God's Word, and the most gentle and prudent admonitions in the world, when they are tendered to such persons, serve only to provoke their scorn or their passion. And surely that man is in a sad case that is so disposed, that in all probability he will turn the most effectual means of his amendment into the occasion of new and greater sins.

But that which renders the condition of such persons much more sad and deplorable is, that all this while God is withdrawing his grace from them. For every degree of sin causeth the Holy Spirit of God with all his blessed motions and assistances to retire farther from them: And not only so, but the Devil (that evil Spirit which the Scripture tells us, works effectually in the children of disobedience) does according as men improve in wickedness get a greater and a more establish'd dominion over them. For as they who are reclaim'd from an evil course are said in Scripture to be rescued out of the snare of the Devil, and to be turned from the power of Satan unto God; so on the other hand, the farther men advance in the ways of sin so much the farther they depart from God, from under the influence of his grace, and the care of his protection and providence; and they give the Devil (who is not apt to neglect his advantages upon them) greater opportunities every day to gain the firmer possession of them.

And thus by passing from one degree of sin to another, the sinner becomes harden'd in his wickedness and does insensibly slide into that in which without a miraculous grace of God he is like for ever to continue. For the mind of man after it hath been long accustomed to evil, and is once grown old in vice, is almost as hard to be rectified as it is to recover a body bowed down with age to its first straightness. The Scripture speaks of some that commit sin with greediness, and that drink up iniquity as the Ox drinketh up water, with a mighty appetite and thirst, as if they were not able to refrain from it. And to express to us the miserable condition of such persons it representeth them as perfect slaves to their vices, that have sold themselves to do wickedness, and are led captive by Satan at his pleasure. And when men have brought themselves to this pass, they are almost under a fatal necessity of sinning on. I do not believe that God hath absolutely predestinated any man to ruin, but by a long course of wilful sins men may in a sort predestinate themselves to it, and chuse wickedness so long till it almost becomes necessary, and till they have brought themselves under all imaginable disadvantage of contributing any thing towards their own recovery; being bound in the chains of their own wickedness and held in the cords of their sins: Nay like Sampson, not only bound by those lusts which they have embraced, but likewise robbed of all their strength whereby they should break loose from those bonds. God grant that none of us may ever have the woful experience of it: but I am horribly afraid it is too true, that a sinner may arrive to that confirm'd state of impiety as almost totally to lose his liberty to do better: He may attain to that perfection in vice, as to continue to be a bad man upon the same account that the Historian extravagantly says Cato was virtuous, Quia aliter esse non potuit; because he could not be otherwise. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the Leopard his spots? It is the Scripture comparison, to set forth to us how hard a thing it is for a man to be brought to goodness that hath been long accustomed to do evil. He that is thus deeply engaged and entangled in a bad course will scarce ever have the heart and resolution to break loose from it unless he be forced violently out of it by some severe affliction, by a sharp sickness, or by a terrible calamity, or by the present apprehensions of death and the terrors of a future Judgment. Nor will these be effectual neither to change such a person, without an extraordinary degree of God's grace; which considering the greatness and the continuance of his provocations, he hath very little reason to expect or hope God should ever bestow upon him. Wretched man! that hast brought thy self into this miserable state, out of which there is but just a possibility left of thy being rescued; that hast neglected thy disease so long till it is almost too late to apply remedies; that hast provoked God so far and sinned to such a prodigious height, that thou hast reason almost to despair both of his grace and assistance for thy repentance, and of his mercy for thy pardon. I speak not this to discourage even the greatest of sinners from repentance. Though their case be extremely difficult, yet it is not quite desperate. For those things which seem impossible with men, are possible with God. But I speak it on purpose to stop sinners in their course and to discourage men from going on in sin till they be hardened through the deceitfulness of it, and have brought themselves by insensible degrees into that dangerous and difficult state which I have all this while been representing to you. I come now to the

II. Second thing I propounded, which was from this consideration to shew what great reason and need there is to warn men of this danger, and to endeavour to rescue them out of it. The Apostle directs this precept to all Christians, Exhort one another daily, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. That is, lest you be hardened by degrees and finally ruined. And surely every man is concern'd to do what in him lies to rescue his brother her from so imminent a danger. It is every ones place and duty to endeavour to save those whom he sees ready to perish: Much more does it concern those who are peculiarly set apart for this work, I mean the Ministers of God's holy Word, whose proper office and business it is to exhort and warn every man day and night, who are set as watchmen to the house of Israel, and whose blood in case any of them miscarry through our neglect shall be required at our hands. So that if we believe the threatnings of God which we declare to others, if we have any apprehension of the dreadful misery of another world, if we have any sense of our own duty and safety, if we have any pity for perishing Souls, we cannot but be very importunate with sinners to look about them, and to consider their danger, and to bethink themselves seriously of the miserable event and issue of a wicked life: We cannot but be earnest with them to break off their sins, and to give glory to God by repentance, before darkness come and their feet stumble upon the dark mountains. When we are convinced more fully than we can desire, that misery and destruction are in their ways, when we plainly see the evil day hastening towards them apace, and destruction coming upon them like a Whirlwind; heaven above threatening them, and hell beneath moving her self to meet them at their coming. can we possibly do less than to warn such persons to flee from the wrath which is to come, and out of a sad apprehension of the danger that hangs over them, to caution them against it, and endeavour with all our might to rescue them from the misery which is ready to swallow them up? Indeed one would be apt to think it a very vain thing to dissuade men from being miserable, to use great vehemency of argument to hinder a man from leaping into a pit, or from running into the fire; to take great pains to argue a sick man into a desire of health, and to make a prisoner contented to have his shackles knock'd off, and to be set at liberty: one would think all this were perfectly needless: But yet we see in experience sin is a thing of so stupifying a nature as to make men insensible of their danger, although it be so near, and so terrible. It is not so with men in other cases: When we labour of any bodily distemper, it is much to find a man that is patient of his disease; but when our souls are mortally sick, that we should be contented with our condition, and fond of our disease, that we should fight with our Physician, and spurn at our remedy; this surely is the height of distraction, for men to be thus absolutely bent upon their own ruin, and to resolve to make away themselves for ever. And we who are the Messengers of God to men must be born of the rocks, and have hearts harder than the nether millstone, if we can patiently look on and endure to see men perish without using our utmost endeavour to save them. Therefore I shall in the

III. Third and last place apply my self to this work of Exhortation, the duty commanded here in the text. And here I shall address my self to two sorts of persons:

1. To perswade those who are yet innocent of great crimes to resist the beginnings of sin, lest it gain upon them by degrees.
2. To press and urge those that are already entred upon a wicked course, that they would make haste out of this dangerous state; lest at last they be hardned through the deceitfulness of sin.

1. To perswade those who are yet in some measure innocent, to resist the beginnings of sin, lest it gain upon them by degrees. Vice may easily be discouraged at first. 'Tis like a slight disease, when it is easy to be cured, but dangerous to be neglected. The first approaches of sin and temptation are usually very modest, but if they be not discountenanced they will soon grow upon us and make bolder attempts. Every inclination to sin, every compliance with temptation is a going down the hill: While we keep our standing we may command our selves, but if we once put our selves into violent motion downward we cannot stop when we please.

Omne in præcipiti vitium stetit—

Seneca.

All Vice stands upon a Precipice, and to engage in any sinful course is to run down the hill. And if we once let loose the Propensions of our Nature we cannot gather in the reins and govern them as we please: If we give way to presumptuous sins they will quickly get dominion over us. It is much easier not to begin a bad course than to put a stop to our selves after we have begun it. Stulta res est nequitiae modus, 'Tis a fond thing for a man to think to set bounds to himself in any thing that is bad, to resolve to sin in number, weight and measure, with great temperance and discretion, and government of himself: that he will commit this sin and then give over, entertain but this one temptation, and after that he will shut the door and admit of no more. Our corrupt hearts when they are once in motion, they are like the raging Sea, to which we can set no bounds, nor say to it, Hitherto thou shalt go and no further. Sin is very cunning and deceitful, and does strangely gain upon men when they once give way to it. It is of a very bewitching nature, and hath strange arts of address and insinuation. The giving the way to a small sin does marvellously prepare and dispose a man for a greater. By giving way to one little vice after another the strongest resolution may be broken. For tho' it be not to be snapt in sunder at once, yet by this means it is untwisted by degrees, and then 'tis easy to break it one thread after another. 'Tis scarce imaginable of what force one sinful action is to produce more: For sin is very teeming and fruitful; and tho' there be no blessing annex'd to it, yet it does strangely increase and multiply. As there is a connection of one virtue with another, so vices are link'd together, and one sin draws many after it. When the Devil tempts a man to commit any wickedness he does as it were lay a long train of sins, and if the first temptation take, they give fire to one another. Let us then resist the beginnings of sin, because then we have most power, and sin hath least. This is the first.

2. To persuade those who are already engaged in a wicked course, to make hast out of this dangerous state. And there is no other way to get out of it but by repentance, that is, by a real change and reformation of our lives; for herein the nature of true repentance does consist. And without this all the devices which men use to get rid of the guilt of their sins are vain and to no purpose. 'Tis not to be done by a formal confession and absolution, nor by a long pilgrimage, nor by one of those little Tickets from Rome which they call Indulgences. A wise man would much sooner persuade himself that God will not at all punish the sins of men, than that he would forgive them so easily, and receive great offenders to favour upon such slight terms. Let us not deceive our selves, there is one plain way to Heaven, by sincere repentance and a holy life, and there is no getting thither by tricks. And without this change of our lives all our sorrow and fasting and humiliation for sin, which at this season we make profession of, will signify nothing. There is an excellent passage of the Son of Sirach to this purpose, Eccclus. 34. 25, 26. He that washeth himself after the touching of a dead body, if he touch it again what availeth his washing? So is it with a man that fasteth for his sins, and goeth again and doth the same things, who will hear his prayer, or what doth his humbling profit him? There is this plain difference between trouble for sin and Repentance; sorrow only respects sins past, but repentance is chiefly preventive of sins for the future: And God therefore requires that we should be troubled for our sins, that we may resolve to leave them.

And to oblige us to a vigorous and speedy resolution in this matter, let us consider that we have engaged too far already in a bad course; and that every day our retreat will grow more dangerous and difficult; that by our delays we make work for a sadder and longer repentance than that which we do now so studiously decline: Let us consider likewise, that our life is concerned in the case; that except we repent and turn, we shall dye: And that the evil day may overtake us while we are deliberating whether we should avoid it or not; that vice is so far from being mortified by age, that by every days continuance in it we increase the power of it; and so much strength as we add to our disease we certainly take from our selves; And this is a double weakning of us, when we do not only lose our own strength, but the enemy gets it and employs it against us. The deceitfulness of sin appears in nothing more than in keeping men off from this necessary work, and persuading them to hazard all upon the unreasonable hopes of the mercy of God, and the uncertain resolution of a future repentance. I do not think there are any here but do either believe, or at least are vehemently afraid that there is another life after this; and that a wicked life, without repentance must unavoidably make them miserable in another world; and that to cast off all to a death-bed repentance, puts things upon a mighty hazard. And they have a great deal of reason to think so: For alas, how unfit are most men at such a time for so great and serious a work as repentance is, when they are unfit for the smallest matters: And how hard is it for any man then to be assured of the truth and reality of his repentance, when there is no sufficient opportunity to make trial of the sincerity of it. I deny not the possibility of the thing; but it is much to be feared that the repentance of a dying sinner is usually but like the sorrow of a malefactor, when he is ready to be turned off; he is not troubled that he hath offended the Law, but he is troubled that he must dye. For when death is ready to seize upon the sinner, and he feels himself dropping into destruction, no wonder if then the man's stomach come down, and he be contented to be saved; and seeing he must stay no longer in this world, be desirous to go to Heaven rather than Hell; and in order to that, be ready to give some testimonies of his repentance: no wonder if when the rack is before him this extort confession from him, and if in hopes of a pardon he make many large promises of amendment, and freely declare his resolution of a new and better life. But then it is the hardest thing in the world to judge whether any thing of all this that is done under so great a fear and force be real. For a sick man as he hath lost an appetite to the most pleasant meats and drinks, so likewise his sinful pleasures and fleshly lusts are at the same time nauseous to him, and for the very same reason: For Sickness having altered the temper of his body, he hath not at that time any gust or relish for these things. And now he is resolved against sin, just as a man that hath no stomach is resolved against meat. But if the fit were over, and death would but raise his Siege and remove his quarter: a little farther from him, it is to be feared that his former appetite would soon return to him, and that he would sin with the same eagerness he did before. Besides, how can we expect that God should accept of his repentance at such a time, when we are conscious to our selves that we did resolve to put off our repentance till we could sin no longer? Can we think it fit for any man to say thus to God in a dying hour ; “ Lord, now the world leaves me, I come to thee. I pray thee give me eternal life, who could never afford to give thee one good day of my life: Grant that I may live with thee and enjoy thee for ever, who could never endure to think upon thee. I must confess that I could never be perswaded to leave my sins out of love to thee, but now I repent of them for fear of thee : I am conscious to my self that I would never do any thing for thy sake, but yet I hope thy goodness is such that thou wilt forgive all the ungodliness and unrighteousness of my life, and accept of this forced submission which I now make to thee. I pray thee do not at last frustrate and disappoint me in this design which I have laid, of sinning while I live and getting to Heaven when I dye.” Surely no man can think it fit to say thus to God ; and yet I am afraid this is the true interpretation of many a man’s repentance who hath deferr’d it till he comes to dye. I do not speak this to discourage repentance, even at that time. It is always the best thing we can do. But I would by all means discourage men from putting off so necessary a work till then. ’Tis true indeed when ’tis come to this and a sinner findshimself going out of the world, if he have been so foolish and so cruel to himself as to put things upon this last hazard, repentance is now the only thing that is left for him to do ; this is his last remedy and the only refuge he has to fly to: And this is that which the Minister in this case ought by all means to put the man upon, and earnestly to perswade him to. But when we speak to men in other circumstances, that are well and in health, we dare not for all the world encourage them to venture their souls upon such an uncertainty. For to speak the best of it, it is a very dangerous remedy, especially when men have designedly contriv’d to rob God of the service of their best days, and to put him off with a few unprofitable sighs and tears at the hour of death. I desire to have as large apprehensions of the mercy of God as any man, but withal, I am very sure that he is the hardest to be imposed upon of any one in the World. And no man that hath any worthy apprehensions of the Deity can imagine him to be so easy, as to forgive men upon the least word and intimation of their minds, and to have such a fondness for offenders as would reflect upon the prudence of any Magistrate and Governor upon Earth. God grant that I may sincerely endeavour to live a holy and virtuous like, and may have the comfort of that when I come to dye: And that I may never be so unwise as to venture all my hopes of a blessed eternity upon a death-bed repentance.

I will conclude all with those excellent sayings of the Son of Syrach (Eccles. 5. 6, 7. 16. 11, 12. 18. 21, 22.) Say not, God’s mercy is great, and he will be pacified for the multitude of my sins. For mercy and wrath is with him ; he is mighty to forgive, and to pour out displeasure: And as his mercy is great, so are his corrections also. Therefore make no tarrying to turn to the Lord, and put not off from day to day : for suddenly shall the wrath of the Lord come forth, and in thy security thou shalt be destroyed. Humble thy self before thou be sick, and in the time of sins shew repentance. Let nothing hinder thee to pay thy vows in due time, and defer not till death to be justified.

S E R M O N XI.

The Hazard of being Saved in the Church of Rome.

1 C O R. III. 15.

But he himself shall be saved, yet so as by Fire.

THE Context is thus. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise Master-builder, I have laid the Foundation, and another buildeth thereon: but let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble, every man's work shall be made manifest, for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire, and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burnt, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire.

In these words the Apostle speaks of a sort of persons, who held indeed the foundation of Christianity, but built upon it such doctrines or practices as would not bear the trial; which he expresses to us by wood, hay, and stubble, which are not proof against the Fire. Such a person, the Apostle tells us, hath brought himself into a very dangerous state, though he would not deny the possibility of his salvation; He himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire.

That by fire here is not meant the fire of Purgatory, as some pretend (who would be glad of any shadow of a Text of Scripture to countenance their own dreams) I shall neither trouble you nor my self to manifest; since the Particle of similitude [ως] plainly shews that the Apostle did not intend an escape out of the fire literally, but like to that which men make out of a House or Town that is on fire. Especially since very learned persons of the Church of Rome do acknowledge that Purgatory cannot be concluded from this Text, nay all that Estius contends for from this place is, that it cannot be concluded from hence that there is no Purgatory; which we never pretended, but only that this Text doth not prove it.

It is very well known that this is a Proverbial phrase used not only in Scripture, but in prophane Authors to signify a narrow escape out of a great danger. He shall be saved, yet so as by fire, διὰ πυρός, out of the fire. Just as δι' ὕδατος is used 1 Pet. 3. 20. where the Apostle speaking of the eight persons of Noah's family who escap'd the flood, διασωθέντες δι' ὕδατος, they escaped out of the water. So here this phrase is to be rendred in the Text, he himself shall escape, yet so as out of the fire. The like expression you have, Amos 4. 11. I have pluck'd them as a firebrand out of the fire. And Jude 23. Others save with fear, plucking them out of the fire. All which expressions signify the greatness of the danger and the difficulty of escaping it; as one who when his house at midnight is set on fire, and being suddenly wak'd leaps out of his bed, and runs naked out of the doors, taking nothing that is within along with him, but employing his whole care to save his body from the flames, as S. Chrysostom upon another occasion expresth it. And so the Roman Orator (who it is likely did not think of Purgatory) used this phrase; Quo ex judicio, velut ex incendio, nudus effugit: From which Judgment or Sentence he escaped* † Arifides. naked, as it were out of a burning. And one of the Greek Orators † tells us, That to save a man out of the fire, was a common proverbial speech.

From the words thus explained, the Observation that naturally ariseth is this, That men may hold all the Fundamentals of Christian Religion, and yet may superadd other things whereby they may greatly endanger their salvation. What those things were which some among the Corinthians built upon the foundation of Christianity, whereby they endanger'd their Salvation, we may probably conjecture by what the Apostle reproves in this Epistle, as the tolerating of incestuous marriages, communicating in Idol Feasts, &c. And especially by the doctrine of the false Apostles, who at that time did so much disturb the peace of most Christian Churches, and who are so often and so severely reflected upon in this Epistle. And what their Doctrine was, we have an account, Acts 15. viz. that they imposed upon the Gentile Christians Circumcision, and the observation of the Jewish Law, teaching that unless they were circumcised, and kept the Law of Moses, they could not be saved. So that they did not only build these doctrines upon Christianity, but they made them equal with the Foundation, saying, that unless men believed and practised such things they could not be saved.

In speaking to this Observation, I shall reduce my discourse to these two Heads.

1. I shall present to you some Doctrines and Practices which have been built upon the Foundation of Christianity, to the great hazard and danger of mens salvation. And to be plain, I mean particularly the Church of Rome.

2. I shall enquire, whether our granting a possibility of salvation (tho with great hazard) to those in the communion of the Roman Church, and their denying it to us, be a reasonable argument and encouragement to any man to betake himself to that Church.

And there is the more reason to consider these things, when so many seducing Spirits are so active and busy to pervert men from the truth; and when we see every day so many men and their Religion so easily parted. For this reason these two Considerations shall be the subject of the following discourse.

I. First, We will consider some Doctrines and Practices which the Church of Rome hath built upon the foundation of Christianity, to the great hazard and danger of mens salvation. It is not denied by the most judicious Protestants, but that the Church of Rome do hold all the Articles of the Christian Faith which are necessary to salvation. But that which we charge upon them, as a just ground of our separation from them, is the imposing of new Doctrines and practices upon Christians as necessary to salvation, which were never taught by our Saviour, or his Apostles; and which are either directly contrary to the Doctrine of Christianity, or too apparently destructive of a good life. And I begin,

1. With their Doctrines. And because I have no mind to aggravate lesser matters, I will single out four or five points of Doctrine, which they have added to the Christian Religion, and which were neither taught by our Saviour and his Apostles, nor own'd in the first Ages of Christianity. And the First which I shall mention, and which being once admitted makes way for as many errors as they please to bring in, is their Doctrine of Infallibility.
 And

And this they are very stiff and peremptory in, tho they are not agreed among themselves where this Infallibility is seated ; whether in the Pope alone, or a Council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of Christians. But they are sure they have it, though they know not where it is.

And is this no prejudice against it ? Can any man think that this privilege was at first conferred upon the Church of Rome, and that Christians in all Ages did believe it, and had constant recourse to it for determining their differences, and yet that that very Church which hath enjoyed and used it so long should now be at a loss where to find it ? Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily, than that there should be such differences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending all differences.

There is not the least intimation in Scripture of this Privilege conferr'd upon the Roman Church, nor do the Apostles, in all their Epistles, ever so much as give the least direction to Christians to appeal to the Bishop of Rome for a determination of the many differences which even in those times happen'd among them. And it is strange they should be so silent in this matter, when there were so many occasions to speak of it, if our Saviour had plainly appointed such an Infallible Judge of controversies for this very end to decide the differences that should happen among Christians. It is strange that the Ancient Fathers in their disputes with Heretics should never appeal to this Judge ; nay, it is strange they should not constantly do it in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies. And this very consideration to a wise man is instead of a thousand arguments to satisfy him that in those times no such thing was believed in the world.

Now this Doctrine of Infallibility, if it be not true, is of so much the more pernicious consequence to Christianity, because the conceit of it does confirm them that think they have it, in all their other errors ; and gives them a pretence of assuming an authority to themselves to impose their own fancies and mistakes upon the whole Christian world.

2. Their Doctrine about Repentance, which consists in confessing their sins to the Priest ; which if it be but accompanied with any degree of contrition, does upon absolution received from the Priest put them into a state of salvation, tho they have lived the most lewd and debauch'd lives that can be imagin'd ; than which nothing can be more plainly destructive of a good life. For if this be true, all the hazard that the most wicked man runs of his salvation is only the danger of so sudden a death as gives him no space for confession and absolution. A case that happens so rarely, that any man that is strongly addicted to his lusts will be content to venture his salvation upon this hazard ; and all the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms.

3. The Doctrine of Purgatory ; By which they mean an estate of temporary punishments after this life, from which men may be released and translated into Heaven by the prayers of the living, and the Sacrifice of the Mass. That this Doctrine was not known in the Primitive Church, nor can be proved from Scripture, we have the free acknowledgment of as learned and eminent men as any of that Church ; which is to acknowledge that it is a superstructure upon the Christian Religion. And tho in one sense it be indeed a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity, considering the vast revenues which this Doctrine (and that of Indulgences, which depends upon it) brings into that Church ; yet I doubt not, but in the Apostles sense, it will be found to be hay and stubble. But how groundless soever it be, it is too gainful a Doctrine to be easily parted withal.

4. The Doctrine of Transubstantiation. A hard word, but I would to God that were the worst of it ; the thing is much more difficult. I have taken some pains to consider other Religions that have been in the world, and I must freely declare, that I never yet in any of them met with any Article or Proposition, imposed upon the belief of men, half so unreasonable and hard to be believed as this is : And yet this in the Romish Church is esteemed one of the most principal Articles of the Christian Faith ; tho there is no more certain foundation for it in Scripture, than for our Saviour's being substantially changed into all those things which are said of him, as that he is a rock, a vine, a door, and a hundred other things.

But this is not all. This Doctrine hath not only no certain Foundation in Scripture, but I have a far heavier charge against it, namely, that it undermines the very foundation of Christianity it self. And surely nothing ought to be admitted to be a part of the Christian Doctrine which destroys the reason of our belief of the whole. And that this Doctrine does so, will appear evidently, if we consider what was the main argument which the Apostles used to convince the world of the truth of Christianity ; and that was this, That our blessed Saviour, the Author of this Doctrine, wrought such and such miracles, and particularly that he rose again from the dead. And this they proved because they were eye-witnesses of his miracles, and had seen him and conversed with him after he was risen from the dead. But what if their senses did deceive them in this matter ? then it cannot be denied but that the main proof of Christianity falls to the ground.

Well ! We will now suppose (as the Church of Rome does) Transubstantiation to have been one principal part of the Christian Doctrine which the Apostles preached. But if this Doctrine be true, then all mens senses are deceived in a plain sensible matter, whercin 'tis as hard for them to be deceived as in any thing in the world : For two things can hardly be imagin'd more different, than a little bit of wafer and the whole body of a man.

So that the Apostles persuading men to believe this Doctrine persuaded them not to trust their senses, and yet the argument which they used to persuade them to this was built upon the direct contrary principle, that mens senses are to be trusted. For if they be not, then notwithstanding all the evidence the Apostles offer'd for the resurrection of our Saviour, he might not be risen, and so the faith of Christians was vain. So that they represent the Apostles as absurd as is possible, viz. going about to persuade men out of their senses by virtue of an argument, the whole strength whereof depends upon the certainty of sense.

And now the matter is brought to a fair issue ; If the testimony of sense be to be relied upon, then Transubstantiation is false ; If it be not, then no man is sure that Christianity is true. For the utmost assurance that the Apostles had of the truth of Christianity was the testimony of their own senses concerning our Saviour's Miracles, and this testimony every man hath against Transubstantiation. From whence it plainly follows, that no man (no not the Apostles themselves) had more reason to believe Christianity to be true, than every man hath to believe Transubstantiation to be false. And we who did not see our Saviour's Miracles (as the Apostles did) and have only a credible relation of them, but do see the Sacrament, have less evidence of the truth of Christianity than of the falsehood of Transubstantiation.

But cannot God impose upon the senses of men, and represent things to them otherwise than they are ? Yes, undoubtedly. And if he hath revealed that he doth this, are we not to believe him ? Most certainly. But then we ought to be assured that he hath made such a Revelation ; which Assurance no man can have, the certainty of sense being taken away. I shall

I shall press the business a little farther. Supposing the Scripture to be a Divine Revelation, and that these words (This is my Body) if they be in Scripture, must necessarily be taken in the strict and literal sense; I ask now, what greater evidence any man has that these words (This is my Body) are in the Bible, than every man has that the Bread is not chang'd in the Sacrament? Nay no man has so much; for we have only the evidence of one sense that these words are in the Bible, but that the Bread is not chang'd we have the concurring testimony of several of our senses. In a word, if this be once admitted that the Senses of all men are deceiv'd in one of the most plain sensible matters that can be, there is no certain means left either to convey or prove a Divine Revelation to men; nor is there any way to confute the grossest impostures in the world: For if the clear evidence of all mens senses be not sufficient for this purpose, let any man, if he can, find a better and more convincing argument.

5. I will instance but in one Doctrine more; And that shall be, their Doctrine of deposing Kings in case of Heresy, and absolving their Subjects from their Allegiance to them. And this is not a mere speculative doctrine, but hath been put in practice many a time by the Bishops of Rome, as every one knows that is vers'd in History. For the troubles and confusions which were occasion'd by this very thing make up a good part of the History of several Ages.

I hope no body expects that I should take the pains to shew that this was not the Doctrine of our Saviour and his Apostles, nor of the Primitive Christians. The Papists are many of them so far from pretending this, that in some times and places, when it is not seasonable and for their purpose, we have much a-do to persuade them that ever it was their Doctrine. But if Transubstantiation be their Doctrine, this is; for they came both out of the same Forge, I mean the Council of Lateran under Pope Innocent the Third. And if (as they tell us) Transubstantiation was then establish'd so was this. And indeed one would think they were Twins and brought forth at the same time, they are so like one another, both of them so monstrously unreasonable.

II. I come now in the second place to consider some Practices of the Church of Rome, which I am afraid will prove as bad as her Doctrines. I shall instance in these five.

1. Their celebrating of their Divine service in an unknown tongue. And that not only contrary to the practice of the Primitive Church, and to the great end and design of Religious Worship, which is the edification of those who are concerned in it, (and it is hard to imagine how men can be edified by what they do not understand) but likewise in direct contradiction to St. Paul, who hath no less than a whole Chapter wherein he confutes this practice as fully, and condemns it as plainly as any thing is condemned in the whole Bible. And they that can have the face to maintain that this practice was not condemned by St. Paul, or that it was allowed and used in the first Ages of Christianity, need not be ashamed to set up for the defence of any Paradox in the World.

2. The Communion in one kind. And that notwithstanding that even by their own acknowledgment our Saviour instituted it in both kinds, and the Primitive Church administred it in both kinds. This I must acknowledge is no addition to Christianity but a sacrilegious taking away of an essential part of the Sacrament. For the Cup is as essential a part of the institution as the Bread; and they might as well, and by the same authority, take away the one as the other, and both as well as either.

3. Their worshipping of Images. Which practice (notwithstanding all their distinctions about it, which are no other but what the Heathens used in the same case) is as point-blank against the second commandment, as a deliberate and malicious killing of a man is against the sixth. But if the case be so plain, a man would think that at least the Teachers and Guides of that Church should be sensible of it. Why, they are so, and afraid the people should be so too, and therefore in their ordinary Catechisms and Manuals of Devotion they leave out the second Commandment, and divide the tenth into two to make up the number; lest if the common people should know it their Consciences should start at the doing of a thing so directly contrary to the plain command of God.

4. The worshipping of the Bread and Wine in the Eucharist, out of a false and groundless persuasion, that they are substantially changed into the body and blood of Christ. Which if it be not true (and it hath good fortune if it be, for certainly it is one of the most incredible things in the whole World) then by the confession of several of their own learned Writers, they are guilty of groß Idolatry.

5. The worship and invocation of Saints and Angels; and particularly of the Virgin Mary, which hath now for some Ages been a principal part of their Religion. Now a man may justly wonder that so considerable a part of Religion as they make this to be should have no manner of foundation in the Scripture. Does our Saviour any where speak one word concerning the worshipping of Her? Nay, does he not take all occasions to restrain all extravagant apprehensions and imaginations concerning honour due to Her, as foreseeing the degeneracy of the Church in this thing? When he was told that his Mother and Brethren were without; Who (says he) are my mother and my brethren? He that doth the will of my Father, the same is my mother, and sister, and brother. And when the Woman brake forth into that rapture concerning the blessed Mother of our Lord, Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps that gave thee suck! Our Saviour diverts to another thing, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it. Does either our Saviour or his Apostles in all their particular Precepts and Directions concerning Prayer, and the manner of it, and by whom we are to address our selves to God, give the least intimation of praying to the Virgin Mary, or making use of her Mediation? And can any man believe, that if this had been the practice of the Church from the beginning, our Saviour and his Apostles would have been so silent about so considerable a part of Religion; insomuch that in all the Epistles of the Apostles I do not remember that her Name is so much as once mentioned? And yet the worship of her is at this day in the Church of Rome, and hath been so for several Ages, a main part of their publick worship, yea and of their private devotions too; in which it is usual with them to say ten Ave Marias for one Pater Noster; that is, for one Prayer they make to Almighty God, they make ten addresses to the blessed Virgin; for that is the proportion observed in their Rosaries. He that considers this, and had never seen the Bible, would have been apt to think that there had been more said concerning Her in Scripture, than either concerning God, or our blessed Saviour; and that the New Testament were full from one end to the other of precepts and exhortations to the worshipping of Her; and yet when all is done, I challenge any man to shew me so much as one Sentence in the whole Bible that sounds that way. And there is as little in the Christian Writers of the first three hundred years. The truth is, this practice began to creep in among some superstitious people about the middle of the fourth Century: And I remember particularly, that that Epiphanius who lived about that time calls it the Herefy of the Women.

And thus I have given you some Instances of several Doctrines and Practices which the Church of Rome hath built upon the Foundation of Christianity. Much more might have been said of them, but from what hath been said any man may easily discern how dangerous they are to the salvation of men.

I proceed now in the Second place,

II. To consider, Whether our granting a possibility of salvation, though with great hazard, to those in the Communion of the Roman Church, and their denying it to us, be a sufficient argument and encouragement to any man to quit our Church and go to theirs. And there is the more need to consider this, because this is the great popular argument wherewith the emissaries and agents of that Church are wont to assault our people. Your Church (say they) grants that a Papist may be saved; Ours denies that a Protestant can be saved; therefore it is safest to be of our Church, in which salvation by the acknowledgment of both sides is possible.

For answer to this I shall endeavour to shew, that this is so far from being a good argument that it is so intolerably weak and sophistical that any considerate man ought to be ashamed to be caught by it. For either it is good of it self and sufficient to persuade a man to relinquish our Church, and to pass over to theirs, without entering into the merits of the cause on either side, and without comparing the Doctrines and Practices of both the Churches together, or it is not. If it be not sufficient of it self to persuade a man to leave our Church, without comparing the Doctrines on both sides, then it is to no purpose, and there is nothing got by it. For if upon examination and comparing of Doctrines the one appear to be true and the other false, this alone is a sufficient inducement to any man to cleave to that Church where the true Doctrine is found; and then there is no need of this argument.

If it be said that this argument is good in it self without the examination of the Doctrines of both Churches; this seems a very strange thing for any man to affirm, That it is reason enough to a man to be of any Church, whatever her Doctrines and Practices be, if she do but damn those that differ from her, and if the Church that differs from her do but allow a possibility of salvation in her Communion.

But they who use this argument, pretend that it is sufficient of it self; and therefore I shall apply my self to shew, as briefly and plainly as I can, the miserable weakness and insufficiency of it to satisfy any man's conscience or prudence to change his Religion. And to this end I shall,

1. Shew the weakness of the principle upon which this argument relies.
 2. Give some parallel instances by which it will clearly appear that it concludes false.
 3. I shall take notice of some gross absurdities that follow from it.
 4. Shew how unfit it is to work upon those to whom it is propounded.
- And

5. How improper it is to be urged by those that make use of it.

I. I shall shew the weakness of the principle upon which this argument relies; And that is this, That whatever different parties in Religion agree in, is safest to be chosen. The true consequence of which principle if it be driven to the head, is to persuade men to forsake Christianity, and to make them take up in the principles of natural Religion, for in these all Religions do agree. For if this principle be true, and signify any thing, it is dangerous to embrace any thing wherein the several parties in Religion differ; because that only is safe and prudent to be chosen wherein all agree. So that this argument, gument, if the foundation of it be good, will persuade farther than those who make use of it desire it should do; for it will not only make men forsake the Protestant Religion, but Papery too; and which is much more considerable, Christianity it self.

II. I will give some parallel instances by which it will clearly be seen that this argument concludes false. The Donatists denied the Baptism of the Catholicks to be good, but the Catholicks acknowledged the Baptism of the Donatists to be valid. So that both sides were agreed that the Baptism of the Donatists was good, therefore the safest way for St. Austin and other Catholicks (according to this argument) was to be baptized again by the Donatists, because by the acknowledgment of both sides Baptism among them was valid.

But to come nearer to the Church of Rome. Several in that Church hold the personal Infallibility of the Pope, and the lawfulness of deposing and killing Kings for Heresy to be de fide, that is, necessary Articles of Faith, and consequently, that whoever does not believe them cannot be saved. But a great many Papists though they believe these things to be no matters of Faith, yet they think those that hold them may be saved, and they are generally very favourable towards them. But now, according to this argument, they ought all to be of their opinion in these points because both sides are agreed that they that hold them may be saved; but one side positively says that men cannot be saved if they do not hold them.

But my Text furnishes me with as good an instance to this purpose as can be desired. St. Paul here in the Text acknowledgeth the possibility of the salvation of those who built hay and stubble upon the foundation of Christianity; that they might be saved, tho with great difficulty, and as it were out of the fire. But now among those builders with hay and stubble there were those who denied the possibility of St. Paul's salvation and of those who were of his mind. We are told of some who built the Jewish Ceremonies and observances upon the foundation of Christianity, and said that unless men were Circumcised and kept the Law of Moses they could not be saved. So that by this argument St. Paul and his followers ought to have gone over to those Judaizing Christians, because it was acknowledged on both sides that they might be saved. But these Judaizing Christians were as uncharitable to St. Paul and other Christians, as the Church of Rome is now to us, for they said positively that they could not be saved. But can any man think that St. Paul would have been moved by this argument, to leave a safe and certain way of salvation for that which was only possible, and that with great difficulty and hazard? The argument you see is the very same, and yet it concludes the wrong way; which plainly shews that it is a contingent argument, and concludes uncertainly and by chance, and therefore no man ought to be moved by it.

III. I shall take notice of some gross absurdities that follow from it. I shall mention but these two.

1. According to this principle it is always safest to be on the uncharitable side. And yet uncharitableness is as bad an evidence, either of a true Christian, or a true Church, as a man would wish. Charity is one of the most essential marks of Christianity, and what the Apostle saith of particular Christians is as true of whole Churches, that though they have all Faith, yet if they have not Charity they are nothing.

I grant that no Charity teacheth men to see others damned and not to tell them the danger of their condition. But it is to be consider'd that the damning ing of men is a very hard thing, and therefore whenever we do it the case must be wonderfully plain. And is it so in this matter? They of the Church of Rome cannot deny but that we embrace all the Doctrines of our Saviour contain'd in the Apostles Creed, and determined by the Four first General Councils: and yet they will not allow this and a good life to put us within a possibility of Salvation, because we will not submit to all the innovations they would impose upon us. And yet I think there is scarce any Doctrine or Practice in difference between them and us, which some or other of their most learned Writers have not acknowledg'd either not to be sufficiently contained in Scripture, or not to have been held and practis'd by the primitive Church; so that nothing can excuse their uncharitableness towards us. And they pay dear for the little advantage they get by this argument, for they do what in them lies to make themselves no Christians that they may prove themselves the truer and more Christian Church. A medium which we do not desire to make use of.

2. If this argument were good, then by this trick a man may bring over all the world to agree with him in an error which another does not account damnable, whatever it be, provided he do but damn all those that do not hold it; and there wants nothing but confidence and uncharitableness to do this. But is there any sense, that another mans boldness and want of charity should be an argument to move me to be of his opinion? I cannot illustrate this better, than by the difference between a skilful Physician and a Mountebank. A learned and a skilful Physician is modest, and speaks justly of things: he says, that such a method of cure which he hath directed is safe; and withal, that that which the Mountebank prescribes may possibly do the work, but there is great hazard and danger in it; But the Mountebank, who never talks of any thing less than Infallible cures, (and always the more Mountebank the stronger pretence to Infallibility) he is positive that that method which the Physician prescribes will destroy the Patient, but his receipt is infallible and never fails. Is there any reason in this case, that this man shall carry it merely by his confidence? And yet if this argument be good, the safest way is to reject the Physician's advice and to stick to the Mountebank's. For both sides are agreed, that there is a possibility of cure in the Mountebank's method, but not in the Physician's; and so the whole force of the argument lies in the confidence of an ignorant man.

IV. This argument is very unfit to work upon those to whom it is propounded: For either they believe we say true in this, or not. If they think we do not, they have no reason to be moved by what we say. If they think we do, why do they not take in all that we say in this matter? Namely, that though it be possible for some in the Communion of the Roman Church to be saved, yet it is very hazardous; and that they are in a safe condition already in our Church. And why then should a bare possibility, accompanied with infinite and apparent hazard, be an argument to any man to run into that danger?

Lastly, This argument is very improper to be urged by those who make use of it. Half of the strength of it lies in this, that we Protestants acknowledge that it is possible a Papist may be saved. But why should they lay any stress upon this? What matter is it what we Hereticks say, who are so damnably mistaken in all other things? Methinks if there were no other reason, yet because we say it, it should seem to them to be unlikely to be true. But I perceive when it serves for their purpose we have some little credit and authority among them.

By this time I hope every one is in some measure satisfied of the weakness

of this argument, which is so transparent that no wise man can honestly use it, and he must have a very odd understanding that can be cheated by it. The truth is, it is a casual and contingent argument, and sometimes it concludes right, and oftner wrong; and therefore no prudent man can be moved by it, except only in one case, when all things are so equal on both sides that there is nothing else in the whole world to determine him; which surely can never happen in matters of Religion, necessary to be believed. No man is so weak, as not to consider in the change of his Religion the merits of the cause it self; as not to examine the Doctrines and Practices of the Churches on both sides; as not to take notice of the confidence and Charity of both Parties, together with all other things which ought to move a conscientious and a prudent man: And if upon enquiry there appear to be a clear advantage on either side, then this argument is needless and comes too late, because the work is already done without it.

Besides, that the great hazard of salvation in the Roman Church (which we declare upon account of the Doctrines and Practices which I have mentioned) ought to deter any man much more from that Religion, than the acknowledged possibility of salvation in it ought to encourage any man to the embracing of it; Never did any Christian Church build so much hay and stubble upon the foundation of Christianity, and therefore those that are saved in it must be saved, as it were, out of the fire. And tho Purgatory be not meant in the Text, yet it is a Doctrine very well suited to their manner of building; for there is need of an ignis purgatorius, of a fire to try their work what it is, and to burn up their hay and stubble. And I have so much Charity (and I desire always to have it) as to hope, that a great many among them who lived piously, and have been almost inevitably detain'd in that Church by the prejudice of education and an invincible ignorance, will upon a general Repentance find mercy with God; and tho their works suffer loss, and be burnt, yet they themselves may escape, as out of the fire. But as for those who had the opportunities of coming to the knowledge of the truth, if they continue in the errors of that Church, or apostatize from the truth, I think their condition so far from being safe that there must be extraordinary favourable circumstances in their case to give a man hopes of their salvation.

I have now done with the two things I propounded to speak to. And I am sorry that the necessary defence of our Religion, against the restless importunities and attempts of our adversaries upon all sorts of persons, hath engaged me to spend so much time in matters of dispute, which I had much rather have employed in another way. Many of you can be my witnesses that I have constantly made it my business, in this great Presence and Assembly to plead against the impieties and wickedness of men, and have endeavoured by the best arguments I could think of to gain men over to a firm belief and serious practice of the main things of Religion. And I do assure you, I had much rather persuade any one to be a good man, than to be of any party or denomination of Christians whatsoever. For I doubt not but the belief of the ancient Creed, provided we entertain nothing that is destructive of it, together with a good life, will certainly save a man; and without this no man can have reasonable hopes of salvation, no not in an infallible Church, if there were any such to be found in the world.

I have been, according to my opportunities, not a negligent observer of the genius and humour of the several Sects and Professions in Religion; and upon the whole matter, I do in my conscience believe the Church of England to be the best constituted Church this day in the world; and that as to the main, the Doctrine, and Government, and Worship of it, are excellently framed to make men soberly Religious: Securing men on the one hand, from the wild freaks of Enthusiasm; and on the other, from the gross follies of Superstition. And our Church hath this peculiar advantage above several Professions that we know in the world, that it acknowledgeth a due and just subordination to the civil Authority, and hath always been untainted in its Loyalty.

And now shall every trifling consideration be sufficient to move a man to relinquish such a Church? There is no greater disparagement to a man's understanding, no greater argument of a light and ungenerous mind, than rashly to change one's Religion. Religion is our greatest concernment of all other, and it is not every little argument, no nor a great noise about infallibility, nothing but very plain and convincing evidence, that should sway a man in this case. But they are utterly inexcusable who mak a change of such concernment upon the insinuations of one side only, without ever hearing what can be said for the Church they were baptized and brought up in before they leave it. They that can yield thus easily to the impressions of every one that hath a design and interest to make Profelytes, may at this rate of discretion change their Religion twice a day, and instead of morning and evening Prayer, they may have a morning and evening Religion.

Therefore for God's sake, and for our own Souls sake, and for the sake of our Reputation let us consider and shew our selves men; Let us not suffer our selves to be shaken and carried away with every wind. Let us not run our selves into danger when we may be safe. Let us stick to the foundation of Religion, the Articles of our common belief, and build upon them gold, and silver, and precious stones, I mean, the virtues and actions of a good life; and if we would do this, we should not be apt to set such a value upon hay and straw. If we would sincerely endeavour to live holy and virtuous lives, we should not need to cast about for a Religion which may furnish us with easy and indirect ways to get to Heaven.

I will conclude all with the Apostle's Exhortation, Wherefore my beloved Brethren be ye stedfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the works of the Lord.

Now the God of peace which brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the sheep, by the blood of the everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will; working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be Glory for ever and ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XII.

Of the Inward Peace and Pleasure which attends Religion.

P S A L. CXIX. 165.

Great peace have they that love thy Law, and nothing shall offend them.

IN these words there are two things contained, the Description of a good man, and the Reward of his goodness.

1. The Description of a good man: he is said to be one that loves the Law of God, that is, that loves to meditate upon it, and to practise it.

2. The Reward of his goodness; Great peace have they that love thy Law. The word Peace is many times used in Scripture in a very large sense, so as to comprehend all kind of happiness: sometimes it signifies outward peace and quiet, in opposition to war and contention; and sometimes inward peace and contentment in opposition to inward trouble and anguish. I understand the Text chiefly in this last sense, not wholly excluding either of the other.

My design at present from these words is, to recommend Religion to men from the consideration of that inward peace and pleasure which attends it. And surely nothing can be said more to the advantage of Religion in the opinion of considerate men than this. For the aim of all Philosophy, and the great search of wise men, hath been how to attain peace and tranquility of mind. And if Religion be able to give this, a greater commendation need not be given to Religion.

But before I enter upon this argument, I shall premise two things by way of Caution:

First, That these kind of Observations are not to be taken too strictly and rigorously, as if they never failed in any one instance. Aristotle observed long since, that moral and proverbial sayings are understood to be true generally and for the most part; and that is all the truth that is to be expected in them; As, when Solomon says, Train up a child in the way wherein he shall go, and when he is old he will not depart from it: This is not to be so taken as if no child that is piously educated did ever miscarry afterwards, but that the good education of children is the best way to make good men, and commonly approved to be so by experience. So here, when it is said that great peace have they that love God's Law; the meaning is that Religion hath generally this effect, though in some cases, and as to some persons, it may be accidentally hindered.

Secondly, When I say that Religion gives peace and tranquility to our minds, this is chiefly to be understood of a Religious state in which a man is well settled and confirmed, and not of our first entrance into it, for that is more or less troublesome according as we make it. If we begin a religious course betimes, before we have contracted any great guilt, and before the habits of sin be grown strong in us, the work goes on easily without any great conflict or resistance. But the case is otherwise when a man breaks off from a wicked life, and becomes religious from the direct contrary course in which he hath been long and deeply engaged. In this case no man is so unreasonable as to deny, that there is a great deal of sensible trouble and difficulty in the making of this change; but when it is once made, peace and comfort will spring up by degrees, and daily increase as we grow more confirmed and established in a good course.

These two things being premised, I shall now endeavour to shew that Religion gives a man the greatest pleasure and satisfaction of mind, and that there is no true peace, nor any comparable pleasure to be had in a contrary course. And that from these two heads. From Testimony of Scripture; and from the Nature of Religion which is apt to produce peace and tranquility of mind.

I. First, From Testimony of Scripture. I shall select some of those Texts which are more full and express to this purpose, Job 22. 21. speaking of God, Acquaint thyself now with him and be at peace. To acquaint our selves with God is a phrase of the same importance with coming to God, and seeking of him, and many other like expressions in Scripture which signify nothing else but to become religious, Psal. 37. 38. Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace: Or, as these words are rendered according to the LXX. in our old Translation, Keep innocency, take heed to the thing that is right, for that shall bring thee peace at the last. Prov. 3. 17. Where Solomon speaking of Wisdom, which with him is but another name for Religion, says, Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. II. 32. 17. The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever. Matth. 11. 28, 29. Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Now to come to Christ is to become his Disciples, to believe and practise his Doctrine; for so our Saviour explains himself in the next words, Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest for your Souls. Rom. 2. 10. Glory, and honour, and peace to every man that worketh good.

And on the contrary the Scripture represents the condition of a sinner to be full of trouble and disquiet. David tho he was a very good man yet when he had grievously offended God the anguish of his mind was such, as even to disorder and distemper his body, Psal. 38. 2, 3, 4. Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore; there is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger, neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin; for mine iniquities are gone over mine head, and as an heavy burthen they are too heavy for me. Isa. 57. 20, 21. The wicked are like the troubled Sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt; there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. And Isa. 59. 7, 8. Misery and destruction are in their paths, and the way of peace they know not; they have made themselves crooked paths, whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace. Rom. 2. 9. Tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doth evil.

You see how full and express the Scripture is in this matter. I come now in the

II. Second place, To give you a more particular account of this from the Nature of Religion, which is apt to produce peace and tranquility of mind. And that I shall do in these three particulars.

1. Religion is apt to remove the chief causes of inward trouble and disquiet.

2. It furnishes us with all the true causes of peace and tranquility of mind.
3. The reflection upon a religious course of life and all the actions of it, doth afterwards yield great pleasure and satisfaction.

First, Religion is apt to remove the chief causes of inward trouble and disquiet. The chief causes of inward trouble and discontent are these two, Doubting and anxiety of mind, and Guilt of Conscience. Now Religion is apt to free us from both these.

1. From Doubting and anxiety of mind. Irreligion and Atheism makes a man full of doubts and jealousies whether he be in the right, and whether at last things will not prove quite otherwise than he hath rashly determined. For tho a man endeavour never so much to settle himself in the principles of Infidelity, and to persuade his mind that there is no God, and consequently that there are no rewards to be hoped for, nor punishments to be feared in another life; yet he can never attain to a steady and unshaken persuasion of these things: and however he may please himself with witty reasons against the common belief of mankind, and smart repartees to their arguments, and bold and pleasant railery about these matters; yet I dare say, no man ever fate down in a clear and full satisfaction concerning them. For when he hath done all that he can to reason himself out of Religion, his conscience ever and anon recoils upon him, and his natural thoughts and apprehensions rise up against his reasonings, and all his wit and subtilty is confuted and born down by a secret and strong suspicion, which he can by no means get out of his mind, that things may be otherwise.

And the reason hereof is plain, because all this is an endeavour against nature and those vigorous instincts which God hath planted in the minds of men to the contrary. For whenever our minds are free and not violently hurried away by passion, nor blinded by prejudice, they do of themselves return to their first and most natural apprehension of things. And this is the reason why when the Atheist falls into any great calamity, and is awakened to an impartial consideration of things by the apprehension of Death and Judgment, and despairs of enjoying any longer those pleasures for the sake of which he hath all this while rebelled against Religion, his courage presently sinks, and all his arguments fail him, and his case is now too serious to admit of jesting, and at the bottom of his soul he doubts of all that which he asserted with so much confidence and set so good a face upon before, and can find no ease to his mind but in retreating from his former principles, nor no hopes of consolation for himself but in acknowledging that God whom he hath denied, and imploring his mercy whom he hath affronted.

This is always the case of these persons when they come to extremity, not to mention the infinite checks and rebukes which their own minds give them upon other occasions; so that 'tis very seldom that these men have any tolerable enjoyment of themselves, but are forc'd to run away from themselves into company, and to stupify themselves by intemperance, that they may not feel the fearful twitches and gripings of their own minds.

Whereas he who entertains the principles of Religion, and therein follows his own natural apprehensions and the general voice of mankind, and is not conscious to himself that he knowingly and wilfully lives contrary to these principles, hath no anxiety in his mind about these things; being verily persuaded they are true, and that he hath all the reason in the world to think so; and if they should prove otherwise (which he hath no other cause to suspect) yet he hath this satisfaction, that he hath taken the wisest course and hath consulted his own present peace and future security infinitely better than than the Atheist hath done, in case he should prove to be mistaken. For it is a fatal mistake to think there is no God, if there be one; but a mistake on the other hand hath no future bad consequences depending upon it, nor indeed any great present inconvenience, Religion only restraining a man from doing some things, from most of which it is good he should be restrained however; so that at the worst the religious man is only mistaken, but the Atheist is miserable if he be mistaken; miserable beyond all imagination, and past all remedy.

2. Another, and indeed a principal cause of trouble and discontent to the minds of men is Guilt. Now Guilt is a consciousness to our selves that we have done amiss, and the very thought that we have done amiss is apt to lye very cross in our minds and to cause great anguish and confusion. Besides that guilt is always attended with Fear, which naturally springs up in the mind of man from a secret apprehension of the mischief and inconvenience that his sin will bring upon him, and of the vengeance that hangs over him from God, and will overtake him either in this World, or in the other.

And tho the sinner, while he is in full health and prosperity, may make a shift to divert and shake off these Fears; yet they frequently return upon him, and upon every little noise of danger, upon the apprehension of any calamity that comes near him, his guilty mind is presently jealous that it is making towards him and is particularly levelled against him. For he is sensible that there is a just power above him to whose indignation he is continually liable, and therefore he is always in fear of him, and how long soever he may have escaped punishment in this world he cannot but dread the vengeance of the other; And these thoughts are a continual disturbance to his mind and in the midst of laughter make his heart heavy, and the longer he continues in a wicked course the more he multiplies the grounds and causes of his fears.

But now Religion frees a man from all this torment, either by preventing the cause of it, or directing to the cure; either by preserving us from guilt, or clearing us of it in case we have contracted it. It preserves us from guilt by keeping us innocent; and in case we have offended, it clears us of it by leading us to repentance and the amendment of our lives; which is the only way to recover the favour of God and the peace of our own consciences, and to secure us against all apprehension of danger from the divine Justice; tho not absolutely from all fear of punishment in this world, yet from that which is the greatest danger of all, the condemnation and torment of the world to come. And by this means a man's mind is settled in perfect peace, Religion freeing him from those tormenting fears of the Divine displeasure, which he can upon no other terms rid himself of; whereas the sinner is always sowing the seeds of trouble in his own mind, and laying the foundation of continual discontent to himself.

Secondly, As Religion removes the chief grounds of trouble and disquiet, so it ministers to us all the true causes of peace and tranquility of mind. Who ever lives according to the Rules of Religion lays these three great foundations of peace and comfort to himself.

1. He is satisfied that in being religious he doth that which is most reasonable.

2. That he secures himself against the greatest mischiefs and dangers by making God his Friend.

3. That upon the whole matter he does in all respects most effectually consult and promote his own interest and happiness.

1. He is satisfied that he does that which is most reasonable. And it is no small pleasure to be justified to our selves, to be satisfied that we are what we ought to be, and do what in reason we ought to do ; that which best becomes us, and which according to the primitive intention of our Being is most natural, for whatever is natural is pleasant. Now the practice of piety towards God, and of every other grace and virtue which Religion teaches us, are things reasonable in themselves, and what God when he made us intended we should do. And a man is then pleased with himself and his own actions, when he doth what he is convinced he ought to do ; and is then offended with himself, when he goes against the light of his own mind by neglecting his duty or doing contrary to it ; for then his conscience checks him, and there is something within him that is uneasy and puts him into disorder. As when a man eats or drinks any thing that is unwholesome it offends his stomach, and puts his body into an unnatural and a restless state.

For every thing is then at rest and peace when it is in that state in which Nature intended it to be, and being violently forced out of it, it is never quiet till it recover again. Now Religion and the practice of its virtue is the natural state of the soul, the condition to which God designed it. As God made man a Reasonable Creature, so all the acts of Religion are reasonable and suitable to our nature : And our souls are then in health when we are what the Laws of Religion require us to be, and do what they command us to do. And as we find an unexpressible ease and pleasure when our body is in its perfect state of health, and on the contrary every distemper causeth pain and uneasiness ; so is it with the Soul. When Religion governs all our inclinations and actions, and the temper of our minds and the course of our lives is conformable to the precepts of it, all is at peace. But when we are otherwise, and live in any vicious practice, how can there be peace ; so long as we act unreasonably, and do those things whereby we necessarily create trouble and disturbance to our selves ? How can we hope to be at ease so long as we are in a sick and diseased condition ? Till the corruption that is in us be wrought out, our spirits will be in a perpetual tumult and fermentation ; and it is as impossible for us to enjoy the peace and serenity of our minds as it is for a sick man to be at ease : The man may use what arts of diversion he will, and change from one place and posture to another : but still he is restless, because there is that within him gives him pain and disturbance, There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. Such men may dissemble their condition, and put on the face and appearance of pleasantness and contentment ; but God who sees all the secrets of mens hearts, knows it is far otherwise with them, There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

2. Another ground of peace which the Religious man hath is, That he hath made God his Friend. Now Friendship is peace and pleasure both ; It is mutual love, and that is a double pleasure ; And it is hard to say which is the greatest, the pleasure of loving God, or of knowing that he loves us. Now whoever sincerely endeavours to please God may rest perfectly assured that God hath no displeasure against him ; for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, and his countenance shall behold the upright ; that is, he will be favourable to such persons. As he hates the workers of iniquity, so he takes pleasure in them that fear him, in such as keep his covenant, and remember his commandments to do them.

And being assured of his favour, we are secured against the greatest dangers and the greatest fears ; and may say with David, Return then unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee : The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear ? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid? What can reasonably trouble or discontent that man who hath made his peace with God and is restored to his favour, who is the best and most powerful friend, and can be the forest and most dangerous enemy in the whole world?

3. By being religious we do most effectually consult our own interest and happiness. A great part of Religion consists in moderating our appetites and passions, and this naturally tends to the composure of our minds. He that lives piously and virtuously acts according to Reason, and in so doing maintains the present peace of his own mind; and not only so, but he lays the foundation of his future happiness to all eternity. For Religion gives a man the hopes of Eternal life; and all pleasure does not consist in present enjoyment; there is a mighty pleasure also, in the firm belief and expectation of a future good; and if it be a great and lasting good, it will support a man under a great many present evils. If Religion be certainly the way to avoid the greatest evils, and to bring us to happiness at last, we may contentedly bear a great many afflictions for its sake. For though all sufferings be grievous yet it is pleasant to escape great dangers, and to come to the possession of a mighty good; tho it be with great difficulty and inconvenience to our selves. And when we come to heaven (if ever we be so happy as to get thither) it will be a new and greater pleasure to us to remember the pains and troubles whereby we were saved and made happy.

So that all these put together are a firm foundation of peace and comfort to a good man. There is a great satisfaction in the very doing of our duty and acting reasonably, tho there may happen to be some present trouble and inconvenience in it. But when we do not only satisfy our selves in so doing, but likewise please him whose favour is better than life, and whose frowns are more terrible than death; when in doing our duty we directly promote our own happiness, and in serving God do most effectually serve our own interest, what can be imagined to minister more peace and pleasure to the mind of man?

This is the second thing. Religion furnishes us with all the true causes of peace and tranquility of mind.

Thirdly, the reflection upon a religious and virtuous course of life doth afterwards yield a mighty pleasure and satisfaction. And what can commend Religion more to us, than that the remembrance of any pious and virtuous action gives us so much contentment and delight? So that whatever difficulty and reluctancy we may find in the doing of it, to be sure there is peace and satisfaction in the looking back upon it. No man ever reflected upon himself with regret for having done his duty to God or man; for having lived soberly, or righteously, or godly in this present world. Nay, on the contrary, the conscience of any duty faithfully discharged, the memory of any good we have done does refresh the soul with a strange kind of pleasure and joy, Our rejoicing is this (saith St. Paul) the testimony of our consciences, that in all simplicity and godly sincerity we have had our conversation in the world.

But on the other side, the course of a vicious life, all acts of impiety to God, of malice and injustice to men, of intemperance and excess in reference to our selves, do certainly leave a sting behind them. And whatever pleasure there may be in the present act of them, the memory of them is so tormenting that men are glad to use all the arts of diversion to fence off the thoughts of them. One of the greatest troubles in the world to a bad man is to look into himself, and to remember how he hath lived. I appeal to the consciences of men whether this be not true.

And

And is not here now a mighty difference between these two courses of life; that when we do any thing that is good, if there be any trouble in it it is soon over, but the pleasure of it is perpetual: when we do a wicked action the pleasure of it is short and transient, but the trouble and sting of it remains for ever? The reflection upon the good we have done gives a lasting satisfaction to our minds, but the remembrance of any evil committed by us leaves a perpetual discontent.

And, which is yet more considerable, a religious and virtuous course of life does then yield most peace and comfort when we most stand in need of it; in times of affliction and at the hour of death. When a man falls into any great calamity there is no comfort in the world like to that of a good conscience; This makes all calm and serene within when there is nothing but clouds and darkness about him. So David observes of the good man, Psal. 112. 4. Unto the upright there ariseth light in darkness. All the pious and virtuous actions that we do are so many seeds of peace and comfort, sown in our consciences, which will spring up and flourish most in times of outward trouble and distress, Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. And at the hour of death; The righteous hath hopes in his death, saith Solomon. And what a seasonable refreshment is it to the mind of man when the pangs of death are ready to take hold of him, and he is just stepping into the other world, to be able to look back with satisfaction upon a religious and well-spent life? Then if ever, the comforts of a good man do overflow, and a kind of heaven springs up in his mind, and he rejoiceth in the hopes of the glory of God. And that is a true and solid comfort indeed, which will stand by us in the day of adversity, and stick close to us when we have most need of it.

But with the ungodly it is not so: His guilt lies in wait for him, especially against such times; and is never more fierce and raging than in the day of distress; so that according as his troubles without are multiplied, so are his stings within. And surely affliction is then grievous indeed when it falls upon a gall'd and uneasy mind. Were it not for this, outward afflictions might be tolerable; the spirit of a man might bear his infirmities, but a wounded spirit who can bear? But especially at the hour of death. How does the guilt of his wicked life then stare him in the face? What storms and tempests are raised in his soul? which make it like the troubled sea when it cannot rest. When Eternity, that fearful and amazing sight presents itself to his mind, and he feels himself sinking into the regions of darkness, and is every moment in a fearful expectation of meeting with the just reward of his deeds; with what regret does he then remember the sins of his life? and how full of rage and indignation is he against himself for having neglected to know, when he had so many opportunities of knowing them, the things that belong to his peace; and which, because he hath neglected them, are now and likely to be for ever hid from his eyes?

And if this be the true case of the righteous and wicked man, I need not multiply words, but may leave it to any man's thoughts in which of these conditions he would be. And surely the difference between them is so very plain that there can be no difficulty in the choice.

But now tho this discourse be very true, yet for the full clearing of this matter it will be but fair to consider what may be said on the other side; And the rather, because there are several objections which seem to be countenanced from experience, which is enough to overthrow the most plausible speculations. As

1. That wicked men seem to have a great deal of pleasure and contentment in their Vices.

2. That Religion imposeth many harsh and grievous things, which seem to be inconsistent with that pleasure and satisfaction I have spoken of.

3. That those who are Religious are many times very disconsolate and full of trouble.

To the first, I deny not that wicked men have some pleasure in their vices; but when all things are rightly computed, and just abatements made, it will amount to very little. For it is the lowest and meanest kind of pleasure, it is chiefly the pleasure of our bodies and our senses, of our worst part; the pleasure of the beast, and not of the man; that which least becomes us, and which we were least of all made for. Those sensual pleasures which are lawful are much inferior to the least satisfaction of the mind, and when they are unlawful they are always inconsistent with it. And what is a man profited, if to gain a little sensual pleasure he lose the peace of his soul? Can we find in our hearts to call that pleasure which robs us of a far greater and higher satisfaction than it brings? The delights of sense are so far from being the chief pleasure for which God designed us, that on the contrary he intended we shou'd take our chief pleasure in the restraining and moderating of our sensual appetites and desires, and in keeping them within the bounds of Reason and Religion.

And then, It is not a lasting pleasure. Those fits of mirth which wicked men have, how soon are they over? Like a sudden blaze which after a little flash and noise is presently gone. It is the comparison of a very great and experienced man in these matters; Like the cracking of thorns under a pot (saith Solomon) so is the laughter of the fool, that is, the mirth of the wicked man; it may be loud, but it lasts not.

But, which is most considerable of all, the pleasures of sin bear no proportion to that long and black train of miseries and inconveniences which they draw after them. Many times poverty and reproach, pains and diseases upon our bodies, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doth evil. So that if these pleasures were greater than they are, a man had better be without them than purchase them at such dear rates.

To the second. That Religion imposeth many harsh and grievous things, which seem to be inconsistent with that pleasure and satisfaction I have spoken of: As, the bearing of persecution, repentance and mortification, fasting and abstinence, and many other rigors and severities. As to persecution; This Discourse doth not pretend that Religion exempts men from outward troubles, but that, when they happen, it supports men under them better than any thing else. As for Repentance and Mortification; this chiefly concerns our first entrance into Religion after a wicked life, which I acknowledged in the beginning of this discourse to be very grievous; but this doth not hinder but that tho Religion may be troublesome at first to some persons whose former sins and crimes have made it so, it may be pleasant afterwards when we are accustomed to it. And whatever the trouble of repentance be, it is unavoidable, unless we resolve to be miserable; for except we repent we must perish. Now there is always a rational satisfaction in submitting to a less inconvenience to remedy and prevent a greater. As for Fasting and Abstinence, which is many times very helpful and subservient to the ends of Religion, there is no such extraordinary trouble in it if it be discreetly managed as is worth the speaking of. And as for other rigors and severities which some pretend Religion does impose, I have only this to say, that if men will play the fool, and make Religion more troublesome than God hath made made it, I cannot help that : And, that this is a false Representation of Religion which some in the World have made, as if it did chiefly consist not in pleasing God, but in displeasing and tormenting our selves. This is not to paint Religion like her self, but rather like one of the Furies, with nothing but Whips and Snakes about her.

To the third. That those who are religious are many times very disconsolate and full of trouble. This, I confess is a great Objection indeed if Religion were the Cause of this Trouble, but there are other plain Causes of it, to which Religion rightly understood is not accessary. As, false and mistaken Principles in Religion : The imperfection of our Religion and Obedience to God : And a melancholy temper and disposition. False and mistaken principles in Religion. As this for one ; That God does not sincerely desire the Salvation of Men, but hath from all eternity effectually barr'd the greatest part of mankind from all possibility of attaining that happiness which he offers to them ; and every one hath cause to fear that he may be in that number. This were a melancholy consideration indeed, if it were true ; but there is no ground either from Reason or Scripture to entertain any such thought of God. Our destruction is of our selves ; and no man shall be ruin'd by any decree of God who does not ruin himself by his own fault.

Or else, the imperfection of our Religion and Obedience to God. Some perhaps are very devout in serving God, but not so kind and charitable, so just and honest in their dealings with men. No wonder if such persons be disquieted ; the natural consciences of men being not more apt to disquiet them for any thing, than for the neglect of those moral duties, which natural light teacheth them. Peace of conscience is the effect of an impartial and universal obedience to the Laws of God ; and I hope no man will blame Religion for that which plainly proceeds from the want of Religion.

Or lastly, A melancholy temper and disposition ; which is not from Religion, but from our nature and constitution ; and therefore Religion ought not to be charged with it.

And thus I have endeavour'd, as briefly and plainly as I cou'd, to represent to you what peace and pleasure, what comfort and satisfaction, Religion rightly understood and sincerely practis'd is apt to bring to the minds of Men. And I do not know by what sort of Argument Religion can be more effectually recommended to wise and considerate men. For in persuading men to be religious I do not go about to rob them of any true pleasure and contentment, but to direct them to the very best, nay indeed the only way of attaining and securing it.

I speak this in great pity and compassion to those who make it their great design to please themselves, but do grievously mistake the way to it. The direct way is that which I have set before you, a holy and virtuous life, to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly and righteously and godly in this present world. A good man (saith Solomon) is satisfied from himself : He hath the pleasure of being wise and acting reasonably ; the pleasure of being justified to himself in what he doth, and of being acquitted by the sentence of his own mind. There is a great pleasure in being innocent, because that prevents guilt and trouble : It is pleasant to be virtuous and good, because that is to excel many others ; and it is pleasant to grow better, because that is to excel our selves : Nay it is pleasant even to mortify and subdue our lusts, because that is Victory : It is pleasant to command our appetites and passions, and to keep them in due order, within the bounds of Reason and Religion ; because this is a kind of Empire, this is to govern. It is naturally pleasant to rule and have power over others, but he is the great and the absolute Prince who commands himself. This is the kingdom of God within us, a dominion infinitely to be preferred before all the Kingdoms of this world, and the glory of them. It is the Kingdom of God described by the Apostle, which consists in righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. In a word, the pleasure of being good and of doing good is the chief happiness of God himself.

But now the wicked man deprives himself of all this pleasure, and creates perpetual discontent to his own mind. O the torments of a guilty conscience! which the sinner feels more or less all his life long. But, alas, thou dost not yet know the worst of it, no not in this world. What wilt thou do when thou comest to die? What comfort wilt thou then be able to give thy self? or what comfort can any one else give thee, when thy conscience is miserably rent and torn by those waking furies which will then rage in thy breast, and thou knowest not which way to turn thy self for ease; then, perhaps at last, the Priest is unwillingly sent for, to patch up thy conscience as well as he can, and to appease the cries of it; and to force himself out of very pity and good nature to say peace, peace, when there is no peace. But alas man! what can we do? what comfort can we give thee, when thine iniquities testify against thee to thy very face? How can there be peace, when thy lusts and debaucheries, thy impieties to God and thy injuries to men have been so many? How can there be peace, when thy whole life hath been a continued contempt and provocation of Almighty God, and a perpetual violence and affront to the light and reason of thy own mind?

Therefore whatever temptation there may be in sin at a distance, whatever pleasure in the act and commission of it, yet remember that it always goes off with trouble, and will be bitterness in the end. Those words of Solomon have a terrible sting in the conclusion of them, Rejoice, O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine Eyes; but know that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

This one thought which will very often unavoidably break into our minds (that God will bring us into judgment) is enough to dash all our contentment, and to spoil all the pleasure of a sinful life. Never expect to be quiet in thine own mind, and to have the true enjoyment of thy self till thou livest a virtuous and religious life.

And if this discourse be true (as I am confident I have every man's conscience on my side) I say, if this be true, let us venture to be wise and happy, that is, to be religious. Let us resolve to break off our sins by repentance, to fear God and keep his Commandments, as ever we desire to avoid the unspeakable torments of a guilty mind, and wou'd not be perpetually uneasy to our selves.

Grant, we beseech thee, Almighty God, that we may every one of us know and do in this our day the things that belong to our peace before they be hid from our eyes. And the God of peace which brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the Sheep, by the blood of the everlasting Covenant, make us perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in us always that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

The Nature and Benefit of Consideration.

P S A L. CXIX. 59.

I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

TH E two great causes of the ruin of men are Infidelity, and want of consideration. Some do not believe the principles of Religion, or at least have by arguing against them rendered them so doubtful to themselves as to take away the force and efficacy of them: But these are but a very small part of mankind, in comparison of those who perish for want of considering these things. For most men take the principles of Religion for granted, That there is a God, and a Providence, and a State of Rewards and Punishments after this Life, and never entertained any considerable doubt in their minds to the contrary: but for all this they never attended to the proper and natural consequences of these principles, nor applied them to their own case; they never seriously consider'd the notorious inconsistency of their lives with this belief, and what manner of persons they ought to be who are verily persuaded of the truth of these things.

For no man that is convinced that there is a God, and considers the necessary and immediate consequences of such a persuasion, can think it safe to affront Him by a wicked life: No man that believes the infinite happiness and misery of another world, and considers withal that one of these shall certainly be his portion according as he demeans himself in this present life, can think it indifferent what course he takes. Men may thrust away these thoughts and keep them out of their minds for a long time, but no man that enters into the serious consideration of these matters can possibly think it a thing indifferent to him whether he be happy or miserable for ever.

So that a great part of the evils of mens lives would be cured, if they would but once lay them to heart; would they but seriously consider the consequences of a wicked life, they would see so plain reason and so urgent a necessity for the reforming of it, that they would not venture to continue any longer in it. This course David took here in the Text, and he found the happy success of it; I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy Testimonies.

In which words there are these two things considerable.

I. The course which David here took for the reforming of his life; I thought on my ways.

II. The success of this course. It produced actual and speedy reformation; I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies; I made haste and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

These are the two heads of my following discourse, which when I have spoken to I shall endeavour to persuade my self and you to take the same course course which David here did, and God grant that I may have the same effect.

I. We will consider the course which David here took for the reforming of his life; I thought on my ways, or, as the words are render'd in our old Translation, I called my own ways to remembrance. And this may either signify a general survey and examination of his life, respecting indifferently the good or bad actions of it: Or else, which is more probable, it may specially refer to the sins and miscarriages of his life: I thought on my ways, that is, I called my sins to remembrance. Neither of these senses can be much amiss in order to the effect mentioned in the Text, the reformation and amendment of our lives; and therefore neither of them can reasonably be excluded, though I shall principally insist upon the latter.

1. This thinking on our ways may signify a general survey and examination of our lives; respecting indifferently our good and bad actions. For Way is a Metaphorical word, denoting the course of a man's life and actions. I thought on my ways, that is, I examined my life, and called my self to a strict account for the actions of it; I compared them with the Law of God the rule and measure of my duty, and consider'd how far I had obeyed that Law, or offended against it; how much evil I had been guilty of, and how little good I had done in comparison of what I might and ought to have done: That by this means I might come to understand the true state and condition of my soul and discerning how many and great my faults and defects were, I might amend whatever was amiss, and be more careful of my duty for the future.

And it must needs be a thing of excellent use for men to set apart some particular times for the examination of themselves, that they may know how accounts stand between God and them. Pythagoras (or whoever were the Author of those golden verses which pass under his name) doth especially recommend this practice to his Scholars, every night before they slept to call themselves to account for the actions of the day past; enquiring wherein they had transgressed, what good they had done that day, or omitted to do. And this no doubt is an admirable means to improve men in virtue, a most effectual way to keep our consciences continually waking and tender, and to make us stand in awe of our selves, and afraid to sin when we know beforehand that we must give so severe an account of our selves of every action.

And certainly it is a great piece of wisdom to make up our accounts as frequently as we can, that our repentance may in some measure keep pace with the errors and failings of our lives, and that we may not be oppressed and confounded by the insupportable weight of the sins of a whole life falling upon us at once; and that perhaps at the very worst time, when we are sick and weak, and have neither understanding nor leisure to recollect our selves, and to call our sins distinctly to remembrance, much less to exercise any fit and proper acts of repentance for them. For there is nothing to be done in Religion when our Reason is once departed from us; then darkness hath overtaken us indeed, and the night is come when no man can work. But tho we were never so sensible and should do all we can at that time, yet after all this how it will go with us God alone knows. I am sure it is too much presumption for any man to be confident that one general and confused act of repentance will serve his turn for the sins of his whole life. Therefore there is great reason why we shou'd often examine our selves, both in order to the amendment of our lives, and the ease of our consciences when we come to die.

2. This

2. This thinking of our ways may particularly and specially refer to the sins and miscarriages of our lives: I thought on my ways, that is, I called my sins to remembrance; I took a particular account of the errors of my life, and laid them seriously to heart; I considered all the circumstances and consequences of them, and all other things belonging to them; and reasoning the matter thoroughly with my self, came to a peremptory and fix'd resolution of breaking off this wicked course of life, and betaking my self to the obedience of God's Laws. And the consideration of our ways taken in this sense (which seems to be the more probable meaning of the words) may reasonably imply in it these following particulars.

1. The taking of a particular account of our sins, together with the several circumstances and aggravations of them.
2. A hearty trouble and sorrow for them; I thought on my ways, that is, I laid them sadly to heart.
3. A serious consideration of the evil and unreasonableness of a sinful course.
4. A due sense of the fearful and fatal consequences of a wicked life.
5. A full conviction of the necessity of quitting this course.
6. An apprehension of the possibility of doing this.

1. The taking of a particular account of our sins, together with the several circumstances and aggravations of them. And to this end we may do well to reflect particularly upon the several stages and periods of our lives, and to recollect at least the principal miscarriages belonging to each of them. And the better to enable us hereto it will be useful to have before our eyes some abridgment or summary of the Laws of God, containing the chief heads of our duties and sins, of virtues and vices; For this will help to bring many of our faults and neglects to our remembrance, which otherwise perhaps would have been forgotten by us. We should likewise consider the several relations wherein we have stood to others, and how far we have transgressed or fail'd of our duty in any of these respects.

And having thus far made up our sad account, we may in a great measure understand the number and greatness of our sins; abating for some particulars which are slipt out of our memory, and for sins of ignorance, and daily infirmities which are innumerable. By all which we may see what vile wretches and grievous offenders we have been; especially if we take into consideration the several heavy circumstances of our sins, which do above measure aggravate them; the heinousness of many of them as to their nature, and the injurious consequences of them to the person, or estate, or reputation of our neighbour; their having been committed against the clear knowledge of our duty, against the frequent checks and convictions of our consciences, telling us when we did them that we did amiss; against so many motions and suggestions of God's Holy Spirit, so many admonitions and reproofs from others; and contrary to our own most serious vows and resolutions, renewed at several times, especially upon the receiving of the blessed Sacrament, and in times of sickness and distress: And all this notwithstanding the plainest declarations of God's will to the contrary; notwithstanding the terrors of the Lord and the wrath of God revealed from Heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; notwithstanding the cruel sufferings of the Son of God for our sins, and the most merciful offers of pardon and reconciliation in his blood. Add to this the scandal of our wicked lives to our holy Religion, the ill example of them to the corrupting and debauching of others, the affront of them to the Divine Authority, thority, and the horrible ingratitude of them to the mercy and goodness and patience of God to which we have such infinite obligations. Thus we should set our sins in order before our eyes with the several aggravations of them.

2. A hearty trouble and sorrow for sin; I thought on my ways, that is, I laid my sins sadly to heart. And surely whenever we remember the faults and follies of our lives we cannot but be inwardly touched and sensibly grieved at the thoughts of them; we cannot but hang down our heads, and smite upon our breasts, and be in pain and heaviness at our very hearts. I know that the tempers of men are very different, and therefore I do not say that tears are absolutely necessary to repentance, but they do very well become it; and a thorough sense of sin will almost melt the most hard and obdurate disposition, and fetch water out of a very Rock. To be sure the consideration of our ways should cause inward trouble and confusion in our minds. The least we can do when we have done amiss is to be sorry for it, to condemn our own folly, and to be full of indignation and displeasure against our selves for what we have done, and to resolve never to do the like again. And let us make sure that our trouble and sorrow for sin have this effect, to make us leave our sins; and then we shall need to be the less solicitous about the degrees and outward expressions of it.

3. A serious consideration of the evil and unreasonableness of a sinful course. That sin is the stain and blemish of our natures, the reproach of our reason and understanding, the disease and the deformity of our Souls, the great enemy of our peace, the cause of all our fears and troubles: That whenever we do a wicked action we go contrary to the clearest dictates of our reason and conscience, to our plain and true interest, and to the strongest ties and obligations of duty and gratitude. And which renders it yet more unreasonable, sin is a voluntary evil which men wilfully bring upon themselves. Other evils may be forced upon us, whether we will or no; but no man is wicked and vicious but by his own choice. How do we betray our folly and weakness by suffering our selves to be hurried away by every foolish lust and passion to do things which we know to be prejudicial and hurtful to our selves; and so base and unworthy in themselves that we are ashamed to do them, not only in the presence of a wise man, but even of a child or a fool? So that if sin were followed with no other punishment besides the guilt of having done a shameful thing, a man wou'd not by intemperance make himself a fool and a beast; one wou'd not be false and unjust, treacherous or unthankful, if for no other reason, yet out of mere greatness and generosity of mind, out of respect to the dignity of his nature, and out of very reverence to his own reason and understanding. For let witty men say what they will in defence of our Vices, there are so many natural acknowledgments of the evil and unreasonableness of sin that the matter is past all denial: Men are generally galled and uneasy at the thoughts of an evil action, both before and after they have committed it; they are ashamed to be taken in a Crime, and heartily vexed and provoked whenever they are upbraided with it; and 'tis very observable, that tho the greater part of the World always was bad, and vice hath ever had more servants and followers to cry it up, yet never was there any Age so degenerate, in which Vice cou'd get the better of Virtue in point of general esteem and reputation: Even they whose wills have been most enslaved to sin, cou'd never yet so far bribe and corrupt their understandings as to make them give full approbation to it.

4. A due sense of the fearful and fatal consequences of a wicked life. And these are so sad and dreadful, and the danger of them so evident and so perpetually petually threatening us, that no temptation can be sufficient to excuse a man to himself and his own reason for venturing upon them. A principal point of wisdom is to look to the end of things; not only to consider the present pleasure and advantage of any thing, but also the ill consequences of it for the future, and to balance them one against the other.

Now sin in its own nature tends to make men miserable. It certainly causes trouble and disquiet of mind: And to a considerate man, that knows how to value the ease and satisfaction of his own mind, there cannot be a greater argument against sin than to consider that the forsaking of it is the only way to find rest to our souls.

Besides this, every vice is naturally attended with some particular mischief and inconvenience, which maketh it even in this life a punishment to it self; and commonly the Providence of God and his just Judgment upon Sinners strikes in to heighten the mischievous consequences of a sinful course. This we have represented in the Parable of the Prodigal; his riotous course of life did naturally and of it self bring him to want, but the providence of God likewise concurred to render his condition more miserable, at the same time there arose a mighty Famine in the Land; so that he did not only want wherewithal to supply himself, but was cut off from all hopes of relief from the abundance and superfluity of others. Sin brings many miseries upon us, and God many times sends more and greater than sin brings; and the further we go on in a sinful course, the more miseries and the greater difficulties we involve our selves in.

But all these are but light and inconsiderable in comparison of the dreadful miseries of another World; to the danger whereof every man that lives a wicked life does every moment expose himself: So that if we could conquer shame, and had stupidity enough to bear the infamy and reproach of our vices, and the upbraidings of our consciences for them, and the temporal mischiefs and inconveniences of them; tho for the present gratifying of our lusts we could brook and dispense with all these, yet the consideration of the end and issue of a sinful course is an invincible objection against it and never to be answered; tho the violence of our sensual appetites and inclinations should be able to bear down all temporal considerations whatsoever, yet methinks the interest of our everlasting happiness should lye near our hearts; the consideration of another world should mightily amaze and startle us; the horrors of eternal darkness, and the dismal thoughts of being miserable for ever shou'd effectually discourage any man from a wicked life. And this danger continually threatens the sinner, and may if God be not merciful to him happen to surprize him the next moment. And can we make too much haste to fly from so great and apparent a danger? When will we think of saving our selves, if not when (for ought we know) we are upon the very brink of ruin, and just ready to drop into destruction?

5. Upon this naturally follows a full conviction of the necessity of quitting this wicked course. And necessity is always a powerful and over-ruling argument, and doth rather compel than persuade: and after it is once evident leaves no place for further deliberation. And the greater the necessity is, it is still the more cogent argument. For whatever is necessary is so in order to some end, and the greater the end the greater is the necessity of the means without which that end cannot be obtained. Now the chief and last end of all Reasonable Creatures is happiness, and therefore whatever is necessary in order to that hath the highest degree of rational and moral necessity. We are not capable of happiness till we have left our sins, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

But

But tho Men are convinced of this necessity, yet this doth not always enforce a present change; because men hope they may continue in their sins, and remedy all at last by repentance. But this is so great a hazard in all respects that there is no venturing upon it. And in matters of greatest concernment wise men will run no hazards if they can help it. David was so sensible of this danger, that he would not defer his repentance and the change of his life for one moment; I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies: I made haste and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. This day, this hour for ought we know may be the last opportunity of making our peace with God. Therefore we should make haste out of this dangerous state as Lot did out of Sodom, lest fire and brimstone overtake us. He that cannot promise himself the next moment hath a great deal of reason to seize upon the present opportunity. While we are lingring in our sins, if God be not merciful to us we shall be consumed. Therefore make haste sinner and escape for thy life, lest evil overtake thee.

6. Lastly, An apprehension of the possibility of making this change. God who designed us for happiness at first, and after we had made a forfeiture of it by sin was pleased to restore us again to the capacity of it by the Redemption of our blessed Lord and Saviour, hath made nothing necessary to our happiness that is impossible for us to do, either of our selves, or by the assistance of that grace which he is ready to afford us if we heartily beg it of him. For that is possible to us which we may do by the assistance of another, if we may have that assistance for asking: And God hath promised to give his holy Spirit to them that ask him. So that notwithstanding the great corruption and weakness of our natures, since the grace of God which brings salvation hath appeared, it is not absolutely out of our power to leave our sins and to turn to God: For that may truly be said to be in our power which God hath promised to enable us to do, if we be not wanting to our selves.

So that there is nothing on God's part to hinder this change. He hath solemnly declared that he sincerely desires it, and that he is ready to assist our good resolutions to this purpose. And most certainly when he tells us, that he hath no pleasure in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live; that he would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth; that he would not that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance: He means plainly as he saith, and doth not speak to us with any private reserve or nice distinction between his secret and revealed will, that is, he doth not decree one thing and declare the contrary. So far is it from this, that if a sinner entertain serious thoughts of returning to God, and do but once move towards him, how ready is he to receive him! This is in a very lively manner described to us in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, who when he was returning home, and was yet a great way off what haste doth his Father make to meet him? he saw him and had compassion and ran. And if there be no impediment on God's part, why should there be any on ours? One would think all the doubt and difficulty should be on the other side, Whether God would be pleased to shew mercy to such great offenders as we have been. But the business doth not stick there. And will we be miserable by our own choice, when the Grace of God hath put it into our power to be happy? I have done with the first thing, the course which David here took for the reforming of his life; I thought on my ways. I proceed to the

II. The success of this course. It produced actual and speedy reformation. I turned my feet unto thy testimonies; I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. And if we consider the matter thoroughly and have but patience to reason out the case with our selves and to bring our thoughts and deliberations to some issue, the conclusion must naturally be the quitting of that evil and dangerous course in which we have lived. For sin and consideration cannot long dwell together. Did but men consider what sin is, they would have so many unanswerable Objections against it, such strong fears and jealousies of the miserable issue and event of a wicked life, that they would not dare to continue any longer in it.

I do not say that this change is perfectly made at once. A state of sin and holiness are not like two ways that are just parted by a line, so as a man may step out of the one full into the other; but they are like two Ways that lead to two very distant places, and consequently are at a good distance from one another, and the farther any man hath travelled in the one the farther he is from the other; so that it requires time and pains to pass from the one to the other; It sometimes so happens, that some persons are by a mighty conviction and resolution, and by a very extraordinary and overpowering degree of God's grace, almost perfectly reclaimed from their sins at once, and all of a sudden translated out of the Kingdom of darkness into the Kingdom of his dear Son. And thus it was with many of the first Converts to Christianity; as their prejudices against the Christian Religion were strong and violent, so the holy Spirit of God was pleased to work mightily in them that believed. But in the usual and settled methods of God's grace evil habits are mastered and subdued by degrees, and with a great deal of conflict, and many times after they are routed they rally and make head again; and 'tis a great while before the contrary habits of grace and virtue are grown up to any considerable degree of strength and maturity, and before a man come to that confirm'd state of goodness that he may be said to have conquer'd and mortified his lusts. But yet this ought not to discourage us. For so soon as we have seriously begun this change we are in a good way, and all our endeavours will have the acceptance of good beginnings, and God will be ready to help us; and if we pursue our advantages we shall every day gain ground, and the work will grow easier upon our hands; and we who moved at first with so much slowness and difficulty, shall after a while be enabled to run the ways of God's Commandments with pleasure and delight.

I have done with the two things I propounded to speak to from these words, This course here prescribed, and the success of it. And now to persuade men to take this course, I shall offer two or three Arguments.

1. That Consideration is the proper act of Reasonable Creatures. This argument God himself uses, to bring men to a consideration of their evil ways, Isa. 46. 8. Remember, and shew your selves men; bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors. To consider our ways and to call our sins to remembrance, is to shew our selves men. 'Tis the great fault and infelicity of a great many, that they generally live without thinking, and are acted by their present inclinations and appetites without any consideration of the future consequences of things, and without fear of any thing but of a present and sensible danger; like Brute Creatures, who fear no evils but what are in view and just ready to fall upon them: Whereas to a prudent and considerate man a good or evil in reversion is capable of as true an estimation, proportionably to the greatness and distance of it, as if it were really present. And what do we think God has given us our reason and understandings for, but to foresee evils at a distance, and to prevent them; to provide for our future security and happiness, to look up to God our Maker, who hath taught us more than

than the Beasts of the earth, and made us wiser than the Fowls of heaven ; but to consider what we do, and what we ought to do, and what makes most for our future and lasting interest, and what against it ? What can a Beast do worse than to act without any consideration and design, than to pursue his present inclination without any apprehension of true danger ? The most dull and stupid of all the brute Creatures can hardly exercise less reason than this comes to. So that for a man not to consider his ways is to the very best intents and purposes to be without understanding, and like the beasts that perish.

2. This is the end of God's patience and long suffering towards us, to bring us to consideration, the great design of God's goodness is to lead men to repentance. He winks at the sins of men, that they may repent. He bears long with us, and delays the punishment of our sins, and doth not execute judgment speedily, because he is loth to surprize men into destruction ; because he would give them the liberty of second thoughts, time to reflect upon themselves, and to consider what they have done, and to reason themselves into repentance. Consider this all ye that forget God, lest his patience turn into fury, and he tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you.

3. Consideration is that which we must all come to one time or other. Time will come when we shall consider and cannot help it, when we shall not be able to divert our thoughts from those things which we are now so loth to think upon. Our Consciences will take their opportunity to bring our ways to remembrance, when some great calamity or affliction is upon us. Thus it was with the Prodigal, when he was brought to the very last extremity and was ready to perish with hunger, then he came to himself. When we come to die, then we shall think of our ways with trouble and vexation enough ; and how glad wou'd we then be that we had time to consider them ? And perhaps while we are wishing for more time Eternity will swallow us up. To be sure in the other world, a great part of the misery of wicked men will consist in furious reflections upon themselves and the evil actions of their lives. 'Tis said of the Rich voluptuous man in the Parable, that in hell he lift up his eyes being in torment ; as if he had never considered and bethought himself till that time. But alas ! it will then be too late to consider : For then consideration will do us no good ; it will serve to no other purpose but to aggravate our misery, and to multiply our slings, and to give new life and rage to those Vultures which will perpetually prey upon our hearts. But how much a wiser course wou'd it be to consider these things in time, in order to our eternal peace and comfort ; to think of them while we may redress them and avoid the dismal consequences of them, than when our case is desperate and past remedy ?

And now what can I say more to persuade every one of us to a consideration of our own ways ? We are generally apt to busy our selves in observing the errors and miscarriages of our Neighbours, and are forward to mark and censure the faults and follies of other men ; but how few descend into themselves, and turn their eyes inward, and say, What have I done ? 'Tis an excellent saying of Antoninus the great Emperor and Philosopher, No man was ever unhappy for not prying into the actions and conditions of other men, but that man is necessarily unhappy who doth not observe himself, and consider the state of his own soul.

This is our proper work ; and now is a proper season for it, when we pretend to God and men to set apart a solemn time for the examination of our selves, and for a serious review of our lives in order to humiliation and repentance, to the reforming and amendment of what is amiss. And tho we would venture to dissemble with men, yet let us not dissemble with God also ; For shall not he that pondereth the heart consider it ; and he that keepeth the soul, shall not he know it ; and shall not he render to every man according to his ways ?

I know it is a very unpleasant work which I am now putting you upon, and therefore no wonder that men are generally so backward to it ; because it will of necessity give some present disturbance to their minds. They whose lives have been very vicious, are so odious a sight, so horrid a spectacle to themselves, that they cannot endure to reflect upon their own ways ; of all things in the world they hate Consideration, and are ready to say to it as the evil Spirit did in the Gospel to our Saviour, What have I to do with thee ? Art thou come to torment me before the time ? But let not this affright us from it ; for whatever trouble it may cause at present, it is the only way to prevent the anguish and the torments of Eternity.

The things which I have offer'd to your consideration are of huge moment and importance. They do not concern your bodies and estates, but that which is more truly your selves, your immortal souls, the dearest and most durable part of your selves : and they do not concern us for a little while, but for ever. Let me therefore bespeak your most serious regard to them in the words of Moses to the People of Israel, after he had set the Law of God before them, together with the blessings promised to obedience, and the terrible Curse threaten'd to the transgression of it, Deut. 32. 46. Set your hearts to the words which I testify to you this day, for it is not a vain thing, because it is your life. Your life, your eternal life and happiness depends upon it.

And besides a tender regard to your selves and your own interests, which methinks every man out of a natural desire of being happy and dread of being miserable should be forward enough to consider : Be pleas'd likewise to lay to heart the influence of your example upon others. I speak now to a great many persons, the eminence of whose rank and quality renders their examples so powerful as to be able almost to give authority either to Virtue or Vice. People take their fashions from you, as to the habits of their minds as well as their bodies. So that upon you chiefly depends the ruin or reformation of manners, our hopes or despair of a better world. What way soever you go you are followed by troops. If you run any sinful or dangerous course, you cannot perish alone in your iniquity, but thousands will fall by your side, and ten thousands at your right hands : And on the contrary, 'tis very much in your power, and I hope in your wills and designs, to be the sovereign restorers of Piety and Virtue to a degenerate Age. It is our part indeed to exhort men to their duty, but 'tis you that would be the powerful and effectual preachers of righteousness. We may endeavour to make men profelytes to virtue, but you would infallibly draw disciples after you : We may try to persuade, but you could certainly prevail, either to make men good, or to restrain them from being so bad.

Therefore consider your ways, for the sake of others as well as your selves. Consider what you have done, and then consider what is fit for you to do, and if you do it not, what will be the end of these things. And to help you forward in this work it is not necessary that I should rip up the vices of the Age, and set mens sins in order before them. It is much better that you your selves should call your own ways to remembrance. We have every one a faithful Monitor and Witness in our own breasts, who, if we will but hearken to him, will deal impartially with us, and privately tell us the errors of our lives. To this Monitor I refer you, and to the grace of God to make these admonitions effectual.

Let

Let us then every one of us, in the fear of God, search and try our ways, and turn unto the Lord. Let us take to our selves words, and say to God with those true Penitents in Scripture, I have sinned, what shall be done unto thee, O thou Preserver of men? Behold, I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth, I will abhor my self, and repent in dust and ashes. For surely it is meet to be said unto God, I will not offend any more; that which I know not teach thou me, and if I have done iniquity I will do no more. O that there were such an heart in us! O that we were wise, that we understood this, that we would consider our latter end! And God of his infinite mercy inspire into every one of our hearts this holy and happy resolution, for the sake of our blessed Saviour and Redeemer, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost be all honour and glory now and for ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XIV.

The Folly and Danger of Irresolution and Delaying.

P S A L. CXIX. 60.

I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments.

IN the words immediately going before, you have the Course which David took for the reformatting of his life, and the success of that course; I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. A serious reflection upon the past errors and miscarriages of his life produced the reformation of it. And you have a considerable circumstance added in these words that I have now read to you, that this reformation was speedy and without delay, I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. Upon due consideration of his former life, and a full conviction of the necessity of a change, he came to a resolution of a better life, and immediately put this resolution in execution; and to declare how presently and quickly he did it, he expresses it both affirmatively and negatively, after the manner of the Hebrews, who when they would say a thing with great certainty and Emphasis, are wont to express it both ways, I made haste, and delayed not; that is, I did with all imaginable speed betake my self to a better course.

And this is the natural effect of consideration; and the true cause why men delay to necessary a work is, because they stifle their reason and suffer themselves to be hurried into the embraces of present Objects, and do not consider their latter end, and what will be the sad issue and event of a wicked life. For if men would take an impartial view of their lives, and but now and then reflect upon themselves and lay to heart the miserable and fatal consequences of a sinful course, and think whither it will bring them at last, and that the end of these things will be death and misery: If the carnal and sensual person would but look about him, and consider how many have been ruin'd in the way that he is in, how many lie slain and wounded in it, that it is the way to hell, and leads down to the chambers of death, this would certainly give a check to him, and stop him in his course.

For it is not to be imagined but that that man who hath duly considered what sin is, the shortness of its pleasures, and the eternity of its punishment, should resolve immediately to break off his sins, and to live another kind of life. Would any Man be intemperate and walk after the flesh, would any man be unjust or defraud or oppress his Neighbour, be prophane and live in the contempt of God and Religion, or allow himself in any wicked course whatsoever, that considers and believes a Judgment to come, and that because of these things the terrible vengeance of God will one day fall upon the Children of Disobedience? It is not credible that men who apply themselves seriously to the meditation of these matters, should venture to continue in so imprudent and dangerous a course, or could by any temptation whatsoever soever be trained on one step farther in a Way that does so certainly and visibly lead to ruin and destruction.

So that my Work at this time shall be, to endeavour to convince men of the monstrous folly and unreasonableness of delaying the reformation and amendment of their lives; and to persuade us to resolve upon it, and having resolved, to set about it immediately and without delay; in imitation of the good man here in the Text, I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy Commandments. And to this end, I shall

First, Consider the reasons and excuses which men pretend for delaying this necessary work, and shew the unreasonableness of them.

Secondly, I shall add some farther Considerations to engage us effectually to set about this work speedily and without delay.

I. We will consider a little the reasons and excuses which men pretend for delaying this necessary work; and not only shew the unreasonableness of them, but that they are each of them a strong reason and powerful Argument to the contrary.

1. Many pretend that they are abundantly convinced of the great necessity of leaving their sins and betaking themselves to a better course, and they fully intend to do so; only they cannot at present bring themselves to it, but they hope hereafter to be in a better temper and disposition, and then they resolve by God's grace to set about this work in good earnest, and to go through with it.

I know not whether it be fit to call this a Reason; I am sure it is the greatest cheat and delusion that any man can put upon himself. For this plainly shews that thou dost not intend to do this which thou art convinced is so necessary, but to put it off from day to day. For there is no greater evidence that a Man doth not really intend to do a thing, than when notwithstanding he ought upon all accounts and may in all respects better do it at present than hereafter, yet he still puts it off. Whatever thou pretendest, this is a mere shift to get rid of a present trouble. It is like giving good words and making fair promises to a clamorous and importunate creditor, and appointing him to come another day, when the man knows in his conscience that he intends not to pay him, and that he shall be less able to discharge the Debt then, than he is at present. Whatever reasons thou hast against reforming thy life now, will still remain, and be in as full force hereafter, nay probably stronger than they are at present. Thou art unwilling now, and so thou wilt be hereafter, and in all likelihood much more unwilling. So that this reason will every day improve upon thy hands, and have so much the more strength by how much the longer thou continuest in thy sins. Thou hast no reason in the world against the present time but only that 'tis present; why when hereafter comes to be present the reason will be just the same. So that thy present unwillingness is so far from being a just reason against it, that 'tis a good reason the other way; because thou art unwilling now, and like to be so, nay more so hereafter; if thou intendest to do it at all thou shouldest set about it immediately, and without delay.

2. Another reason which men pretend for the delaying of this work, is the great difficulty and unpleasantness of it. And it cannot be denied but that there will be some bitterness and uneasiness in it, proportionably to the growth of evil habits, and the strength of our lusts, and our greater or less progress and continuance in a sinful course: So that we must make account of a sharp conflict, of some pain and trouble in the making of this change, that it will cost us some pangs and throws before we be born again. For when, when nature hath been long bent another way, it is not to be expected that it should be reduced and brought back to its first straightness without pain and violence.

But then it is to be considered, that how difficult and painful soever this work be, it is necessary, and that should over-rule all other considerations whatsoever; that if we will not be at this pains and trouble, we must one time or other endure far greater than those which we now seek to avoid; that it is not so difficult as we imagine, but our fears of it are greater than the trouble will prove; if we were but once resolved upon the Work, and seriously engaged in it, the greatest part of the trouble were over; it is like the fear of children to go into the cold water, a faint trial increaseth their fear and apprehension of it; but so soon as they have plunged into it the trouble is over, and then they wonder why they were so much afraid. The main difficulty and unpleasantness is in our first entrance into Religion; it presently grows tolerable, and soon after easie, and after that by degrees so pleasant and delightful that the man would not for all the World return to his former evil state and condition of life.

We should consider likewise what is the true cause of all this trouble and difficulty; 'Tis our long continuance in a sinful course that hath made us so loth to leave it; 'Tis the custom of sinning that renders it so troublesome and uneasie to men to do otherwise: 'Tis the greatness of our guilt, heightened and inflamed by many and repeated provocations, that doth so gall our consciences and fill our souls with so much terror: 'Tis because we have gone so far in an evil way that our retreat is become so difficult, and because we have delayed this work so long that we are now so unwilling to go about it; and consequently, the longer we delay it the trouble and difficulty of a change will increase daily upon us. And all these considerations are so far from being a good reason for more delays, that they are a strong argument to the contrary: Because the work is difficult now, therefore do not make it more so; and because your delays have increased the difficulty of it, and will do more and more, therefore delay no longer.

3. Another pretended encouragement to these delays, is the great mercy and patience of God. He commonly bears longer with sinners, and therefore there is no such absolute and urgent necessity of a speedy repentance and reformation of our lives. Men have not the face to give this for a reason, but yet for all that it lies at the bottom of many mens hearts: So Solomon tells us, Eccles. 8. 11. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

But it is not always thus. There are few of us but have seen several instances of God's severity to sinners, and have known several persons surprized by a sudden hand of God, and cut off in the very act of sin without having the least respite given them, without time or liberty so much as to ask God forgiveness, and to consider either what they had done, or whither they were going. And this may be the case of any Sinner, and is so much the more likely to be thy case, because thou dost so boldly presume upon the mercy and patience of God.

But if it were always thus, and thou wert sure to be spared yet a while longer; what can be more unreasonable and disingenuous than to resolve to be evil because God is good, and because he suffers so long to sin so much the longer, and because he affords thee a space of repentance therefore to delay it and put it off to the last? The proper design of God's goodness is to lead men to repentance, and he never intended his patience for an encouragement to men to continue in their sins, but for an opportunity and an argument to break them off by repentance. These

These are the pretended reasons and encouragements to men to delay their repentance and the reformation of their lives, and you see how groundless and unreasonable they are; which was the first thing I propounded to speak to.

II. I shall add some further considerations, to engage men effectually to set about this work speedily, and without delay. And because they are many I shall insist upon those which are most weighty and considerable, without being very curious and solicitous about the method and order of them: For provided they be but effectual to the end of persuasion, it matters not how inartificially they are ranged and disposed.

1. Consider, that in matters of great and necessary concernment, and which must be done, there is no greater argument of a weak and impotent mind than irresolution, to be undetermin'd where the case is so plain and the necessity so urgent, to be always about doing that which we are convinced must be done.

Victaros agimus semper, nec vivimus unquam.

We are always intending to live a new life, but can never find a time to set about it. This is as if a man should put off eating and drinking and sleeping from one day and night to another, till he have starved and destroyed himself. It seldom falls under any man's deliberation whether he should live or not, if he can chuse; and if he cannot chuse, 'tis in vain to deliberate about it. It is much more absurd to deliberate whether we should live virtuously or religiously, soberly or righteously in the world, for that upon the matter is to consult whether a man should be happy or not; Nature hath determined this for us, and we need not reason about it; and consequently, we ought not to delay that which we are convinced is so necessary in order to it.

2. Consider that Religion is a great and a long work, and asks so much time that there is none left for the delaying of it. To begin with Repentance, which is commonly our first entrance into Religion: This alone is a great work, and is not only the business of a sudden thought and resolution but of execution and action: 'Tis the abandoning of a sinful course, which we cannot leave till we have in some degree mastered our lusts; for so long as they are our Masters, like Pharaoh, they will keep us in bondage and not let us go to serve the Lord. The habits of sin and vice are not to be pluck'd up and cast off at once; as they have been long in contracting, so without a miracle it will require a competent time to subdue them and get the victory over them; for they are conquered just by the same degrees that the habits of grace and virtue grow up and get strength in us.

So that there are several duties to be done in Religion, and often to be repeated; many graces and virtues are to be long practised and exercised before the contrary vices will be subdued, and before we arrive to a confirmed and settled state of goodness; such a state as can only give us a clear and comfortable evidence of the sincerity of our resolution and repentance, and of our good condition towards God. We have many lusts to mortify, many passions to govern and bring into order, much good to do, to make what amends and reparation we can for the much evil we have done: We have many things to learn; and many to unlearn, to which we shall be strongly prompted by the corrupt inclinations of our nature, and the remaining power of ill habits and customs: and perhaps we have satisfaction and restitution to make for the many injuries we have done to others, in their persons, or estates, or reputations : In a word, we have a body of sin to put off, which clings close to us and is hard to part with : we have to cleanse our selves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and to perfect holiness in the fear of God ; to increase and improve our graces and virtues ; to add to our faith knowledge, and temperance, and patience, and brotherly kindness, and charity ; and to abound in all the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ to the praise and glory of God : We have to be useful to the world, and exemplary to others in a holy and virtuous conversation ; our light is so to shine before men, that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in Heaven.

And do we think all this is to be done in an instant, and requires no time ? That we may delay and put off to the last, and yet do all this work well enough ? Do we think we can do all this in time of sickness and old age, when we are not fit to do any thing ; when the spirit of a man can hardly bear the infirmities of nature, much less a guilty conscience and a wounded spirit ? Do we think that when the day hath been idly spent and squandered away by us, that we shall be fit to work when the night and darkness comes ? When our understanding is weak, and our memory frail, and our will crooked, and by a long custom of sinning obstinately bent the wrong way, what can we then do in Religion ? what reasonable or acceptable service can we then perform to God ? When our candle is just sinking into the socket, how shall our light so shine before men, that others may see our good works ?

Alas ! the longest life is no more than sufficient for a man to reform himself in, to repent of the errors of his life, and to amend what is amiss : to put our souls into a good posture and preparation for another world, to train up our selves for eternity, and to make our selves meet to be made partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light.

3. Consider what a desperate hazard we run by these delays. Every delay of repentance is a venturing the main chance. It is uncertain whether hereafter we shall have time for it, and if we have time whether we shall have a heart to it, and the assistance of God's grace to go thorough with it. God indeed hath been graciously pleased to promise pardon to repentance ; but he hath no where promised life and leisure, the aids of his grace and holy Spirit to those who put off their repentance ; he hath no where promised acceptance to mere sorrow and trouble for sin, without fruits meet for repentance, and amendment of life : He hath no where promised to receive them to mercy and favour who only give him good words, and are at last contented to condescend so far to him as to promise to leave their sins when they can keep them no longer. Many have gone thus far in times of affliction and sickness, as to be awakened to a great sense of their sins, and to be mightily troubled for their wicked lives, and to make solemn promises and professions of becoming better ; and yet upon their deliverance and recovery all hath vanished and come to nothing, and their righteousness hath been as the morning cloud, and as the early dew which passeth away : And why should any man, merely upon account of a death-bed repentance, reckon himself in a better condition than those persons who have done as much and gone as far as he ; and there is no other difference between them but this, that the repentance of the former was tried, and proved insincere, but the death-bed repentance never came to a trial ; and yet for all that God knows whether it were sincere or not, and how it would have proved if the man had lived longer. Why should any man for offering up to God the mere refuse and dregs of his life, and the days which himself hath no pleasure in, expect to receive the reward of eternal life and happiness at his hands ?

But

But tho we do not design to delay this work so long, yet ought we to consider that all delays in a matter of this consequence are extremely dangerous; because we put off a business of the greatest concernment to the future, and in so doing put it to the hazard whether ever it shall be done: For the future is as much out of our power to command, as it is to call back the time which is past. Indeed if we could arrest time and strike off the nimble wheels of his Chariot, and like Joshua bid the Sun stand still, and make opportunity tarry as long as he had occasion for it; this were something to excuse our delay, or at least to mitigate or abate the folly and unreasonableness of it: But this we cannot do. It is in our power, under the influence of God's grace and holy Spirit, to amend our lives now, but it is not in our power to live till to morrow; and who will part with an estate in hand, which he may presently enter upon the possession of, for an uncertain reversion; and yet thus we deal in the great and everlasting concerns of our souls; we trifle away the present opportunities of salvation, and vainly promise to our selves the future; we let go that which is in our power, and fondly dispose of that which is out of our power, and in the hands of God.

Lay hold then upon the present opportunities, and look upon every action thou dost, and every opportunity of doing any, as possibly thy last; for so it may prove, for any thing thou canst tell to the contrary. If a man's life lay at stake and he had but one throw for it, with what care and with what concernment would he manage that action? What thou art doing next may, for ought thou knowest be for thy life and for all eternity. So much of thy life is most certainly past, and God knows thou hast yet done little or nothing towards the securing of thy future happiness: It is not certain how much or how little is remaining, therefore be sure to make the best use of that little which may be left, and wisely to manage the last stake.

4. Seeing the delay of Repentance doth mainly rely upon the hopes and encouragement of a future repentance, let us consider a little how unreasonable these hopes are, and how absurd the encouragement is which men take from them. To sin in hopes that hereafter we shall repent, is to do a thing in hopes that we shall one day be mightily ashamed of it, that we shall one time or other be heartily grieved and troubled that we have done it: It is to do a thing in hopes that we shall afterwards condemn our selves for it, and wish a thousand times we had never done it; in hopes that we shall be full of horror at the thoughts of what we have done, and shall treasure up so much guilt in our consciences as will make us a terror to our selves, and be ready to drive us even to despair and distraction. And is this a reasonable hope? Is this a sitting encouragement for a wise man to give to himself, to any action? And yet this is plainly the true meaning of mens going on in their sins, in hopes that hereafter they shall repent of them.

5. If you be still resolved to delay this business and put it off at present, consider well with your selves how long you intend to delay it. I hope not to the last, nor till sickness come and death make his approaches to you. This is next to madness to venture all upon such an after-game. 'Tis just as if a man should be content to be shipwreck'd, in hope that he shall afterwards escape by a plank and get safe to shore. But I hope none are so unreasonable, yet I fear that many have a mind to put it off to old age, tho they do not care to say so. Seneca expostulates excellently with this sort of men; Who shall ensure thy Life till that time? Who shall pass his word for thee, that the providence of God will suffer all things to happen and fall out just as thou hast designed and forecaſt them? Art thou not aſhamed to reſerve the relics of thy life for thy ſelf, and to ſet apart only that time only to be wiſe and virtuous in, which is good for nothing? How late is it then to begin to live well when thy life is almoſt at an end? What a ſtupid forgetfulneſs is it of our mortality, to put off good reſolutions to the fiftieth or fixtieth year of our age, and reſolve to begin to do better at that time of life to which very few perſons have reach'd?

But perhaps thou art not altogether ſo unreaſonable, but deſireſt only to reſpite this work till the firſt heat of youth and luſt be over, till the cooler and more conſiderate part of thy life come on; that perhaps thou thinkeſt may be the fitteſt and moſt convenient ſeaſon. But ſtill we reckon upon uncertainties, for perhaps that ſeaſon may never be: However, to be ſure it is much more in our power, by the aſſiſtance of God's grace which is never wanting to the ſincere endeavours of men, to conquer our luſts now, and to reſiſt the moſt heady and violent temptations to vice, than either to ſecure the future time, or to recover that which is once paſt and gone.

Some ſeem yet more reaſonable, and are content to come lower, and deſire only to put it off for a very little while. But why for a little while? Why till to morrow? To morrow will be as this day, only with this difference, that thou wilt in all probability be more unwilling and indiſpoſed then.

So that there is no future time which any man can reaſonably pitch upon. All delay in this caſe is dangerous, and as ſenſleſs as the expectation of the Idiot deſcribed by the Poet, who being come to the river ſide and intending to paſs over, ſlays till all the water in the river be gone by and hath left the channel a dry paſſage for him.

Labitur, & labetur in omne volubilis ævum.

But the river runs, and runs, and will run, and if he ſhould ſtay a thouſand years will never be the nearer being dry. So that if the man muſt go over, and there be a neceſſity for it (as there is for Repentance) the only wiſe reſolution to be taken in this caſe, is to wade or ſwim over as well as he can, becauſe the matter will never be amended by tarrying.

6. Laſtly, Conſider what an unſpeakable happineſs it is to have our minds ſettled in that condition, that we may without fear and amazement, nay with comfort and confidence expect death and judgment. Death is never far from any of us, and the general Judgment of the world may be nearer than we are aware of; for of that day and hour knoweth no man. And theſe are two terrible things, and nothing can free us from the terror of them but a good conſcience, and a good conſcience is only to be had either by innocence, or by repentance and amendment of life. Happy man! who by this means is at peace with God, and with himſelf; and can think of death and judgment without dread and aſtoniſhment. For the ſting of death is ſin; and the terror of the great day only concerns thoſe who have lived wickedly and impenitently, and would not be perſuaded, neither by the mercies of God, nor by the fear of his judgments, to repent and turn to him: But if we have truly forſaken our ſins, and do ſincerely endeavour to live in obedience to the Laws and Commands of God, the more we think of death and judgment the greater matter of joy and Comfort will theſe things be to us: For blessed is that ſervant, whom his Lord when he comes ſhall find ſo doing. Let us therefore as ſoon as poſſibly we can put our ſelves into this poſture and preparation, according to that advice of our bleſſed Saviour, Luke 12. 35, 36. Let your loins be girded about, and your lamps burning, and ye your ſelves like unto men that wait for their Lord.

And

And now I hope that enough hath been said to convince men of the great unreasonableness and folly of these delays; nay I believe that most men are convinced of it by their own thoughts, and that their Consciences call them fools a thousand times for it: But O that I knew what to say that might prevail with men and effectually persuade them to do that which they are so abundantly convinced is so necessary.

And here I might address my self to the several Ages of Persons. You that are young, and have hitherto been in a good measure innocent, may prevent the Devil, and by an early Piety give God the first possession of your souls; and by this means never be put to the trouble of so great and solemn a Repentance, having never been deeply engaged in a wicked life: You may do a glorious, I had almost said a meritorious thing, in cleaving stedfastly to God and resolving to serve him, when you are so importunately courted and so hotly assaulted by the Devil and the World. However, you may not live to be old; therefore upon that consideration begin the work presently, and make use of the opportunity that is now in your hands.

You that are grown up to ripeness of years and are in the full vigour of your age, you are to be put in mind that the heat and inconsiderateness of youth is now past and gone, that reason and consideration are now in their perfection and strength, that this is the very age of prudence and discretion, of wisdom and wariness: So that now is the proper time for you to be serious, and wisely to secure your future happiness.

As for those that are old, they methinks should need no body to admonish them, that it is now high time for them to begin a new life, and that the time past of their Lives is too much to have spent in sin and folly. There is no trifling where men have a great work to do, and but little time to do it in. Your Sun is certainly going down and near its setting, therefore you should quicken your pace, considering that your Journey is never the shorter because you have but little time to perform it in. Alas man! thou art just ready to die, and hast thou not yet begun to live? Are thy passions and lusts yet unsubdued, and have they had no other mortification than what age hath given them? 'Tis strange to see how in the very extremities of old-age, many men are as if they had still a thousand years to live, and make no preparation for death, tho' it dogs them at the heels and is just come up to them and ready to give them the fatal stroke.

Therefore let us not put off this necessary work of reforming our selves, in what part and age of our lives soever we be: To day whilst it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Nay, to day is with the latest to begin this Work; had we been wise we would have begun it sooner. 'Tis God's infinite mercy to us that it is not quite too late, that the day of God's patience is not quite expired, and the door shut against us. Therefore do not defer your repentance to the next solemn time, to the next occasion of receiving the blessed Sacrament: Do not say, I will then reform and become a new man, after that I will take leave of my lusts, and sin no more. For let us make what haste we can, we cannot possibly make too much.

No man makes haste enough to be good, to cease to do evil, and to learn to do well. Be as quick as we will, life will be too nimble for us, and go on faster than our work does, and death will go nigh to prevent us and surprise us unawares.

Do, do, sinner; abuse and neglect thy self yet a little while longer, till the time of regarding thy soul and working out thy own salvation be at an end, and all the opportunities of minding that great concernment be slipped out of thy hands, never to be recovered, never to be called back again; no, not by thy most earnest wishes and desires, by thy most fervent prayers and tears; and thou be brought into the condition of profane Esau, who for once despising the Blessing lost it for ever, and found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

To conclude: Art thou convinced that thy eternal happiness depends upon following the Advice which hath now been given thee? Why then do but behave thy self in this case, as thou and all prudent men are wont to do in matters which thou canst not but acknowledge to be of far less concernment. If a man be travelling to such a place, so soon as he finds himself out of the way he presently stops and makes towards the right way, and hath no inclination to go wrong any farther: If a man be sick, he will be well presently if he can, and not put it off to the future: Most men will gladly take the first opportunity that presents it self, of being rich or great; every man almost catches at the very first offers of a great place or a good purchase, and secures them presently if he can, lest the opportunity be gone, and another snatch these things from him. Do thou thus so much more in matter so much greater. Return from the error of thy way, be well, save thy self, as soon as possibly thou canst. When happiness presents it self to thee do not turn it off, and bid it come again to morrow. Perhaps thou may'st never be so fairly offered again, perhaps the day of salvation may not come again to morrow, nay perhaps to thee to morrow may never come. But if we were sure that happiness would come again, yet why should we put it off? Does any man know how to be safe and happy to day, and can he find in his heart to tarry till to morrow?

Now the God of all mercy and patience give every one of us the wisdom and grace to know and to do, in this our day, the things that belong to our peace, before they be hid from our eyes; for the sake of our blessed Saviour and Redeemer, To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost be all honour and glory now and for ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XV.

The distinguishing Character of a Good and a Bad Man.

I JOHN III. 10.

In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil: whosoever doth not righteousness is not of God.

IT is certainly a matter of the greatest consequence to us, both in order to our present peace and future happiness, truly to understand our spiritual state and condition, and whether we belong to God and be his Children or not. And it is not so difficult as is commonly imagined to arrive at this knowledge, if we have a mind to it, and will but deal impartially with our selves; for the Text gives us a plain mark and character whereby we may know it, In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil: whosoever doth not righteousness is not of God.

From which words I shall endeavour by God's assistance to lay men open to themselves, and to represent to every one of us the truth of our condition; and then leave it to the grace of God, and every man's serious consideration, to make the best use of it.

And it will conduce very much to the clearing of this matter, to consider briefly the occasion of these words. And this will best appear by attending stedfastly to the main scope and design of this Epistle. And I think that no man that reads it with attention can doubt but that it is particularly designed against the impious Sect of the Gnosticks, who, as the Fathers tell us, sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary knowledge and illumination, from whence they had the name of Gnosticks; but notwithstanding this glittering pretence they did allow themselves in all manner of impious and vicious practices, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, as St. Jude speaks of them. And that St. John aims particularly at this sort of men, is very evident from the frequent and plain allusions throughout this Epistle to those Names and Titles which this Sect assumed to themselves, as Chap. 2. ver. 4. He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. And ver. 9. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. Which passages, and many more in this Epistle, do plainly refer to the pretences of this Sect to more than ordinary knowledge and illumination in the mysteries of Religion; notwithstanding they did so notoriously contradict these glorious pretences by the impiety of their lives, and particularly by their hatred and enmity to their Fellow-Christians. For, as the ancient Fathers tell us, they pretended that whatever they did they could not sin. And this our Apostle intimates in the beginning of this Epistle, If we say that we have no sin we deceive ceive our selves, and the truth is not in us. And they held it lawful to renounce Christianity to avoid persecution; and not only so, but also to join with the Heathen in persecuting the Christians; which seems to be the reason why the Apostle so often taxeth them for hatred to their Brethren, and calls them Murderers.

Now to shew the inconsistency of these principles and practices with Christianity the Apostle useth many Arguments, amongst which he particularly insisteth upon this, That nothing is more essential to a Disciple of Christ and a Child of God (by which Titles Christians were commonly known) than to abstain from the practice of all sin and wickedness; ver. 6. of this Chap. Whoever abideth in him sinneth not; whoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him, (whatever Knowledge they might pretend to, it was evident they were destitute of the true knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ) and Ver. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous; and Ver. 8. He that committeth sin is of the Devil; and Ver. 9. Whoever is born of God doth not commit sin; let men pretend what they will, wickedness is a plain mark and character of one that belongs to the Devil; as on the contrary righteousness is an evidence of a Child of God: In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil, &c.

I shall briefly explain the words, and then consider the matter contained in them.

By the children of God, and the children of the Devil, are meant good and bad men; it being usual in the phrase of Scripture to call persons or things which partake of such a nature or quality, the children of those who are eminently endued with that nature and disposition. Thus they who are of the faith of Abraham, and do the works of Abraham, are called Abraham's children: In like manner, those who in their dispositions and actions imitate God are called the children of God; and on the contrary, those that addict themselves to sin and impiety are counted of another race and descent, they resemble the Devil and belong to him as the Chief and Head of that Faction.

By righteousness is here meant universal goodness and conformity to the Law of God, in opposition to sin which is the transgression of that Law.

By being manifest is meant, that hereby good and bad men are really distinguished, so that every one that will examine his condition by this mark may know of which number he is, and to what Party he belongs.

I come now to the main argument contained in the words, which is to give us a certain character and mark of distinction between a good and bad man; ὅν τέρα, by this the children of God are manifest and the children of the Devil; whoever doth not righteousness is not of God.

In the management of the following Discourse, I shall proceed in this method.

First, We will consider the character and mark of difference between a good and bad man which is here laid down, Whoever doth not righteousness is not of God.

Secondly, I shall endeavour to shew that by this mark every man may, with due care and diligence, come to the knowledge of his spiritual state and condition. By this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil.

Thirdly, I shall enquire whence it comes to pass, that notwithstanding this so many persons are at so great uncertainty concerning their condition,

We will consider the character and mark of difference between a good and bad man, which is here in the Text, Whoever doth not righteousness is not of God; which implies likewise on the contrary, that whoever doth righteousness is of God. Now in the strictest sense of this Phrase, he only who lives in all the commandments of God blameless can be said to do righteousness; But in this sense there is none that doth righteousness, no, not one; and consequently none could be the Children of God; but the Text supposes some to be so, and therefore by doing righteousness, the Apostle must necessarily be understood to mean something that is short of perfect and unfinishing obedience. So that the question is, What doing of righteousness is sufficient to denominate a man a Child of God, and to put him into a state of grace and favour with him?

And I do not intend nicely to state this matter. 'Tis not perhaps possible to be done, nothing being more difficult than to determine the very utmost bounds and limits of things, and to tell exactly and just to a point where the line of difference between Virtue and Vice, between the state of a good a bad man, is to be placed: And if it could be done, it would be of no great use; for I take it to be no part of my business to tell men how many faults they may have, and how little goodness, and yet be the Children of God: but rather to acquaint them what degrees of holiness and goodness are necessary to give men a clear and comfortable evidence of their good estates towards God, and then to persuade them in order to their peace and assurance to endeavour after such degrees.

Wherefore to state the business so far as is necessary to give men a sufficient knowledge of their condition, I shall briefly consider who they are that in the Apostle's sense may be said to be doers of righteousness, or not doers of it. And because the Apostle lays down the Rule negatively, I shall therefore

In the first place, enquire who they are that in the Apostle's sense may be said not to do righteousness.

1. They that live in the general course of a wicked life, in the practice of great and known sins, as injustice, intemperance, filthy and sensual lusts, prophane neglect and contempt of God and Religion, so that by the whole course and tenor of their actions it is plain beyond all denial that there is no fear of God before their eyes. Concerning these the case is so very evident that it seems too mild and gentle an expression to call them not doers of righteousness.

2. They who live in the habitual practice of any one known sin, or in the neglect of any considerable part of their known duty. For any vicious habit denominates a man, and puts him into an evil state.

3. They who are guilty of the single act of a very heinous and notorious crime; as a deliberate act of blasphemy, of murder, perjury, fraud or oppression, or of any other crime of the like enormity. For tho ordinarily one single act of sin doth not denominate one a bad man, when the general course of the man's life is contrary; yet the single acts of some sorts of sins are so crying and heinous, and do so stare every man's conscience in the face, that they are justly esteemed to be of equal malignity with vicious habits of an inferior kind; because they do almost necessarily suppose a great depravation of mind, and a monstrous alienation from God and goodness in the person that deliberately commits them. And they who are guilty in any of these three degrees now mentioned are most certainly not doers of righteousness, and consequently it is manifest that they are not the children of God.

In the second place, I shall enquire who they are that in the Apostle's sense may be said to do righteousness. In short, they who in the general course of their lives do keep the Commandments of God. And thus the Scripture generally expresseth this matter, by keeping the Commandments of God, and by having respect to all his Commandments; by obedience to the Gospel of Christ; by being holy in all manner of conversation; by abstaining from all kind of evil; by cleansing our selves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; and by practising holiness in the fear of God: To which I shall add the description which St. Luke gives us of the righteousness of Zacharias and Elizabeth, Luke 1. 6. They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. All which expressions do plainly signify the actual conformity of our lives and actions in the general course and tenor of them, to the Laws and Commands of God. And this implies these two things; That the tenor of our lives and actions be agreeable to these Laws of God: And that these actions be done with a sincere and upright mind; out of regard to God and another world, and not for low and temporal ends.

And I chuse rather to describe a righteous man by the actual conformity of the general course of his actions to the Law of God, than (as some have done) by a sincere Desire or resolution of obedience. For a desire may be sincere for the time it lasts, and yet vanish before it comes to any real effect. And how innocently soever it was intended it is certainly a great mistake in Divinity, and of very dangerous consequence to the souls of men, to affirm that a Desire of grace is grace; and consequently by the same reason, that a desire of obedience is obedience. A sincere desire and resolution to be good is indeed a good beginning, and ought by all means to be cherished and encouraged; but yet it is far enough from being the thing desired, or from being accepted for it in the esteem of God: For God never accepts the Desire for the deed, but where there is no possibility, no opportunity of doing the thing desired; but if there be, and the thing be not done, there is no reason to imagine that the desire in that case should be accepted as if the thing were done. For instance, if a man give alms according to his ability, and would give more if he were able, in this case the desire is accepted for the deed. And of this case it is and no other that the Apostle speaks, 2 Cor. 8. 12. If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. That is, God interprets and accepts the charity of men according to the largeness of their hearts, and not according to the straitness of their fortunes: But it is a great mistake to draw a general conclusion from this Text, that in all cases God accepts the will for the deed. For tho a man sincerely desire and resolve to reform his life (as I doubt not many men often do) but do it not when there is time and opportunity for it, these desires and resolutions are of no account with God; all this righteousness is but as the morning cloud, and as the early dew which passeth away. Men are not apt to mistake so grossly in other matters. No man believes hunger to be meat, or thirst to be drink; and yet there is no doubt of the truth and sincerity of these natural desires. No man thinks that covetousness or a greedy desire to be rich is an estate, or that ambition or an insatiable desire of honour is really advancement: Just so, and no otherwise, a desire to be good is righteousness. The Apostle's caution a little before the Text may fitly be applied to this purpose, Little children, let no man deceive you: He that doth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. Not but that the best of men do sometimes fall through infirmity, and are betrayed by surprize, and born down by the violence of tempta-temptation ; but if the general course of our actions be a doing of righteousness, the grace of the Gospel, in and through the merits of our blessed Saviour, doth accept of this imperfect but sincere obedience.

II. I shall endeavour to shew, that by this mark every man may with due care and diligence, arrive at the certain knowledge of his spiritual state and condition. By this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the Devil : Whosoever doth not righteousness is not of God. By which the Apostle means that this is a real mark of difference betwixt good and bad men, and that whereby they very often manifest themselves to others ; especially when the course of their lives is eminently pious and virtuous, or notoriously impious and wicked. But because it doth not so much concern us curiously to enquire into, much less severely to censure the state of other men, I shall only consider at present how far by this mark and character every man may make a certain judgment of his own good or bad condition.

1. By this character, as I have explained it, he that is a bad man may certainly know himself to be so, if he will but consider his condition, and do not wilfully deceive and delude himself. As for those who are vicious in the general course of their lives, or have been guilty of the act of some heinous or notorious sin not yet repented of ; their case is so plain for the most part, even to themselves, that they can have no manner of doubt concerning it. Such men stand continually convicted and condemned by the sentence of their own minds : and whenever they reflect upon themselves (which they do as seldom as they can) they are a terror to themselves, and full of amazement and fearful expectation of judgment. Not but that even in so plain a case many men do use great endeavours to cheat themselves, and would be very glad to find out ways to reconcile a wicked life with the hopes of Heaven, and to gain the favour, at least the forgiveness of God, without repentance and amendment of their lives. And to this end they are willing to confess their sins, and to undergo any Penance that should be imposed upon them, that only excepted which only can do them good ; I mean, real reformation. And when the Priest hath absolv'd them, they would fain believe that God hath forgiven them too ; however, they return to their former course, and being strongly addicted to their lusts, between stupidity and foolish hopes they at last come to this desperate resolution, to venture all upon the absolution of the Priest, Et valeat quantum valere potest, let it have what effect it can ; tho I dare say that in their most serious thoughts they are horribly afraid it will do them no good.

And for those who are sinners of a lesser rate, and perhaps allow themselves only in one kind of vice, they likewise have reason to conclude themselves in a bad condition ; especially if they consider that he who lives in the breach of any one Commandment of God is guilty of all, because he contemns that authority which enacted the whole Law. And 'tis easy for any man to discern the habit of any sin in himself ; as when he frequently commits it, when he takes up no firm resolutions against it, when he useth no competent care to avoid the temptations to it, nor puts forth any vigorous endeavours to break off from it ; or however, still continues in the practice of it. For the customary practice of any known sin is utterly inconsistent with sincere resolutions and endeavours against it, there being no greater evidence of the insincerity of resolutions and endeavours in any kind than still to go on to do contrary to them.

2. By this character likewise they that are sincerely good may generally be well assured of their good condition, and that they are the children of God. And there are but two things necessary to evidence this to them. That the general course and tenor of their actions be agreeable to the Laws of God; and, That they be sincere and upright in those actions. And both these every man may sufficiently know concerning himself; for if the Laws of God be plain, and lie open to every man's understanding, then it is as easy for every man to know when he obeys God and keeps his Commandments, as when he obeys the commands of his Father or his Prince, and when he keeps the known Laws of the Land. And no sensible or considerate man ever had any doubt of this kind, for if a man can know any thing he can certainly tell when he keeps or breaks a known Law; so that all doubts of this nature are frivolous and idle pretences to cover mens faults, and such as they would be ashamed to alledge in any other case.

And a good man may likewise know when he obeys God sincerely. Not but that men often deceive themselves with an opinion, or at least a groundless hope of their own sincerity; but if they will deal fairly with themselves, and use due care and diligence, there are very few cases (if any) wherein they may not know their own sincerity in any act of obedience to God: For what can a man know concerning himself, if not the reality of his own intentions? If any man should in earnest tell me, that he doubted very much whether he had that friendship for me which he made profession of, and that he was afraid that his affection to me was not real and sincere, I confess I should doubt of it too; because I should certainly conclude that no man could know that matter so well as he himself.

And there is no doubt but whoever hath a hearty kindness for another, and a sincere desire to serve and please him, knows he has it. And accordingly good and holy men in Scripture do every where with great confidence and assurance appeal to God concerning the integrity and sincerity of their hearts towards him. Job and David, Hezekiah and Nehemiah in the Old Testament; and in the New St. Paul for himself and Timothy, makes this solemn profession of their sincerity, 2 Cor. 1. 12. Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity we have our conversation in the world. And I cannot call to mind so much as any one passage in Scripture, from whence it can be collected that any good man ever doubted of his own sincerity. And to say the truth it would not be modestly but impudence in any man to declare that he suspects himself of hypocrisy; good men have always abhorred the thoughts of it. Te have heard of the patience of Job, and yet he could not bear to have his integrity questioned. It was a brave and generous speech of his, Till I dye, I will not remove my integrity from me.

And yet it hath so happened that this is become a very common doubt among religious people, and they have been so unreasonably cherished in it as to have it made a considerable evidence of a man's sincerity to doubt of it himself. It is indeed said in Scripture, Jer. 17. 9. That the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it? which is true concerning our future intentions and actions: no man knowing how his mind may change hereafter. Little did Hazaël think that ever he should do those things which the Prophet foretold him. But tho this be true in it self, yet 'tis not the meaning of that Text. For the Prophet in that chapter plainly makes use of this consideration of the falshood and deceitfulness of man's heart as an argument to take off the People of Israel from trusting in the arm of flesh, and in those promises which were made to them of foreign assistance from Egypt: Because men may pretend fair, and yet deceive those that rely upon them, for the heart of man is deceitful and desperately wicked, and none but God knows whether mens inward intentions be answerable to their outward professions; for he searcheth the heart and trieth the reins. And this I verily believe is all that the Prophet here intends, That there is a great deal of fraud and deceit in the hearts of bad men, so that no man can rely upon their promises and professions; but God knows the hearts of all men. But now because God alone knows the hearts of all men and the sincerity of their intentions towards one another, doth it from hence follow that it is a thing either impossible or very difficult for any man to know the sincerity of his own present intentions and actions? To make any such conclusion were to condemn the generation of God's childzen, those holy and excellent men in Scripture, Job, and David, and Hezekiah, and St. Paul, who do so frequently appeal to God concerning their own integrity. And surely when the Apostle saith, No man knows the things of a man, but the spirit of a man which is in him, he plainly supposes that every man is conscious to the motions and intentions of his own mind. I have insisted the longer upon this, that I might from the very foundation destroy an imagination, which is not only untrue in it self, but has likewise been a very great hindrance to the peace and comfort of many good men.

III. Let us enquire whence it comes to pass, that notwithstanding this so many persons are at so great uncertainty about their spiritual condition. For the clearing of this matter, we will distinctly consider these three things. First, The grounds of the false hopes and confidence of men really bad concerning their good condition. Secondly, The causeless doubts and jealousies of men really good concerning their bad condition. And Thirdly, The just causes of doubting in others. As for the troubles and fears of men who are notoriously bad and live in the Practice of known vices, these do not fall under our consideration: If they be troubled about their condition, it is no more than what they ought to be; and if they be only doubtful of it, it is less than they ought to be. To persons in this condition there is only counsel to be given to leave their sins and become better, but no comfort to be administered to them till first they have followed that counsel: For till they reform, if they think themselves to be in a bad condition, they think just as they ought, and as there is great reason, and no body should go about to persuade them otherwise.

First then, We will consider the grounds of the false hopes and confidence of men really bad concerning their good condition. I do not now mean the worst of men, but such as make some shew and appearance of goodness. It is very displeasing to men to fall under the hard opinion and censure of others, but the most grievous thing in the world for a man to be condemned by himself; and therefore it is no wonder that men use all manner of shifts to avoid so great an inconvenience as is the ill opinion of a man's self concerning himself and his own condition.

Some therefore rely upon the profession of the Christian Faith, and their being baptized into it. But this is so far from being any exemption from a good life, that it is the greatest and most solemn obligation to it. Dost thou believe the Doctrine of the Gospel? thou of all men art inexcusable if thou allowest thy self in ungodliness and worldly lusts.

Others trust to their external Devotion, they frequent the Church, and serve God constantly, they pray to him, and hear his word, and receive the blessed Sacrament: But let us not deceive our selves, God is not mocked. All this is so far from making amends for the impiety of our lives, that on the contrary, the impiety of our lives spoils all the acceptance of our devotions. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the Law (that is, from obeying it) even his prayer shall be an abomination.

Others who are sensible they are very bad depend very much upon their repentance, especially if they set solemn times apart for it. And there is no doubt but that a sincere repentance will put a man into a good condition: But then it is to be considered, that no repentance is sincere but that which produceth a real change and reformation in our lives. For we have not repented to purpose if we return again to our sins. It is well thou art in some measure sensible of thy miscarriage, but thou art never safe till thou hast forsaken thy sins; thy estate and condition towards God is not changed, till thou hast really alter'd thy self and the course of thy Life.

Others satisfy themselves with the exercise of some particular graces and virtues, Justice, and Liberality, and Charity. And is it not a thousand pities that thy life is not all of a piece, and that all the other parts of it are not answerable to these, that thou should'st lose the reward of so much real goodness out of thy fondness to any one vice or lust, that when thou art not far from the Kingdom of God, for lack of one or two things more thou should'st fall short of it? Hast thou never heard what the Scripture saith, that he who offends in one point is a transgressor of the whole Law? To make a man a good man, all parts of goodness must concur, but any one way of wickedness is sufficient to denominate a man bad.

Lastly, Some who are very careful of their outward carriage and conversation, but yet are conscious to themselves of great secret faults and vices, when they can find no comfort from themselves and the testimony of their own consciences, are apt to comfort themselves in the good opinion which perhaps others have of them. But if we know our selves to be bad, and our own hearts to condemn us, it is not the good opinion of others concerning us which can either alter or better our condition. They may have reason for their charity, and yet thou none for thy confidence. Trust no body concerning thy self rather than thy self, because no body can know thee so well as thou may'st know thy self.

These, and such as these, are the hopes of the Hypocrite, which Job elegantly compares to the Spiders web, finely and artificially wrought, but miserably thin and weak; so that we our selves may see through them, and if we lay the least stress upon them they will break. They are but pleasant dreams and delusions, which, whenever we are awaken'd to a serious consideration of our condition by the apprehensions of approaching death and judgment, will presently vanish and disappear; so the same holy man tells us, Job 27. 8. What is the hope of the Hypocrite, when God taketh away his Soul?

Secondly, We will consider in the next place the causeless doubts and jealousies of men really good, concerning their bad condition. For as some are prone beyond all reason to delude themselves with vain hopes of their good condition, so others are apt as unreasonably to torment themselves with groundless fears and jealousies that their estate is bad. And of these doubts there are several occasions, the chief whereof I shall mention, by which we may judge of the rest that are of the like nature.

1. Some are afraid that they are reprobated from all eternity, and therefore they cannot be the Children of God. This is so unreasonable, that if it were not a real cause of trouble to some persons it did not deserve to be considered. For no man that sincerely endeavours to please God and to keep his Commandments, hath from Scripture the least ground to suspect any latent or secret decree of God against him that shall work his ruin. But whatever the the decrees of God be concerning the eternal state of men, since they are secret to us they can certainly be no rule either of our duty or comfort. And no man hath reason to think himself rejected of God, either from eternity, or in time, that does not find the marks of Reprobation in himself, I mean an evil heart and life. By this indeed a man may know that he is out of God's favour for the present, but he hath no reason at all from hence to conclude that God hath from all eternity and for ever cast him off. That God calls him to repentance, and affords to him the space and means of it, is a much plainer sign that God is willing and ready to have mercy on him than any thing else is, or can be, that God hath utterly cast him off. And therefore for men to judge of their condition by the decrees of God which are hid from us, and not by his word which is near us and in our hearts, is as if a man wandering in the wide Sea, in a dark night when the heaven is all clouded about, should yet resolve to steer his course by the stars which he cannot see, but only gues at, and neglect the Compass, which is at hand and would afford him a much better and more certain direction. This therefore is to be rejected as a fond and groundless imagination, and which ought to trouble no body, because no body doth nor can know any thing concerning it. Moses hath long since very well determined this matter, Deut. 29. 29. Secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed, unto us and our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this Law.

2. Good men are conscious to themselves of many frailties and imperfections, and therefore they are afraid of their condition. But God considers the infirmities of our present state, and expects no other obedience from us in order to our acceptance with him, but what this state of imperfection is capable of: And provided the sincere endeavour and general course of our lives be to please him and keep his Commandments, the terms of the Gospel are so merciful, that our frailties shall not be imputed to us, so as to affect our main state and to make us cease to be the children of God. And tho' we may be guilty of many errors and secret sins which escape our notice and observation, yet it is not impossible for us to exercise such a repentance for these as will be available for their pardon. For we have to deal with a merciful God, who is pleased to accept of such an obedience and of such a repentance as we are capable of performing. Now there is a great difference between those sins which require a particular repentance before we can hope for the pardon of them, (as all great and deliberate and presumptuous sins do, which are never committed without our knowledge, and are so far from slipping out of our memory that they are continually flying in our faces, and we cannot forget them if we would) and sins of infirmity occasion'd by surprize and violence of temptation, through ignorance or inadvertency: For a general repentance, such as we every day exercise in our devotions and prayers to God, may suffice for these. I speak not this to hinder any from a more particular repentance of all their known failings, the more particular the better; but to remove the groundless fears and jealousies of men about their main estate and condition. And if any ask how I know that a general repentance will suffice for these kind of sins? I answer, because more than this in many cases is impossible; so that either we must rest satisfied that God will forgive them upon these terms, or conclude that they shall not be forgiven at all, which is contrary to the whole tenor of the Scriptures: I say, in many cases, more than this is impossible, because sins of Ignorance, and those common errors and frailties of humane life which David calls secret sins, are not particularly known to us when they are committed, and consequently it is impossible that we should particularly cularly repent of them. And therefore in this case there can be no doubt but that God doth accept of a general repentance, as he did from David when he made that humble confession and prayer to him, Psal. 19. 12. Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret sins.

3. They are afraid their obedience is not sincere, because it proceeds many times from fear and not always out of pure love to God. For answer to this: It is plain from Scripture that God propounds to men several motives and arguments to obedience, some proper to work upon their fear, as the threatnings of punishment; some upon their hope, as the promises of blessing and reward; others upon their love, as the mercies and forgiveness of God. From whence it is evident he intended they should all work upon us. And accordingly the Scripture gives us instances in each kind. Noah moved with fear obeyed God in preparing an Ark. Moses had respect unto the recompence of reward. Mary Magdalen loved much. And as it is hard to say, so it is not necessary to determine just how much influence and no more each of these hath upon us: It is very well if men be reclaimed from their sins and made good by the joint force of all the considerations which God offers to us. To be sure love is the noblest and most generous principle of obedience, but fear commonly takes the first and fastest hold of us, and in times of violent temptation is perhaps the best argument to keep, even the best of men, within the bounds of their duty.

4. Another cause of doubting in good men is, from a sense of their imperfect performance of the duties of Religion, and of the abatement of their affections towards God at some times. They have many wandering thoughts in prayer and other exercises of devotion, and they cannot for their life keep their minds continually intent on what they are about. This we should strive against as much as we can, and that is the utmost we can do; but to cure this wholly is impossible, the infirmity of our nature and the frame of our minds will not admit of it: And therefore no man ought to question his sincerity, because he cannot do that which is impossible for men to do.

And then for the abatement of our affections to God and Religion at some times, this naturally proceeds from the inconstancy of mens tempers, by reason of which it is not possible that the best of men should be able always to maintain and keep up the same degree of zeal and fervour towards God. But our comfort is, that God doth not measure mens sincerity by the Tides of their affections, but by the constant bent of their resolutions and the general tenor of their life and actions.

5. Another cause of these doubts is, that men expect more than ordinary and reasonable assurance of their good condition; some particular revelation from God, an extraordinary impression upon their minds to that purpose, which they think the Scripture means by the testimony and seal and earnest of the Spirit. God may give this when and to whom he pleases, but I do not find he hath any where promised it. And all that the Scripture means by those phrases of the testimony and seal and earnest of the Spirit, is to my apprehension no more but this, That the Holy Spirit which God bestowed upon Christians in so powerful and sensible a manner was a seal and earnest of their resurrection to eternal life, according to that plain Text, Rom. 8. 11. If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. But then, who they are that have the Spirit of God, is only to be known by the real fruits and effects of it. If we be led by the Spirit, and walk in the Spirit, and do not fulfil the lusts of the flesh, then the Spirit of God dwelleth in us: But this is very far from an immediate and and extraordinary revelation from the Spirit of God to the minds of good men, telling them in particular that they are the Children of God. I know not what peculiar favour God may shew to some, but I know no such thing, nor ever yet met with any wise and good man that did affirm it of himself: And I fear that in most of those who pretend to it, it is either mere fancy, or gross delusion.

6. As for the case of melancholy, it is not a reasonable case, and therefore doth not fall under any certain rules and directions. They who are under the power of it are seldom fit to take that counsel which alone is fit to be given them, and that is, not to believe themselves concerning themselves, but to trust the judgment of others rather than their own apprehensions. In other cases every man knows himself best, but a melancholy man is most in the dark as to himself. This cause of trouble and doubting is very much to be pitied, but hard to be removed, unless by Physick, or by time, or by chance. One may happen to say something that may hit the humour of a melancholy man, and satisfy him for the present; but Reason must needs signify very little to those persons, the nature of whose dislemper it is to turn every thing that can be said for their comfort into objections against themselves.

Thirdly, But besides those who mistake their condition either by presuming it to be better, or fearing it to be worse than it is, there are likewise others who upon good grounds are doubtful of their condition, and have reason to be afraid of it: Those I mean, who have some beginnings of goodness which yet are very imperfect. They have good resolutions, and do many things well, but they often fall and are frequently pull'd back by those evil inclinations and habits which are yet in a great measure unsubdued in them. These I cannot liken better than to the Borderers between two Countries who live in the marches and confines of two powerful Kingdoms, both which have a great influence upon them, so that it is hard to say whose subjects they are and to which Prince they belong: Thus it is with many in Religion, they have pious inclinations and have made some fair attempts towards goodness, they have begun to refrain from sin and to resist the occasions and temptations to it; but ever and anon they are mastered by their old lusts, and carried off from their best resolutions; and perhaps upon a little consideration they repent and recover themselves again, and after a while are again entangled and overcome.

Now the case of these persons is really doubtful both to themselves and others. And the proper direction to be given them in order to their peace and settlement, is by all means to encourage them to go on and fortify their good resolutions; to be more vigilant and watchful over themselves, to strive against sin and to resist it with all their might. And according to the success of their endeavours in this conflict, the evidence of their good condition will every day clear up and become more manifest; the more we grow in grace, and the seldomer we fall into sin, and the more even and constant our obedience to God is, so much the greater and fuller satisfaction we shall have of our good estate towards God: For the path of the just is as the shining light, which shines more and more unto the perfect day: And the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever.

I shall only make two or three Inferences from what hath been discoursed upon this Argument, and so conclude.

1. From hence we learn the great danger of sins of Omission as well as Commission; Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God. The mere neglect of any of the great duties of Religion, of piety towards God, and of kindness and charity to men, tho we be free from the commission of great sins, is enough to cast us out of the favour of God and to shut us for ever out of his Kingdom, I was hungry, and ye gave me no meat; thirsty, and ye gave me no drink; sick and in prison, and ye visited me not; therefore depart ye cursed.

2. It is evident from what hath been said, That nothing can be vainer than for men to live in any course of sin and impiety, and yet to pretend to be the children of God, and to hope for eternal life. The Children of God will do the works of God, and whoever hopes to enjoy him hereafter, will endeavour to be like him here; Every man that hath this hope in him, purifies himself even as He is pure.

3. You see what is the great mark and character of a man's good or bad condition; whosoever doeth righteousness is of God, and whatsoever doeth not righteousness is not of God. Here is a plain and sensible evidence by which every man that will deal honestly with himself may certainly know his own condition: and then according as he finds it to be, may take comfort in it, or make haste out of it. And we need not ascend into heaven, nor go down into the deep to search out the secret counsels and decrees of God; there needs no anxious enquiry whether we be of the number of God's Elect: If we daily mortify our lusts and grow in goodness, and take care to add to our faith and knowledge, temperance and patience and charity and all other Christian graces and virtues, we certainly take the best course in the world to make our calling and election sure. And without this it is impossible that we should have any comfortable and well-grounded assurance of our good condition. This one mark of doing righteousness is that into which all other signs and characters which are in Scripture given of a good man, are finally resolved; And this answers all those various Phrases which some men would make to be so many several and distinct marks of a Child of God; as, whether we have the true knowledge of God and divine illumination, for hereby we know that we know him, if we keep his Commandments: whether we sincerely love God, for this is the love of God, that we keep his Commandments: and whether God loves us, for the righteous Lord loveth righteousness, and his countenance will behold the upright: whether we be regenerate and born of God, for whosoever is born of God sinneth not: whether we have the Spirit of God witnessing with our spirits that we are the children of God, for as many as have the Spirit of God are led by the Spirit, and by the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the flesh: whether we belong to Christ, and have an interest in him or not, for they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts thereof: In a word, whether the promise of heaven and eternal life belong to us, for without holiness no man shall see the Lord, but if we have our fruits unto holiness, the end will be everlasting life. So that you see at last, the Scripture brings all to this one mark, holiness and obedience to the Laws of God, or a vicious and wicked life; In this the Children of God are manifest, and the Children of the Devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God.

Let us then deal impartially with our selves, and bring our lives and actions to this trial, and never be at rest till the matter be brought to some issue, and we have made a deliberate judgment of our condition, whether we be the Children of God or not: And if upon a full and fair examination our consciences give us this testimony, that by the Grace of God we have denied ungodliness and worldly lusts, and have lived soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world, we may take joy and comfort in it; for if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God: But if upon the search and trial of our ways our case appear clearly to be otherwise, or if we have just cause to doubt of it, let us not venture to continue one moment longer in so uncertain and dangerous a condition. And if we desire to know the way of Peace, the Scripture hath set it plainly before us, Wash ye, make ye clean, put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well: Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord, tho your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow: Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. Tho our case be very bad, yet it is not desperate; This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all men to be embraced, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners: And he is still willing to save us, if we be but willing to leave our sins and to serve him in holiness and righteousness the remaining part of our lives. We may yet be turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God: We who have ventured so long upon the brink of ruin may yet by the infinite mercies of God, and by the power of his Grace, be rescued from the base and miserable slavery of the Devil and our lusts into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

And thus I have endeavoured, with all the plainness I could, to represent every man to himself, and to let him clearly see what his condition is towards God, and how the case of his soul and of his eternal happiness stands. And I do verily believe that what I have said in this matter is the truth of God, to which we ought all gladly to yield and render up our selves. For great is Truth, and mighty above all things: She is faithful and impartial in her counsels, and tho' she be not always welcome yet 'tis always wise to hearken to her, for in great kindness and charity she lets men know their condition and the danger of it that they may take care to prevent it: With her is no accepting of persons, and in her judgment there is no unrighteousness. I will conclude all with that excellent advice of a Heathen Philosopher, Make it no longer a matter of dispute what are the marks and signs of a good man, but immediately set about it, and endeavour to become such a one.

Of the Joy which is in Heaven at the Repentance of a Sinner.

LUKE XV. 7.

I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance.

AFTER many attempts made in vain to reclaim Sinners from their evil ways and to bring them to the wisdom of the just, it is hard for us who are the Messengers of God to men, not to sit down in despondence, and at last quite to despair of doing good upon them. But when I consider the infinite patience of God with Sinners, and how long his Spirit strives with them, why should we, we who are Sinners our selves, think much to bear with Sinners and patiently to contend with their obstinacy and perverseness? When I consider that our blessed Saviour, the great Preacher and Pattern of Righteousness, did not give over the worst of men nor despair of their recovery: this methinks should make us who are Ambassadors for Christ, unwearied in beseeking men in his stead to be reconciled to God.

And of this we have a famous instance in this Chapter: The Publicans and Sinners, as they had done several times before, came to hear our Saviour: He treated them very kindly, and conversed familiarly with them; at this the Pharisees were displeased and murmured, and this unreasonable murmuring of theirs gave Occasion to the three Parables in this Chapter.

In which our Saviour does at once answer the Objection of the Pharisees, and give all possible encouragement to the repentance of these great Sinners. He answers the Pharisees by letting them plainly see that he was about the best work in the world, the most acceptable to God, and matter of greatest joy to all the heavenly Inhabitants. Instead of a severe Reproof of their uncharitableness, he offers that calmly to their consideration, which ought in all reason to convince them that he was no ways to blame for this familiar conversation of his with Sinners, having no other design upon them but to reclaim them from their Vices, and to make them fit company for the best of Men; that he was a Spiritual Physician, and therefore his proper work and employment lay among his Patients. And then instead of terrifying these Sinners, who seemed to come with a good mind to be instructed by him, he gently insinuates the most winning arguments and the greatest encouragement to Repentance; by shewing how ready God was, after all their sins and provocations, to receive them to his grace and favour, provided they did sincerely repent and betake themselves to a better course: And not only so, but that the repentance of a sinner is a great joy to the great King of the World, and to all that holy and heavenly Host that attend upon Him.

From which method of our Saviour in treating so great Sinners so gently, I cannot but make this observation, for my own use as well as for others; That it is good to give, even the greatest of Sinners, all the encouragement we can to repentance; and tho men have been never so bad, yet if they have but this one good quality left in them, that they are patient to be instructed, and content to hear good counsel, we should use them kindly and endeavour to recover them by the fairest means; not so much upbraiding them for their having been bad, as encouraging them to become better.

To this purpose our Saviour uttered three Parables; of the recovery of a lost sheep; of finding a lost piece of money; of the return of a prodigal son to his father; and tho they all aim at the same scope and design, yet our Saviour useth this variety, not only to convey the same thing to several capacities in a more acceptable manner, one similitude happening to hit one person, and another another, but likewise to inculcate so weighty a matter the more upon his hearers and to fix it more deeply in their minds.

The words which I have read are the Moral or application of the first Parable, concerning a man who had an hundred sheep, and having lost one leaves the ninety and nine to go to seek that which was lost; and having found it, with great joy brings it home. By which our Saviour gives us to understand, what joy God and the blessed Spirits above take in the conversion of a sinner. I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance. Than which nothing cou'd have been more proper, both to silence the uncharitable murmuring of the Pharisees against our Saviour for conversing with Publicans and Sinners to so good an end, and likewise to encourage sinners to repent: For why should the Pharisees be displeased at that which was so great a pleasure to God and the holy Angels? and what greater encouragement to repentance than this; that God is not only willing to receive the returning sinner, but that the news of his repentance is entertain'd in Heaven with so much joy, that if it be possible for the blessed Inhabitants of that place to have any thing added to their happiness, this will be a new accession to it?

There are three things in the words which require a very careful explication.

1. How we are to understand the joy that is in Heaven at the conversion of a sinner.
2. Who are here meant by the just persons that need no repentance?
3. With what reason is it here said, that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentance?

There is something of difficulty in each of these, which deserves our heedful and attentive consideration.

I. How we are to understand the joy that is in Heaven at the repentance of a sinner? And this (as indeed this whole passage of our Saviour's) we are not to understand too strictly and rigorously, but as spoken in a great measure after the manner of men and by way of accommodation to our capacity, so far as the persons here spoken of are capable of any addition to their joy and happiness.

As it refers to God, it seems very inconsistent with the happiness and perfection of the Divine Nature to suppose Him really capable of joy, any more than of grief or any other passion. Because this would be to imagine some new accession to his pleasure and happiness, which being always infinite nite can never have any thing added to it. And therefore we are to understand this, as it relates to God, in the same manner as we do infinite other passages of Scripture where humane passions are ascribed to him, to be spoken by way of condescension and after the language and manner of the sons of men; and to signify only thus much to us, that the conversion of a sinner is a thing highly pleasing and acceptable to God.

As it refers to Angels and other Blessed Spirits, I see no inconvenience why it may not be understood more strictly and literally; that they conceive a new joy at the news of a sinner's repentance, and find a fresh pleasure and delight springing up in their minds, when ever they hear the joyful tidings of a sinner rescued from the slavery of the Devil and the danger of eternal damnation; of a new member added to the Kingdom of God, that shall be a companion and sharer with them in that blessedness which they enjoy. There seems to me to be nothing in this repugnant to the nature and happiness of blessed Spirits in another world. For it is certain, that there are degrees of happiness among the blessed: From whence it necessarily follows that some of them may be happier than they are. And it is very probable, since the happiness of Angels and good men is but finite, that those who are most happy do continually receive new additions to their blessedness; and that their felicity is never at a stand but perpetually growing and improving to all eternity; and that as their knowledge and love do increase, so likewise the capacity and causes of their happiness are still more and more enlarged and augmented: So that it is reasonable enough to suppose that there is really joy, among the Angels and Spirits of just men made perfect, over every sinner that repenteth.

II. Who are here meant by the just persons who need no repentance? That our Saviour in this expression gives some glance and reflection upon the Pharisees (who prided themselves in their own righteousness, and instead of confessing their sins to God stood upon their own justification, as if they needed no repentance) is very probable; because this parable was designed to answer their murmurings against him, for conversing with Publicans and Sinners, and by the bye to give a check to those who were so conceited of their own righteousness as if they had no need of repentance. And this is very suitable to what our Saviour elsewhere says to them upon the like occasion, that the whole have no need of the Physician, but the sick; that he came not to call the righteous, but the sinners to repentance. But yet tho' our Saviour expresseth himself so as that the Pharisees might with reason enough apply it to themselves, that there was more joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine of them, who were so conceited of their own righteousness that they thought they had no need of repentance (for indeed our Saviour delivers himself so, as to leave room for such a severe application) yet I think there is little doubt to be made but that he intended something further; and that supposing the Pharisees were as just as they pretended, and were really righteous men so as to stand in no need of such a repentance as great sinners do, yet our Saviour affirms, there was more joy in Heaven over one penitent sinner, than over ninety and nine such just persons.

But are there any persons in the world so just, as absolutely to stand in need of no repentance? No, there was never any such person in the world him only excepted who said this, our blessed Saviour, who had no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. And therefore this Phrase of needing no repentance is to be understood in a qualified sense, and with some allowance; otherwise our blessed Saviour had supposed a case which never was, of a great number of perfectly righteous men. And our Saviour's meaning in this is sufficiently explained in the last Parable of this Chapter, concerning the Prodigal Son; where the prodigal son is the sinner that repented; and his elder Brother, who had always observed and obeyed his father, he is the just person who needed no repentance. So that by him our Saviour plainly designs those who being religiously educated and brought up in the fear of God had never broke out into any extravagant and vicious course of life, and so in some sense had no need of repentance, that is, of changing the whole course of their lives, as the prodigal son had. Not but that the best of men are guilty of many faults and infirmities which they have too much cause to repent of, as our Saviour sufficiently intimates in that Parable: For certainly it was no small infirmity in the elder brother to be so envious, and to take so heinously the joyful welcome and entertainment which his prodigal brother at his return found from his father: But yet this single fault and sudden surprize of passion, considering the constant duty which he had paid to his father throughout the course of his life, did not make him such a sinner as to need such a repentance as his brother did, which consisted in a perfect change of the whole course of his life. And of such just persons as these, and of such a repentance as this, it seems very plain that our Saviour intended this discourse.

III. But the main difficulty of all is, with what reason it is here said that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance? Is it not better not to offend, than to sin and repent? Is not innocence better than amendment, and the wisdom of prevention to be preferred before that of remedy? Is it worth the while to do amiss to make way for repentance? and is not this almost like sinning that grace may abound? And if repentance be not better than righteousness, why is there more joy in Heaven over the penitent than over the righteous; nay over one penitent sinner, than over ninety and nine just persons? Do not the blessed always rejoice most in that which is really best? Here is the difficulty, and it requires some care and consideration clearly to remove it. In order to which be pleased to consider these three things, which I think to be very material to the clearing of it.

I. That the same thing considered in several respects, may in some respects have the advantage of another thing and for those reasons be preferred before it, and yet not have the advantage of it absolutely and in all respects. Moral comparisons are not to be exacted to a Mathematical strictness and rigor. To this purpose I have observed in a former discourse, that it was long since judiciously noted by Aristotle, "That moral and proverbial speeches are not to be taken too strictly, as if they were universally true" and in all cases: It is sufficient if they be true for the most part, and in several respects which are very considerable. And of this nature are most of the Proverbs of Solomon, and whosoever shall go about to make out the truth of them in all cases, does in my opinion take a very hard task upon himself. But which is nearer to my purpose, our Saviour himself in the Chapter before my Text, and in the moral application of a Parable too, (namely that of the unjust steward) useth a proverbial speech just in the same manner; The Children of this world are in their generation wiser than the Children of light: Which is only a wise observation that is generally true and in many respects, but not absolutely and universally. For some men have been as wise and diligent for the glory of God and interest of their souls, as ever any man was for this world, and for the advancement of his temporal interest. Of the like nature is this saying used by our Saviour, probably taken (as our Saviour did many other proverbial Speeches) from the Jews, and applied to his own purpose. For there are several sayings of the Jewish Masters much to this purpose : As, Great is the dignity of penitents : Great is the virtue of them that repent, so that no creature may stand in their rank and order. And again, The righteous may not stand in the same place with those that have repented. These I confels were very high sayings, but yet very well designed for the encouragement of repentance. And they are not without good reason, as will appear if we consider these two things.

First, That the greater the difficulty of virtue is, so much the greater is the praise and commendation of it : And not only we our selves take the more joy and comfort in it, but it is more admirable and delightful to others. Now it cannot be denied to be much more difficult to break off a vicious habit, than to go on in a good way which we have been trained up in, and always accusomed to. Those that have been well educated have great cause to thank God, and to acknowledge the care of their Parents and Teachers : For piety and goodness are almost infinitely easier to such persons, than to those who have wanted this advantage. It is happy for them they never tasted of unlawful pleasures ; if they had, they would possibly have drank as deep as others : It is well they were never entangled in a sinful course, nor enslaved to vicious habits, nor hardened through the deceitfulness of sin ; if they had, they might possibly never have been recovered out of the snare of the Devil. By the happiness of a good education, and the merciful providence of God, a great part of many mens virtue consists in their ignorance of vice, and their being kept out of the way of great and dangerous temptations ; rather in the good customs they have been bred up to, than in the deliberate choice of their wills ; and rather in the happy preventions of evil, than in their resolute constancy in that which is good. And God who knows what is in man, and sees to the bottom of every man's temper and inclination, knows how far this man would have fallen had he had the temptations of other men ; and how irrecoverably perhaps he would have been plunged in an evil course, had he once entred upon it. So that repentance is a very great thing ; and tho it be the most just, and fit, and reasonable thing in the world, yet for all that it deserves great commendation, because it is for the most part so very hard and difficult. And therefore tho absolutely speaking, innocence is better than repentance, yet, as the circumstances may be, the virtue of some penitents may be greater than of many just and righteous persons.

Secondly, There is this consideration further to recommend repentance, that they who are reclaim'd from a wicked course are many times more thoroughly and zealously good afterwards : Their trouble and remorse for their sins does quicken and spur them on in the ways of virtue and goodness, and a lively sense of their past errors is apt to make them more careful and conscientious of their duty, more tender and fearful of offending God, and desirous if it were possible to redeem their former miscarriages by their good behaviour for the future. Their love to God is usually more vehement and burns with a brighter flame, for to whomsoever much is forgiven they will love much. And they are commonly more zealous for the conversion of others, as being more sensible of the danger sinners are in and more apt to commiserate their case, remembring that it was once their own condition and with what difficulty they were rescued from so great a danger. And for the most part great penitents are more free from pride and contempt of others, the consideration of what themselves once were being enough to keep them humble all their days. So that penitents are many times more thoroughly and perfectly good, and after their recovery do in several respects outstrip and excel those who were never engaged in a vicious course of life : As a broken bone that is well set is sometimes stronger than it was before.

2. It will conduce also very much to the extenuating of this difficulty, to consider that our Saviour does not here compare repentance with absolute innocence and perfect righteousness, but with the imperfect obedience of good men who are guilty of many sins and infirmities; but yet upon account of the general course and tenor of their lives are by the mercy and favour of the Gospel esteemed just and righteous persons, and for the merits and perfect obedience of our blessed Saviour so accepted by God. Now this alters the case very much, and brings the penitent and this sort of righteous persons much nearer to one another: so that in comparing them together, the true penitent may in some cases, and in some respects, have the advantage of the righteous, and deserve upon some accounts to be preferr'd before him.

3. Which is principally to be considered for the full clearing of this difficulty; this passage of our Saviour is to be understood as spoken very much after the manner of men, and suitably to the nature of human passions, and the usual occasions of moving them. We are apt to be exceedingly affected with the obtaining of what we did not hope for, and much more with regaining of what we look'd upon as lost and desperate. Whatever be the reason of it, such is the nature of man, that we are not so sensibly moved at the continuance of a good which we have long possess'd, as at the recovery of it after it was lost and gone from us. And the reasons of a judicious value and esteem of a settled pleasure and contentment are one thing, and the causes of sudden joy and transport another. A continued course of goodness may in it self be more valuable, and yet repentance after a great fall and long wandrings may be much more moving and surprizing. For where things are constant and keep in the same tenor, they are not apt in their nature to give any new and sudden occasion of joy. And this is the reason given in the Parable of the Prodigal Son; where the Father tells his eldest Son, who was so offended at the joyful reception and welcome of his prodigal Brother, That He had been always with him, and all that he had was his; That is, he was sensible of his constant duty and obedience, than which nothing could have been more acceptable; and that it had not, nor should not lose its reward: But the return of his other Son, after he had given over all hopes of him, and looked upon his case as desperate, this was a marvellous surprize and a happiness beyond expectation, which is the proper and natural cause of joy and gladness: And therefore he tells him that upon such an occasion it was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; was lost, and is found. His elder Son's continuance in his duty was the enjoyment of what he had alway had, but the return of his prodigal Son was the retrieving of what he had given up for lost, and a kind of resurrection from the dead. And thus our blessed Saviour to encourage the repentance of sinners represents God after the manner of men, as if our heavenly Father did conceive such a joy upon the repentance of a sinner as earthly parents are wont to do upon the return of a wild and extravagant Son to himself and his duty.

Having thus, as briefly and clearly as I could, explained the several difficulties in the Text, I shall now deduce some Inferences from it, and so conclude.

I. First, That the blessed Spirits above have some knowledge of the affairs of men here below, because they are said to rejoice at the conversion of a sinner. This is spoken more particularly of the Angels, as appears by comparing what is more generally said in the Text, that there is joy in heaven, with what is more particularly express'd in the 10th verse, that there is joy in the presence of the Angels over one sinner that repenteth. Now whether the Angels come to this knowledge by virtue of their ministry here below for the good of the Elect, and so in their continual intercourse between heaven and earth bring to their fellow servants in heaven the joyful news of the repentance of sinners upon earth; or whether God be pleased from time to time to reveal it to them, as a thing extremely welcome and delightful to good Spirits, -and tending to the increase of their happiness, as it is not very material to enquire, so perhaps impossible for us to determine.

However, it cannot from hence be concluded that the Angels or Saints in Heaven have such an universal knowledge of our condition and affairs, as to be a reasonable ground and warrant to us to pray to them, yea, or to desire them to pray for us; no tho this were done without any solemn circumstances of Invocation. For they may very well know some things concerning us wherein their own comfort and happiness is likewise concerned, and yet be ignorant of all the rest of our affairs. This one thing we are sure they know, because our Saviour hath told us so; but we are sure of no more. And there is neither equal reason for their knowledge of our other concerns, nor is there any revelation in Scripture to that purpose

2. Secondly, If God and the blessed Spirits above rejoice at the conversion of a sinner, so should we too: and not fret and murmur as the Pharisees here did. This is the temper of the Devil, and of very bad men, to regret and envy the good and happiness of others. For it is reasonable to believe, that proportionable to the joy that is in heaven at the repentance of a sinner, is the grief and vexation of the Devil and his instruments, of evil spirits and wicked men. And as the Devil delights in destroying souls, and goes about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour; so no doubt he is in great rage and gnasheth out of very discontent, when at any time he is frustrated of his hopes, and the prey which he thought himself sure of is snatched out of his jaws. And thus we see it is with bad men, they do persecute those that forsake them and their wicked ways, and refuse to go along with them to the same excess of Riot.

- And this is no-where more visible than among those of the Church of Rome. How full of wrath and indignation are they against those who out of pure conviction of the errors and corruptions of their Church come over to Ours? How do they persecute them with slanders and reproaches and with all the effects of hatred and malice? So that many times they can scarce refrain from doing them a real mischief, even where it is dangerous to themselves to attempt it: As if they envied them the grace of God and the opportunity of being saved.

I know it is too natural to those of all Communions, to be eager and fierce against those that desert them: And yet supposing they had the truth certainly on their side (which they cannot all have) I see no great reason for this temper and carriage: For why should I cast away my patience and my charity, because another man hath made shipwreck of his faith? But I do not remember any where among mankind to have observed a more implacable malice, a more sincere and hearty ill-will, than they of the Church of Rome do constantly express towards those that forsake them; nay tho they give never so modest and reasonable an account of their change, and behave themselves towards their old friends with all the kindness and compassion in the world; yet their hatred and indignation against them runs so high, that one may plainly see they would sooner forgive a man the greatest sins that human nature can be guilty of, and the breach of all the ten Commandments, than this one Crime of leaving their Church, that is in truth of growing wiser and better.

3. Thirdly,

3. Thirdly, The consideration of what hath been said should mightily inflame our zeal and quicken our industry and diligence for the conversion of sinners. For if the conversion of one soul be worth so much Labour and pains, and matter of such joy to the blessed God and good Spirits, what pains should not we take in so corrupt and degenerate an Age as this of ours ; where impenitent sinners do so much abound, and the just are almost failed from among the children of men ?

Our blessed Saviour indeed (according to the extraordinary decency of all his Parables) puts the case very charitably, and lays the supposition quite on the other side : if there were but one sinner in the world, or but one of a hundred, yet we should very zealously intend, and with all our might, the reduction of this one lost sheep ; and should never be at rest till this single wandering soul were found and saved. But God knows this is not our case, but quite otherwise ; which should quicken our endeavours so much the more, and make us bestir our selves to the utmost, having always in our minds that admirable saying of St. James, He that converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death. He that knows the value of an immortal soul, and how fearful a thing it is to perish everlastingly, can think no pains too much to take to save a soul from death.

4. Lastly, What an argument and encouragement is here to repentance, even to the greatest of sinners ? They, I am sure, stand most in need of it : And tho they of all others have the least reason to look for mercy ; yet they shall not be refused ; tho they be like the Publicans and Heathens among the Jews, who were not only reputed but many times really were the worst of men ; tho like the prodigal Son, here in the Parable, they have run away from their Father, and wasted their estate in leud and riotous courses ; yet whenever they come to themselves and are willing to return to their Father, to acknowledge their folly and repent of it, he is ready to receive them ; nay much more ready to receive them than they can be to come to him : For when the Prodigal was but coming towards his Father, and was yet afar off, the Father runs to meet him, and embraceth him with as much kindness as if he had never offended him, and entertains him with more joy than if he had always continued with him.

How does the great God condescend to encourage our repentance, representing himself and all the blessed company of heaven as transported with joy at the conversion of a sinner, and almost setting a greater value upon repentance than even upon innocence it self ? And if our heavenly Father, who hath been so infinitely offended and so highly provok'd by us beyond all patience, be so ready, so forward, so glad to receive us, and there be no hindrance, no difficulty, no discouragement on his part ; is it possible after all this that we can be such fools and such enemies to our selves, as to be backward to our own happiness ! All of us, the best of us, have too much cause for repentance ; and I fear too many of us stand in need of that repentance intended by our Saviour in the Text, which consists in the change of our whole lives.

But I will not upbraid you with your faults ; having no design to provoke, but only to persuade men. I leave it to every one's conscience to tell him how great a sinner, how grievous an offender he hath been. God knows we take no pleasure in mentioning the sins of men, but only in their amendment ; and we would, if it were possible, even without minding them how bad they have been, persuade and encourage them to be better.

It is but a small consideration to tell you how much it would cheer and comfort our hearts, and quicken our zeal and industry for the salvation of souls, to see some fruit of our labours; that all our pains are not lost, and that all the good counsel that is from hence tendred to you is not like rain falling upon the rocks, and showers upon the sands.

But I have much greater considerations to offer to you; That your Repentance will at once rejoice the heart of God, and Angels, and Men: that it is a returning to a right mind, and the restoring of you to your selves, to the ease and peace of your own consciences, and to a capacity of being everlastingly happy: that it is to take pity upon your selves and your poor immortal souls; and to take due care to prevent that which is to be dreaded above all things, the being miserable for ever: and last of all, That if thou wilt not repent now, the time will certainly come, and that perhaps in this life, when you shall see the greatest need of repentance, and yet perhaps with miserable Esau find no place for it, tho' you seek it carefully with tears; when you shall cry Lord, Lord, and the door shall be shut against you; and shall seek to enter, but shall not be able. To be sure in the other World you shall eternally repent to no purpose, and be continually lamenting your wretched condition without hopes of remedy; For there shall be weeping and wailing without effect, without intermission, and without end.

And what cause have we to thank God that this is not yet our case, that we are yet on this side the pit of destruction, and the gulf of despair? O the infinite patience and boundless goodness of God to sinners! With what clemency hath he spared us, and suffered our manners thus long? And with what kindness and concernment does he still call upon us to leave our sins and to return to him, as if in so doing we should make him happy and not our selves? With what earnest longings and desires doth he wait and wish for our repentance, saying, O that there were such a heart in them! O that they would hearken unto my voice! When shall it once be? Thus God is represented in Scripture as patiently attending and listning what effect his admonitions and counsels, his reproofs and threatnings will have upon sinners, Jer. 8. 6. I hearkened and I heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? Every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battel.

And is not this our case? God hath long waited for our repentance; and once a Year we solemnly pretend to set about it: But many of us hitherto, I fear, instead of returning to God have but more blindly and furiously run on in our course, like the horse that hath no understanding; yea, sin this more brutish than the Beast, that he rusheth into the Battel without any consideration of death or danger, and destroys himself without a syllogism: But we sinners have Reason, and yet are mad; the greatest part of evil-doers are sufficiently sensible of the danger of their course, and convinced that eternal misery and ruin will be the end of it; and yet, I know not how, they make a shift upon one pretence or other to discourse and reason themselves into it.

But because the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword, and comes with a greater weight and force upon the minds of men than any human persuasion whatsoever, I will conclude all with those short and serious counsels and exhortations of God to sinners by his holy Prophets.

Consider and shew your selves men, O ye transgressors: Be instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee: seek the Lord while he may be found; call upon him while he is near: Repent and turn yourselves from all your transgressions, so iniquity shall not be your ruin.

Of the Sin against the Holy Ghost.

MATTH. XII. 31, 32.

Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men: And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; But whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

THE occasion of these words of our blessed Saviour was the blasphemy of the Pharisees against that Divine Power by which he wrought his miracles, and particularly did cast out Devils. Which works of his, tho' they were wrought by the Spirit of God, yet they obstinately and maliciously imputed them to the power of the Devil. upon which our Saviour takes occasion to declare the danger of the sin, which he calls blaspheming of the Holy Ghost: and tells them that this was so great a sin above all other, that it is in a peculiar manner unpardonable. Wherefore, I say unto you, &c.

For the explaining of these words, and the nature and unpardonableness of this sin, we will enquire into these four things:

First, What is the difference between speaking against the Son of man, and speaking against the Holy Ghost.

Secondly, Wherein the Nature of this sin or blasphemy against the Holy Ghost doth consist.

Thirdly, In what sense this sin is here said to be peculiarly unpardonable. And, Fourthly, Upon what account it is so.

1. What is the difference between speaking against the Son of man and speaking against the Holy Ghost. The reason of this enquiry is, because the Text plainly puts a great difference between them, tho' it be not obvious to discern where it lies. For our Saviour tells us, that whosoever speaks a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him, but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall never be forgiven him: And yet this blasphemy of the Pharisees against the Holy Ghost was speaking against the Son of man. For to say he cast out Devils by the power of the Devil, tho' it was a blaspheming of the Holy Ghost by whose power he wrought these miracles, yet it was likewise a blaspheming of Christ himself, and was in effect to say, that he was no true Prophet nor did come from God, but was a Magician and Impostor.

For

For the removing of this difficulty I shall not need to say as some learned men have done, That by the Son of Man is here to be understood any man, and that our Saviour is not particularly designed by it. That seems very hard, when our Saviour is so frequently in the Gospel called the Son of Man. And especially when St. Luke reciting these words, does immediately before give him this very title to put the matter out of all doubt, Luke 12. 8, 9, 10. Also I say unto you, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the son of man also confess before the Angels of God: But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the Angels of God. Upon which it follows, And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him. So that in all reason the Son of man is the very same person that had this Title given him in the foregoing words, viz. our blessed Saviour. So that I take it for granted, that by speaking against the Son of man is here meant speaking against Christ: And by speaking against him, as it is opposed to speaking against the Holy Ghost, is meant all those reproaches and contumelies which they cast upon our Saviour's person, without reflecting upon that divine power which he testified by his miracles. As their reproaching him with the meanness of his birth, Is not this the Carpenter's son? with the place of it (as they supposed) out of Galilee ariseth no Prophet: Their reflecting upon his life, saying that he was a wine-bibber and a glutton, a friend of Publicans and sinners; with many other calumnies which they maliciously cast upon him.

But by speaking against the Holy Ghost is meant their blaspheming and reproaching that divine power whereby he wrought his Miracles; which though it did at last likewise reflect upon our Saviour's person, yet it was an immediate reflection upon the Holy Ghost, and a blaspheming of him; and therefore it is called speaking against the Holy Ghost, by way of distinction or opposition to the other calumnies which they used against our Saviour; which were proper blasphemies and reproaches of his person, but not of the Holy Ghost also, as this was. This seems to me to be the true difference here intended by our Saviour between speaking against the Son of man, and speaking against the Holy Ghost. Let us in the

II. Second place, enquire wherein the Nature of this sin or blasphemy against the Holy Ghost doth consist. And the true Nature of this sin, tho' it be so plainly to be gathered from our Saviour's description of it, yet I know not how, a great many learned men have made a hard shift to mistake it. Some have made it to be final Impenitency, because that is unpardonable. But why that rather than any thing else that is bad should be called a blaspheming of the Holy Ghost, it is hard to give a reason. Others have placed the nature of it in a wilful and obstinate opposition of the truth; which though it be a great sin, and included in the sin here spoken of, or a concomitant of it; yet is there great reason to believe that this is not all that is here meant by it. Others would have it to consist in a malicious opposition of the Truth, when men know and are convinced that it is the Truth; which is a great sin indeed, if ever any man were guilty of it; but it is a great Question whether human nature be capable of it. A man may indeed have sufficient means of conviction, and yet not be convinc'd; but it is hardly imaginable that a man should oppose the truth when he is actually convinc'd that it is the truth. And to mention no more, others think it to consist in a renouncing of the truth for fear of suffering; which made Francis Spira to think that he had committed this sin.

But with all due respect to the judgment of others, I cannot think that any of these is the sin our Saviour here describes. As I shall endeavour plainly plainly to shew, by considering the occasion of our Saviour's mentioning of it, the persons upon whom our Saviour chargeth this sin, and upon what account he chargeth them with it.

At the 22d Verse of this Chapter there was brought to our Saviour one possessed with a Devil, blind and dumb, and he healed him. Upon this the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David? that is, the Messias. The Pharisees hearing this, with great bitterness and contempt said, This fellow doth not cast out Devils but by Beelzebub the Prince of Devils. Upon this our Saviour represents to them the unreasonableness of this calumny; and that upon these two considerations: 1. That it was very unlikely that the Devil should lend him this power to use it against himself. Every Kingdom divided against it self is brought to desolation: and every City or House divided against it self shall not stand. And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself, how shall then his Kingdom stand? 2. Our Saviour tells them, they might with as much reason attribute all Miracles to the Devil. There were those among themselves who cast out Devils in the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, (as Origen, and Tertullian, and Justin Martyr tell us.) Of these our Saviour speaks, and asks the Pharisees by what power they cast them out? But they acknowledged that these did it by the power of God, and there was no cause but their malice, why they should not have acknowledged that he did it likewise by the same power, Ver. 27. If I by Beelzebub cast out Devils, by whom do your Children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges; that is, This may be sufficient to convince you of malice to me: But if I cast out Devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you, that is, the Messias is come; because he wrought these and other miracles to prove that he was the Messias. And then it follows, Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

So that the Pharisees are the persons charged with this sin or blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. And their blasphemy was plainly this, that when he cast out Devils by the Spirit of God, they said he did it by the power of the Devil; they maliciously ascribed these works of the Holy Ghost to the Devil.

And that this is the ground why our Saviour chargeth them with this sin against the Holy Ghost, is yet more plain from St. Mark, Mark 3. 28, 29, 30. Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the Sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme: but he that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation; because they said he hath an unclean Spirit: That is, because the Pharisees charged him to be a Magician and to have a familiar Spirit, by whose assistance he did those works, when in truth he did them by the Spirit of God, therefore our Saviour declares them guilty of this sin of blaspheming the Holy Ghost, which should never be forgiven.

So that the nature of this sin did consist in a most malicious opposition to the utmost evidence that could be given to the truth of any Religion. Our blessed Saviour to shew that he was sent by God, and came from him, wrought miracles, such as did plainly evidence a Divine power and presence accompanying him. For in St. Luke he is said to do them by the finger of God, Luke 11. 20. By the finger of God, that is, to do such things as were undeniable evidences of the Divine power and presence. And this is the utmost testimony that God ever gave to any person that was sent by him. And the Pharisees were eye-witnesses of those miracles which our Saviour wrought, so that they could not deny them: Yet such was their opposition to him and his his Doctrine, that tho' they saw these things done by him, and could not deny the reality of them, yet rather than they would own him to be the Messias and his Doctrine to come from God, they most maliciously and unreasonably ascribed them to the power of the Devil. And this was the blasphemy which they were guilty of against the Holy Ghost. And herein lay the greatness of their sin, in resisting the evidence of those miracles which were so plainly wrought by the Holy Ghost; and which though themselves saw, yet they maliciously imputed them to the Devil, rather than they would be convinced by them. And this is so very plain, that hardly any man that considers our Saviour's discourse upon this occasion can otherwise determine the nature of this sin, especially if he do but attend to those remarkable words which I cited before, Mark 3. 29. But he that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation; because they said he hath an unclean spirit. I come now to the

III. Third thing I propounded, namely, in what sense this sin is here said to be peculiarly unpardonable? For this sin our Saviour positively affirms to be in this different from all other sins, that it is capable of no pardon: I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men: And to shew what he means by the not forgiving of it, he tells us, that eternal punishment shall follow it in the other world. Whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall never be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Which S. Mark expresseth more plainly, that it shall bring those who are guilty of it to eternal damnation, Mark 3. 29. He that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is liable to eternal damnation. So that when our Saviour says, it shall never be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come, he does not intend to insinuate that some sins which are not forgiven in this world may be forgiven in the other; but in these words he either alludes to the opinion of the Jews concerning the effect of the highest excommunication, the sentence whereof they held not to be reversible, neither in this world nor the other; or else the reason of this expression may probably be to meet with a common and false opinion amongst the Jews, which was, That some sins which are not pardoned to men in this life, may by sacrifices be expiated in the other; and therefore he says it shall never be forgiven, neither in this world nor the other. And S. Mark more plainly, that those who are guilty of it shall never have forgiveness, but be liable to eternal damnation. So that our Saviour's meaning seems plainly to be this, that this sin is altogether incapable of forgiveness. I know some have endeavoured to mollify this matter, but (I think) without sufficient reason. Grotius understands the words comparatively, that any sort of sin shall sooner be forgiven than this against the Holy Ghost; and that our Saviour only intended to express the greatness and heinousness of this sin above others, in which respect the pardon of it would be more difficult than of any other sin; but yet that the case of such a person is not absolutely desperate: But if our Saviour had intended to say that this sin was absolutely unpardonable, I would fain know how could he have expressed the matter in higher and fuller words? Dr. Hammond mollifies the words another way, that this sin shall never be pardoned but upon a particular repentance for it: As if our Saviour's meaning was, that a general repentance, which was sufficient for sins of ignorance, would not be sufficient in this case, but there must be a particular repentance for it, without which it would never be pardoned. But this is by no means agreeable to the scope of our

our Saviour's discourse : Because he plainly intends to difference this from all other sorts of sins, I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men. But according to this interpretation our Saviour must mean that all other sins would be forgiven upon a general repentance ; which is not true, for there are many other sins besides sins of Ignorance, there are wilful and heinous sins, such as wilful murder and adultery and blasphemy, (that only excepted which is against the Holy Ghost) and the like gross sins, which all Divines hold shall not be forgiven but upon a particular repentance. So that this interpretation does not sufficiently difference this sin from all other sorts of sins, which is yet very plain our Saviour intended to do. It remains then that these words must in all reason be understood absolutely, that the persons that are guilty of this great sin shall never have it forgiven unto them. And it may be this will not seem so harsh when we have considered in the

IV. Fourth place, how it comes to pass that this sin is above all others incapable of pardon : and that, upon these two accounts.

First, Because by this sin men resist their last remedy, and oppose the best and utmost means of their conviction. What can God be imagined to do more to convince a man of a Divine Revelation, or of the truth of any Doctrine or message that comes from him than to work miracles to this purpose ? And what greater assurance can men have that miracles are wrought, than to be eye-witnesses of them themselves ? And if men will resist such evidence, what can God do more for their satisfaction ? If when men see plain miracles wrought they will say that it is not the power of God that does them, but the power of the Devil : And if when men see the Devils cast out, they will say that the Devil conspires against himself, this is to outface the Sun at Noon-day, and there is no way left to convince such perverse persons of the truth of any Divine Revelation. So that there is no remedy but such persons must continue in their opposition to the truth. For this is such a sin as does in its own nature shut out and prevent all remedy. And he that thus perversely and maliciously opposeth the truth, must upon the same grounds unavoidably continue in his opposition to it ; because there is nothing left to be done for his conviction, more than is already done. If God should send a person immediately from Heaven to him to convince him of his error, he can give him no greater testimony that he comes from God than miracles : And if when God enables that person to work these by the power of his Spirit, this man will obstinately impute them to the power of the Devil, he defeats all the imaginable means of his own conviction. So that it is no wonder if that sin be unpardonable, which resists the last and utmost means which God hath ever yet thought fit to use to bring men to repentance and salvation. And if God were willing to reveal himself and the way to pardon and salvation to such a one, he doth by this very temper and disposition render himself incapable of being satisfied and convinced concerning any Divine Revelation.

Secondly, Because this sin is of that high nature that God is therefore justly provoked to withdraw his grace from such persons ; and it is probable, resolved so to do ; without which grace they will continue impenitent. There is no doubt but God, if he will, can work so powerfully upon the minds of men by his Grace and Spirit, as to convince the most obstinate : and supposing them to be convinced and repent, it cannot be denied but that they would be forgiven. And therefore when our Saviour here says they shall not be forgiven, it is reasonable to suppose that he means that when persons are come to that degree of obstinacy and malice God will (as justly he may) withdraw his grace from them: His Spirit will not strive with them to overcome their obstinacy, but will leave them to the byas of their own perverse and malicious minds; which will still engage them in a further opposition to the truth, and finally sink them into perdition. So that being deserted by God, and for want of the necessary help and aid of his grace (justly withdrawn from them) continuing finally impenitent, they become incapable of forgiveness both in this world and that which is to come. And there is nothing that can seem harsh or unreasonable in this, to those who grant (as I think all men do) that God may be so provoked by men as justly to withdraw his grace from them in this life, that grace which is necessary to their repentance. And surely if any provocation be likely to do it, this cannot be denied to be of all others the greatest, obstinately and maliciously to oppose the utmost evidence that God ever gave to the truth of any doctrine revealed by him. And of this the Pharisees, who are here charged with this sin against the Holy Ghost, were notoriously guilty in resisting the clear evidence of our Saviour's miracles.

And thus I have done with the four things I propounded to enquire into from these words, namely, The difference between speaking against the Son of man, and speaking against the Holy Ghost; wherein the nature of this sin or blasphemy against the Holy Ghost does consist; and in what sense this sin is said to be unpardonable; and upon what account it is so, namely, because men by this sin resist their last remedy, and oppose the best and utmost means of their conviction: And because it may reasonably be supposed that upon a provocation of this high nature, God may and is resolved to withdraw that grace from such persons which is necessary to their repentance, without which their sin remains for ever unpardonable.

All that now remains is to make this discourse some way or other useful to our selves. And it may very well serve to these two purposes. First, To comfort some very good and pious persons, who are liable to despair out of an apprehension that they have committed this sin. Secondly, To caution others against the approaches to it.

1. First, To comfort some very good and pious persons, who are liable to despair upon an apprehension that they have committed this great and unpardonable sin; and consequently are utterly incapable of ever being restored to the mercy and favour of God. And nothing can be more for the comfort of such persons than to understand aright what the nature of this sin was, and wherein the heinousness of it doth consist; which I have endeavoured to manifest. And if this be the nature of it which I have declared, as it seems very plain that it is, then I cannot see how any person now is likely to be in those circumstances as to be capable of committing it. And being a sin of so heinous a nature, and declared by our Saviour to be absolutely unpardonable, there is no reason to extend it beyond the case to which our Saviour applies it; which was the resisting of the evidence of the miracles which were wrought for the truth of Christianity, by those who were eye-witnesses of them, that is, by those who had the utmost assurance of them that human nature is capable of. And not only a bare resistance of that evidence, but with a very malicious circumstance, so as to impute those works which were wrought by the Holy Ghost to the power of the Devil. This was the case of the Pharisees whom our Saviour chargeth with this sin. And no body hath warrant to extend this sin any further than this case: and without good warrant it would be the most uncharitable thing in the world to extend it any further.

That

That which comes nearest to it, both in the heinousness of the crime and the unpardonableness of it, is total Apostacy from Christianity after the embracing of it, and full of conviction of the truth of it. And this the Scripture seems to place if not in the same rank, yet very near to it. And of this the Apostle speaks very often in the Epistle to the Hebrews under the name of unbelief, and sin by way of eminence, as being the great sin that Christians were in danger of falling into, called in that Epistle (Heb. 12. 1.) ἡ ἀπειθεία, the sin which Christians, by reason of the circumstances they were then in, were especially subject to : And he parallels it with the case of the Jews in the wilderness, concerning whom God swore that they should not enter into his rest, namely the earthly Canaan which was a type of Heaven, Chap. 3. ver. 18. And Chap. 6. ver. 4, 5, 6. more expressly ; For it is impossible that those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they should fall away, to renew them again to repentance. Where by impossible, the least that can be meant is that it is extremely difficult for such persons to recover themselves by repentance. And 'tis observable that those persons are said to have been partakers of the Holy Ghost, by which is meant that they were endued with a power of miracles by the Holy Ghost, or were under the conviction of them as having seen them wrought by others. So that this Apostacy may be said in that respect to be a sin against the Holy Ghost. So likewise, Chap. 10. verse 26. If we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth (that is, if we apostatize from Christianity after we have embraced the profession of it, as appears plainly from the Scope of the Apostle's discourse) there remains no more sacrifice for sin : which expression declares this sin either to be unpardonable, or something very like it. And at the 29th verse, those persons are said to tread under foot the Son of God, and to do despite unto the Spirit of Grace. Which signifies that the sin there spoken of is more immediately committed against the Holy Spirit of God. St. Peter likewise declares the great danger of this sin, 2 Pet. 2. 20. If after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. St. John likewise seems to speak of this sin of Apostacy, and to call it a sin unto death : Discouraging Christians rather, from praying for those who were fallen into it ; which gives great suspicion that he looked upon it as hardly pardonable, 1 John 5. 16. If any man see his brother sin a sin not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for those that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death, I do not say that he shall pray for it. Now that by the sin unto death the Apostle here means Apostacy from the Christian Religion to the Heathen Idolatry seems extremely probable from what follows, ver. 18. We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not, but keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not ; that is, he preserveth himself from Idolatry, which the Devil had seduced the world into, ver. 19. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness, ὁ τῷ πονηρῷ, in the wicked one ; that is, is under the power of the Devil ; and we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us understanding to know him that is true ; that is, to distinguish between the true God and Idols. And then it follows, This is the true God, and eternal life : Little children keep your selves from Idols. Which last caution is a key to the understanding of all the rest, and makes it very probable that the sin unto death is Apostacy from Christianity unto Idolatry : Otherwise it is hard to imagine how the last clause comes in, Little children keep your selves from Idols. And this is that sin which of all other approacheth nearest to this sin against the Holy Ghost which our Saviour speaks of, and concerning the pardonableness of which the Scripture seems to speak very doubtfully. But if it were of the same unpardonable nature, yet this can be no trouble to those persons I am speaking of, who cannot but know themselves to be far enough from the guilt of this sin.

As for those other sins which by some are taken to be the sins against the Holy Ghost, they are either such as perhaps no man is capable of committing, as a malicious opposition to the truth when I am convinced and know it to be the truth: For this seems to be a contradiction, to know any thing to be the truth and to believe it to be so, and yet to oppose it; because the understanding can no more oppose truth as truth, than the will can refuse good as good. Or else, they are such as no man can know he is guilty of in this life; as, final impenitency, which supposeth a man to live and die without repentance. Or else, such as I think no good man is incident to; as, a malicious and perverse opposing of the truth after sufficient means of conviction. However, none of these are that which the Scripture describes to be the sin against the Holy Ghost, as I have already shewn.

But still there are two things which usually trouble honest and well-meaning persons, but are rather the effects of Melancholy than any reasonable ground of trouble. Some think that every deliberate sin against knowledge, and after conviction, is the sin against the Holy Ghost. This is acknowledged to be a very great aggravation of sin, and such as calls for a great and particular repentance; but does by no means render a man incapable of forgiveness. Others are troubled with blasphemous thoughts, and those they think to be the sin against the Holy Ghost. But this is generally the mere effects of Melancholy, and the persons that are troubled with these black thoughts are no ways consenting to them, but they rise in their minds perfectly against their wills and without any approbation of theirs: And in this case they are so far from being the unpardonable sin, that I hope, ye and verily believe, they are no sins at all, but the mere effects of a bodily distemper; and no more imputed to us than the wild and idle ravings of a man in a frenzy or a fever. And God forbid that the natural effects of a bodily disease should bring guilt upon our souls. So that these persons have reason enough for comfort; but the misery is, their present distemper renders them incapable of it.

2. Secondly, The other Use I would make of this discourse is, to caution men against the degrees and approaches of this sin. For if the sin against the Holy Ghost be of such a high nature and so unpardonable, then all approaches to it are very dreadful. Such as are, prophane scoffing at Religion, and the Holy Spirit of God which dwells in good men: Abuse of the Holy Scriptures, which were indited by the Spirit of God: Perverse infidelity, notwithstanding all the evidence which we have for the truth of Christianity, and sufficient assurance of the Miracles wrought for the confirmation of it brought down to us by credible History, though we are not eyewitnesses of them: Obstinacy in a sinful and vicious course, notwithstanding all the motives and arguments of the Gospel to persuade men to repentance. Sinning against the clear conviction of our Consciences, and the motions and suggestions of God's Holy Spirit to the contrary. Malicious opposing of the truth when the Arguments for it are very plain and evident to any impartial and unprejudiced mind, and when he that opposeth the Truth hath no clear satisfaction in his own mind to the contrary, but suffers himself to be furiously and headily carried on in his opposition to it. These are all sins of a very very high nature, and of the nearest affinity with this great and unpardonable sin, of any that can easily be instanced in. And though God, to encourage the repentance of men, have not declared them unpardonable, yet they are great provocations; and if they be long continued in, we know not how soon God may withdraw his Grace from us, and suffer us to be hardned through the deceitfulness of sin.

Be ready then to entertain the truth of God whenever it is fairly propounded to thee, and with such evidence as thou art willing to accept in other matters where thou hast no prejudice nor interest to the contrary. Do nothing contrary to thy known duty, but be careful in all things to obey the Convictions of thine own Conscience, and to yield to the good motions and suggestions of God's Holy Spirit, who works secretly upon the minds of men, and inspires us many times gently with good thoughts and inclinations, and is griev'd when we do not comply with them; and after many repulses will at last withdraw himself from us, and leave us to be assaulted by the temptations of the Devil, and to be hurried away by our own lusts into ruin and perdition.

The Example of Jesus in doing good.

ACTS X. 38.

----- Who went about doing good.

WHEN Almighty God designed the Reformation of the World and the restoring of Man to the Image of God, the Pattern after which he was first made, he did not think it enough to give us the most perfect Laws of holiness and virtue; but hath likewise set before us a living Pattern, and a familiar example to excite and encourage us, to go before us and shew us the way, and as it were to lead us by the hand in the obedience of those Laws. Such is the Sovereign Authority of God over men that he might, if he had pleased, have only given us a Law written with his own hand, as he did to the people of Israel from Mount Sinai: but such is his Goodness, that he hath sent a great Ambassador from Heaven to us, God manifested in the Flesh, to declare and interpret his will and pleasure; and not only so, but to fulfil that Law himself, the observation whereof he requires of us. The bare Rules of a good life are a very dead and ineffectual thing in comparison of a living Example, which shews us the possibility and practicableness of our Duty; both that it may be done, and how to do it. Religion indeed did always consist in an Imitation of God, and in our resemblance of those excellencies which shine forth in the best and most perfect Being; but we may imitate him now with much greater ease and advantage, since God was pleased to become Man on purpose to shew us how men may become like to God. And this is one great End for which the Son of God came into the world, and was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and conversed so long and familiarly with mankind; that in his own Person and Life he might give us the Example of all that holiness and virtue which his Laws require of us. And as he was in nothing liker the Son of God than in being and doing good, so is he in nothing a fitter Pattern for our imitation than in that excellent Character given of him here in the Text, That He went about doing good.

In which words two things offer themselves to our consideration.

First, Our Saviour's great Work and Business in the World, which was to do good: ὁ δὲ δι᾿ ἁλάντων ἐπεργαζόμενος, who employed himself in being a Benefactor to Mankind. This refers more especially to his healing the bodily diseases and infirmities of men. God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with Power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the Devil. Intimating to us by this instance of his doing good, that he who took so much pains to rescue mens Bodies from the power and possession of the Devil, would not let their Souls remain under his tyranny. But tho the Text instanceth only in one particular, yet this general expression of doing good comprehends all those several ways whereby he was beneficial to mankind.

Secondly,

Secondly, Here is his Diligence and Industry in this work, He went about doing good; he made it the great business and constant employment of his life. I shall propound to you the Pattern of our Saviour in both these particulars.

I. His great Work and Business in the world was to do good. The most pleasant and delightful, the most happy and glorious work in the world. It is a work of a large extent, and of an universal influence; and comprehends in it all those ways whereby we may be useful and beneficial to one another. And indeed it were pity that so good a thing should be confined within narrow bounds and limits. It reacheth to the Souls of men, and to their Bodies; and is conversant in all those ways and kinds whereby we may serve the Temporal or Spiritual good of our Neighbour, and promote his present and his future happiness. What our Blessed Saviour did in this kind, and we in imitation of him ought to do, I shall reduce to these two Heads. First, Doing good to the Souls of men and endeavouring to promote their spiritual and eternal happiness. Secondly, The procuring of their temporal good and contributing as much as may be to their happiness in this present life.

1. Doing good to the Souls of men and endeavouring to promote their spiritual and eternal happiness, by good Instruction, and by good Example.

First, By good Instruction. And under Instruction I comprehend all the means of bringing men to the knowledge of their Duty, and exciting them to the practice of it; by instructing their Ignorance, and removing their Prejudices, and rectifying their Mistakes, by Persuasion and by Reproof; and by making lasting Provision for the promoting of these Ends.

By instructing mens Ignorance. And this is a duty which every man owes to another as he hath opportunity, but especially to those who are under our care and charge, our Children and Servants and near Relations, those over whom we have a special authority and a more immediate influence. This our Blessed Saviour made his great work in the world, to instruct all sorts of persons in the things which concerned the Kingdom of God, and to direct them in the way to eternal Happiness; by publick teaching, and by private conversation, and by taking occasion from the common occurrences of human life, and every object that presented it self to him, to instil good counsel into men, and to raise their minds to the consideration of divine and heavenly things. And though this was our Saviour's great Employment, and is theirs more particularly whose Office it is to teach others; yet every man hath private opportunities of instructing others, by admonishing them of their duty, and by directing them to the best means and helps of knowledge; such as are Books of Piety and Religion, with which they that are rich may furnish those who are unable to provide for themselves.

And then by removing mens Prejudices against the Truth, and rectifying their Mistakes. This our Saviour found very difficult; the generality of those with whom he had to do being strongly prejudiced against him and his Doctrine by false Principles, which they had taken in by Education, and been trained up to by their Teachers. And therefore he used a great deal of meekness in instructing those that opposed themselves, and exercised abundance of patience in bearing with the infirmities of men, and their dulness and slowness of capacity to receive the Truth.

And this is great Charity, to consider the inveterate Prejudices of men; especially those which are rooted in education, and which men are confirmed in by the reverence they bear to those that have been their Teachers. And great Allowance is to be given to men in this case, and time to bethink themselves and to consider better. For no man that is in an Error thinks he is so; and therefore if we go violently to rend their Opinions from them, they will but hold them so much the faster; but if we have patience to unrip them by degrees, they will at last fall in pieces of themselves.

And when this is done, the way is open for Counsel and Persuasion. And this our Saviour administered in a most powerful and effectual manner, by encouraging men to Repentance, and by representing to them the infinite advantages of obeying his Laws, and the dreadful and dangerous consequences of breaking of them. And these are arguments fit to work upon Mankind, because there is something within us that consents to the equity and reasonableness of God's Laws. So that whenever we persuade men to their duty, how backward soever they may be to the practice of it, being strongly addicted to a contrary course, yet we have this certain advantage, that we have their Consciences and the most inward sense of their minds on our side, bearing witness that what we counsel and persuade them to is for their good.

And if need be we must add Reproof to Counsel. This our Saviour did with great freedom, and sometimes with sharpness and severity, according to the condition of the persons he had to deal withal. But because of his great Authority; being a Teacher immediately sent from God, and of his intimate knowledge of the hearts of men, he is not a Pattern to us in all the circumstances of discharging this duty; which, if any other, requires great prudence and discretion if we intend to do good, the only end to be aimed at in it. For many are fit to be reprov'd whom yet every man is not fit to reprove; and in that case we must get it done by those that are fit, and great regard must be had to the time and other circumstances of doing it, so as it may most probably have its effect.

I will mention but one way of Instruction more, and that is by making lasting provision for that purpose: as by founding Schools of Learning, especially to teach the Poor to read, which is the Key of Knowledge; by building of Churches and endowing them; by buying or giving in Improvements, or the like. These are large and lasting ways of teaching and instructing others, which will continue when we are dead and gone; as it is said of Abel, that being dead he yet speaks. And this our Saviour virtually did by appointing his Apostles after he had left the World to go and teach all Nations, and ordering a constant succession of Teachers in his Church to instruct men in the Christian Religion, together with an honourable Maintenance for them. This we cannot do in the way that he did who had all power in heaven and earth, but we may be subservient to this Design in the ways that I have mentioned. Which I humbly commend to the consideration of those whom God hath blessed with great Estates and made capable of effecting such great works of Charity.

Secondly, Another way of doing good to the Souls of men is by good Example. And this our Blessed Saviour was in the utmost perfection. For he fulfilled all righteousness, had no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. And this we should endeavour to be, as far as the frailty of our nature and imperfection of our present state will suffer. For good example is an unspeakable benefit to mankind, and hath a secret power and influence upon those with whom we converse, to form them into the same disposition and manners.

manners. It is a living Rule, that teacheth men without trouble, and lets them see their faults without open reproof and upbraiding. Besides that it adds great weight to a man's counsel and persuasion, when we see that he advises nothing but what he does, nor exacts any thing from others from which he himself desires to be excused. As on the contrary, nothing is more cold and insignificant than good counsel from a bad man, one that does not obey his own precepts, nor follow the advice which he is so forward to give to others.

These are the several ways of doing good to the Souls of men, wherein we who are the Disciples of the Blessed Jesus ought in imitation of his Example to exercise our selves according to our several capacities and opportunities. And this is the noblest Charity, and the greatest kindness that can be shewn to humane nature; it is in the most excellent sense to give eyes to the blind, to set the prisoners at liberty, to rescue men out of the saddest slavery and captivity, and to save Souls from death. And it is the most lasting and durable benefit, because it is to do men good to all eternity.

2. The other way of being beneficial to others is, by procuring their Temporal good, and contributing to their happiness in this present life. And this, in subordination to our Saviour's great design of bringing men to eternal Happiness, was a great part of his business and employment in this world. He went about healing all manner of sicknesses and diseases, and rescuing the Bodies of Men from the power and possession of the Devil.

And though we cannot be beneficial to men in that miraculous manner that he was; yet we may be so in the use of ordinary means: We may comfort the afflicted, and vindicate the oppressed, and do a great many acts of Charity which our Saviour by reason of his poverty could not do without a Miracle: We may supply the necessities of those that are in want, feed the hungry, and cloath the naked, and visit the sick, and minister to them such comforts and remedies as they are not able to provide for themselves: We may take a Child that is poor and destitute of all advantages of Education, and bring him up in the knowledge and fear of God, and without any great expence put him into a way wherein by his diligence and industry he may arrive to a considerable fortune in the world, and be able afterwards to relieve hundreds of others. Men glory in raising great and magnificent Structures, and find a secret pleasure to see Sets of their own planting to grow up and flourish: But surely it is a greater and more glorious work to build up a Man, to see a Youth of our own planting, from the small beginnings and advantages we have given him, to grow up into a considerable fortune, to take root in the world, and to shoot up to such a height and spread his branches so wide, that we who first planted him may our selves find comfort and shelter under his shadow. We may many times with a small liberality shore up a Family that is ready to fall, and struggles under such necessities that it is not able to support it self. And if our minds were as great as sometimes our estates are, we might do great and publick works of a general and lasting advantage, and for which many Generations to come might call us blessed. And those who are in the lowest condition may do great good to others by their Prayers, if they themselves be as good as they ought. For the fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. The intercession of those who are in favour with God (as all good men are) are not vain wishes, but many times effectual to procure that good for others which their own endeavours could never have effected and brought about.

I have done with the first thing. The great Work and Business which our Blessed Saviour had to do in the world, and that was to do good. I proceed to the

II. Second thing contained in the Text, Our Saviour's Diligence and Industry in this work, He went about doing good. He made it the great business and constant employment of his life, he travelled from one place to another to seek out opportunities of being useful and beneficial to Mankind. And this will fully appear if we briefly consider these following particulars :

First, How unwearied our blessed Saviour was in doing good. He made it his only business, and spent his whole life in it. He was not only ready to do good to those that came to him and gave him opportunity for it, and besought him to do it, but went himself from one place to another to seek out objects to exercise his Charity upon. He went to those who could not, and to those who would not come to him ; for so it is written of him, He came to seek and to save that which was lost. He was contented to spend whole days in this work, to live in a crowd and to be almost perpetually oppressed with company ; and when his Disciples were moved at the rudeness of the People in pressing upon him, he rebuked their impatience, and, for the pleasure he took in doing good made nothing of the trouble and inconvenience that attended it.

Secondly, If we consider how much he denied himself in the chief comforts and conveniences of humane life that he might do good to others. He neglected the ordinary refreshments of nature, his meat and drink and sleep, that he might attend this work. He was at every body's beck and disposal to do them good. When he was doing cures in one place, he was sent for to another, and he either went or sent healing to them, and did by his word at a distance what he could not come in person to do. Nay he was willing to deny himself in one of the dearest things in the world, his reputation and good name. He was contented to do good, though he was ill thought of and ill spoken of for it. He would not refuse to do good on the Sabbath-day, though he was accounted prophane for so doing. He knew how scandalous it was among the Jews to keep company with Publicans and Sinners, and yet he would not decline so good a work for all the ill words they gave him for it.

Thirdly, If we consider the malicious opposition and sinister construction that his good deeds met withall. Never did so much goodness meet with so much enmity, endure so many affronts and so much contradiction of Sinners. This great Benefactor of Mankind was hated and persecuted as if he had been a publick Enemy. While he was instructing them in the meekest manner, they were ready to stone him for telling them the truth ; and when the fame of his Miracles went abroad, though they were never so useful and beneficial to mankind, yet upon this very account, they conspire against him and seek to take away his life. Whatever he said or did, though never so innocent, never so excellent, had some bad interpretation put upon it, and the great and shining Virtues of his life were turned into Crimes and matter of accusation. For his casting out of Devils, he was called a Magician ; for his endeavour to reclaim men from their Vices, a Friend of Publicans and Sinners ; for his free and obliging Conversation, a Wine-bibber and a Glutton. All the benefits which he did to men, and the blessings which he so liberally shed among the people, were construed to be a design of Ambition and Popularity, and done with an intention to move the people to Sedition, and to make himself a King: Enough to have discouraged the greatest goodness, and have put a damp upon the most generous mind, and to make it sick and weary of well-doing. For what more grievous than to have all the good one does ill interpreted, and the best actions in the world made matter of calumny and reproach?

And then lastly, If we consider how chearfully, notwithstanding all this, he persevered and continued in well-doing. It was not only his business, but his delight; I delight (says he) to do thy will, O my God. The pleasure which others take in the most natural actions of life, in eating and drinking when they are hungry he took in doing good, it was his meat and drink to do the will of his Father. He plied this work with so much diligence as if he had been afraid he should have wanted time for it. I must work the work of him that sent me, while it is day, the night cometh when no man can work. And when he was approaching towards the hardest and most unpleasant part of his Service, but of all others the most beneficial to us, I mean his Death and Sufferings, he was not at ease in his mind till it was done; How am I straitned (says he) till it be accomplished. And just before his Suffering, with what Joy and Triumph does he reflect upon the good he hath done in his life? Father, I have glorified thee upon earth, and finished the work which thou hast given me to do. What a blessed Pattern is here of diligence and industry in doing good? how fair and lovely a Copy for Christians to write after?

And now that I have set it before you, it will be of excellent use to these two purposes: To shew us our Defects; and to excite us to our Duty.

I. To shew us our Defects. How does this blessed Example upbraid those who live in a direct contradiction to it; who instead of going about doing good, they are perpetually intent upon doing mischief; who are wise and active to do evil, but to do good have no inclination, no understanding? And those likewise who, though they are far from being so bad, yet wholly neglect this blessed work of doing good? They think it very fair to do no evil, to hurt and injure no man: but if Preachers will be so unreasonable as to require more, and will never be satisfied till they have persuaded them out of their estate, and to give to the poor till they have almost impoverished themselves, they desire to be excused from this importunity. But we are not so unreasonable neither. We desire to put them in mind, that to be charitable according to our power is an indispensable duty of Religion: that we are commanded not only to abstain from evil, but to do good; and that our blessed Saviour hath given us the Example of both; he did not only do no sin, but he went about doing good; And upon this nice point it was that the young rich man in the Gospel and his Saviour parted. He had kept the Commandments from his youth, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal: he had been very careful of the negative part of Religion; But, when it came to parting with his Estate and giving to the poor, this he thought too hard a condition, and upon this he forsook our Saviour and forfeited the Kingdom of Heaven. And it is very considerable, and ought to be often and seriously thought upon, that our Saviour describing to us the Day of Judgment represents the great Judge of the World acquitting and condemning men according to the good which they had done, or neglected to do in ways of mercy and charity; for feeding the hungry, and cloathing the naked, and visiting the sick, or for neglecting to do these things: Than which nothing can more plainly and effectually declare to us the necessity of doing good in order to the obtaining eternal Happiness.

There are many indeed who do not altogether neglect the doing of this work, who yet do in a great measure prevent and hinder themselves from doing it as they ought, under a pretence of being employed about other Duties and parts of Religion. They are so taken up with the exercises of Piety and Devotion in private and publick, with Prayer, and reading and hearing Sermons, and preparing themselves for the Sacrament, that they have scarce any leisure to mind the doing of good and charitable offices to others: or if they have, they hope God will pardon his servants in this thing, and accept of their Piety and Devotion instead of all. But they ought to consider, that when these two parts of Religion come in competition, Devotion is to give way to Charity, Mercy being better than Sacrifice: That the great End of all the Duties of Religion, Prayer, and reading and hearing the Word of God, and receiving the holy Sacrament is to dispose and excite us to do good, to make us more ready and forward to every good work: and that it is the greatest mockery in the world, upon pretence of using the means of Religion to neglect the end of it; and because we are always preparing our selves to do good, to think that we are for ever excused from doing any.

Others are taken up in contending for the Faith, and spend all their zeal and heat about some controversies in Religion; and therefore they think it but reasonable that they should be excused from those meaner kind of Duties, because they serve God, as they imagine in a higher and more excellent way; as those who serve the King in his Wars use to be exempted from Taxes and Offices. But do those men consider upon what kind of Duties more especially our Blessed Saviour and his Apostles lay the great weight and stress of Religion? that it is to the Meek, and Merciful, and Peaceable that our Saviour pronounceth Blessedness? that pure Religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction? that the wisdom which is from above is full of mercy and good works? These are the great and weighty things of Religion, which, whatever else we do, ought not to be left undone. Do they consider that a right Faith is wholly in order to a good Life, and is of no value any further than it hath an influence upon it? So that whatever other Duties we may be obliged to, nothing can excuse us from this. How much better is it to do good, to be really useful and beneficial to others, and how much more clearly and certainly our duty, than to quarrel about doubtful and uncertain opinions? Were men Christians indeed they would be so much delighted and taken up with this better work (more acceptable to God, and more profitable to men) that they could not find leisure, or if they could, they could not find in their hearts to employ all their time and zeal about things which are at so great a distance from the life and heart of Religion, as most of those Questions are which Christians at this day contend and languish about. Were we possessed with the true spirit of Christianity, these would be but dry and insipid and tasteless things to us, in comparison of the blessed employment of doing good in a more real and substantial way. If the sincere love of God and our Neighbour were but once thoroughly kindled in our hearts, these pure and heavenly flames would in a great measure extinguish the unchristian heats of dispute and contention; as Fires here below are ready to languish and go out when the Sun in his full strength shines upon them.

II. But the hardest part of my task is yet behind, and it is strange it should be so; and that is to persuade us to the imitation of this blessed Example. Let us go and do likewise; let the same mind be in us that was in Christ Jesus; let us tread in the steps of the great God and the best Man that ever was, our blessed Saviour, who went about doing good. Methinks the work it self is of that nature, that men should not need to be courted to it by persuasion, nor urged by importunity. The very proposal of the thing, and the Pattern which I have set before you, is temptation and allurements enough to a generous and well-disposed mind. But yet to inflame you the more to so good a work, be pleased to dwell with me a little upon these following considerations:

First, it is an argument of a great and generous mind, to employ our selves in doing good, to extend our thoughts and care to the concerns of others, and to use our power and endeavours for their benefit and advantage; because it shews an inclination and desire in us to have others happy as well as our selves.

Those who are of a narrow and envious spirit, of a mean and sordid disposition, love to contract themselves within themselves, and like the Ledgehog to shoot out their quills at every one that comes near them. They take care of no body but themselves, and foolishly think their own happiness the greater because they have it alone and to themselves. But the noblest and most heavenly dispositions think themselves happiest when others share with them in their happiness. Of all Beings God is the farthest removed from Envy, and the nearer any Creature approacheth to him in blessedness the farther it is off from this hellish quality and disposition. It is the temper of the Devil to grudge happiness to others; he envied that Man should be in Paradise when He was cast out of Heaven.

Other Perfections are (as one says) of a more melancholick and solitary disposition, and shine brightest when they are alone, or attained to but by a few; once make them common and they lose their lustre. But it is the nature of goodness to communicate it self, and the farther it spreads the more glorious it is. God reckons it as one of his most glorious Titles, as the brightest Gem in his Diadem, The Lord mighty to save. He delights not to shew his Sovereignty in ruining the Innocent and destroying helpless Creatures; but in relieving them out of the jaws of Hell and Destruction. To the Devil belongs the Title of the Destroyer.

Without this quality of goodness all other Perfections would change their nature, and lose their excellency. Great Power and Wisdom would be terrible, and raise nothing but dread, and suspicion in us: For Power without Goodness would be Tyranny and Oppression, and Wisdom would become Craft and Treachery. A Being endued with Knowledge and Power, and yet wanting Goodness, would be nothing else but an irresistible Evil, and an omnipotent Mischief. We admire Knowledge, and are afraid of Power, and suspect Wisdom: But we can heartily love nothing but Goodness, or such Perfections as are in conjunction with it. For Knowledge and Power may be in a nature most contrary to God's; the Devil hath these perfections in an excellent degree. When all is done, nothing argues a great and generous mind but only Goodness; which is a propension and disposition to make others happy, and a readiness to do them all the good offices we can.

Secondly, To do Good is the most pleasant employment in the World. It is natural; and whatever is so is delightful. We do like our selves whenever we relieve the wants and distresses of others. And therefore this Virtue among all other hath peculiarly entituled it self to the name of Humanity. We answer our own Nature, and obey our Reason and shew our selves Men in shewing Mercy to the miserable. Whenever we consider the evils and afflictions of others, we do with the greatest reason collect our Duty from our nature and inclination, and make our own wishes and desires and expectations from others a law and rule to our selves. And this is pleasant, to follow our nature, and to gratify the importunate dictates of our own Reason. So that the benefits we do to others are not more welcome to them that receive them, than they are delightful to us that do them. We ease our own nature and bowels, whenever we help and relieve those who are in want and necessity. As on the contrary, no man that hath not divested himself of humanity can be cruel and hard-hearted to others without feeling some pain in himself. There is no sensual pleasure in the world comparable to the delight and satisfaction that a good man takes in doing good. This Cato in Tully boasts of as the great comfort and joy of his old age, That nothing was more pleasant to him than the Conscience of a well spent life, and the remembrance of many benefits and kindnesses done to others. Sensual pleasures are not lasting, but presently vanish and expire; but that is not the worst of them, they leave a sting behind them, as the pleasure goes off.

—Succedit frigida cura.

Sadness and Melancholy come in the place of it, guilt and trouble and repentance follow it. But the pleasure of doing good remains after a thing is done, the thoughts of it lie easy in our minds, and the reflection upon it afterwards does for ever minister joy and delight to us. In a word, that frame of mind which inclines us to do good is the very temper and disposition of happiness. Solomon, after all his experience of worldly pleasures, pitches at last upon this as the greatest felicity of human life, and the only good use that is to be made of a prosperous and plentiful fortune, Eccl. 3. 12. I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice and do good in his life. And a greater and a wiser than Solomon had said that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Thirdly, To employ our selves in doing good is to imitate the highest Excellency and Perfection. It is to be like God who is good and doth good, and to be like him in that which he esteems his greatest glory, and that is, his goodness. It is to be like the Son of God, who when he took our nature upon him, and lived in the world, went about doing good. It is to be like the blessed Angels, whose great employment it is to be ministering Spirits for the good of others. To be charitable and helpful and beneficial to others, is to be a good Angel and a Saviour and a God to men. And the Example of our blessed Saviour more especially is the great Pattern which our Religion propounds to us. And we have all the reason in the world to be in love with it; because that very Goodness which it propounds to our imitation, was so beneficial to our selves: when we our selves feel and enjoy the happy effects of that good which he did in the world, this should mightily endear the Example to us, and make us forward to imitate that love and kindness to which we are indebted for so many blessings, and upon which all our hopes of happiness do depend.

And there is this considerable difference between our Saviour's Charity to us, and ours to others: He did all purely for our sakes and for our benefit, whereas all the good we do to others is a greater good done to our selves. They are indeed beholden to us for the kindness we do them, and we to them for the opportunity of doing it. Every ignorant person that comes in our way to be instructed by us, every sinner whom we reclaim, every poor man we relieve, is a happy opportunity of doing good to our selves, and of laying up for our selves a good treasure against the time which is to come, that we may lay hold on eternal life. By this principle the best and the happiest man that ever was, governed his life and actions, esteeming it a more blessed thing to give than to receive.

Fourthly, This is one of the greatest and most substantial Duties of Religion; and next to the love and honour which we pay to God himself, the most acceptable service that we can perform to him. It is one half of the Law, and next to the first and great Commandment, and very like unto it: like to it in the excellency of its nature, and in the necessity of its obligation. For this commandment we have from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also. The first Commandment excels in the dignity of the object; but the second hath the advantage in the reality of its effects. For our righteousness extendeth not to God, we can do him no real benefit: but our Charity to men is really useful and beneficial to them. For which reason God is contented, in many cases, that the external Honour and Worship which by his positive command he requires of us, should give way to that natural duty of Love and Mercy which we owe to one another. And to shew how great a value he puts upon Charity, he hath made it the great testimony of our love to himself; and for want of it, rejects all other professions of love to him as false and insincere. If any man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

Fifthly, This is that which will give us the greatest comfort when we come to die. It will then be no pleasure to men to reflect upon the greatest estates they have got, and the great places they have been advanced to, because they are leaving these things, and they will stand them in no stead in the other world: Riches profit not in the day of wrath: But the conscience of well-doing will refresh our Souls even under the very pangs of death. With what contentment does a good man then look upon the good he hath done in his life? and with what confidence doth he look over into the other world, where he hath provided for himself bags that wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not? For though our estates will not follow us into the other World, our good works will; tho we cannot carry our riches along with us, yet we may send them before us to make way for our reception into everlasting habitations. In short, works of Mercy and Charity will comfort us at the hour of death, and plead for us at the day of Judgment, and procure for us at the hands of a merciful God a glorious recompence at the resurrection of the just. Which leads me to the Last Consideration I shall offer to you; which is the reward of doing good both in this world and the other. If we believe God himself, he hath made more particular and encouraging promises to this grace and virtue than to any other.

The advantages of it in This World are many and great. It is the way to derive a lasting blessing upon our estates. Acts of Charity are the best Deeds of Settlement. We gain the prayers and blessings of those to whom we extend our charity, and it is no small thing to have the blessing of them that are ready to perish to come upon us. For God hears the prayers of the destitute, and his ear is open to their Cry. Charity is a great security to us in times of evil: and that not only from the special promise and providence of God, which are engaged to preserve from want those that relieve the necessities of others; but likewise from the nature of the thing, which makes way for its own reward in this world. He that is charitable to others provides vides a supply and retreat for himself in the day of distress: For he provokes mankind by his example to like tenderness towards him, and prudently bespeaks the commiseration of others against it comes to be his turn to stand in need of it. Nothing in this world makes a man more and surer Friends than Charity and Bounty, and such as will stand by us in the greatest troubles and dangers. For a good man (says the Apostle) one would even dare to die. 'Tis excellent counsel of the Son of Sirach; Lay up thy treasure according to the Commandment of the most High, and it shall bring thee more profit than gold. Shut up thy Alms in thy store-house, and it shall deliver thee from all affliction: It shall fight for thee against thine enemies, better than a mighty Shield and strong Spear. It hath sometimes happened that the obligation that men have laid upon others by their Charity, hath in case of danger and extremity done them more kindness than all the rest of their Estate could do for them; and their Alms have literally delivered them from death.

But what is all this to the endless and unspeakable Happiness of the Next life, where the returns of doing good will be vastly great beyond what we can now expect or imagine? For God takes all the Good we do to others as a debt upon himself, and he hath estate and treasure enough to satisfy the greatest obligations we can lay upon him. So that we have the Truth, and Goodness, and Sufficiency of God for our security, that what we scatter and sow in this kind will grow up to a plentiful harvest in the other world; and that all our pains and expence in doing good for a few days will be recompenced and crowned with the joys and glories of Eternity. •

LUKE IX. 55, 56.

But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of; For the Son of Man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save them.

AMONG many other things, which may justly recommend the Christian Religion to the approbation of mankind, the intrinsic goodness of it is most apt to make impression upon the Minds of serious and considerate men. The Miracles of it are the great external evidence and confirmation of its Truth and Divinity; but the morality of its Doctrines and Precepts, so agreeable to the best reason and wisest apprehensions of mankind, so admirably fitted for the perfecting of our natures, and the sweetning of the spirits and tempers of men, so friendly to humane Society, and every way so well calculated for the peace and order of the World. These are the things which our Religion glories in as her crown and excellency. Miracles are apt to awaken and astonish, and by a sensible and over-powering evidence to bear down the prejudices of Infidelity; but there are secret charms in goodness which take fast hold of the hearts of men, and do insensibly, but effectually, command our love and esteem.

And surely nothing can be more proper to the occasion of this Day, than a Discourse upon this Argument; which so directly tends to correct that unchristian spirit, and mistaken zeal, which hath been the cause of all our troubles and confusions, and had so powerful an influence upon that horrid Tragedy which was designed, now near upon fourscore years ago, to have been acted as upon this Day.

And that we may the better understand the reason of our Saviour's reproof here in the Text, it will be requisite to consider the occasion of this hot and furious zeal which appeared in some of his Disciples. And that was this: Our Saviour was going from Galilee to Jerusalem, and being to pass through a Village of Samaria he sent messengers before him to prepare entertainment for him; but the People of that Place would not receive him, because he was going to Jerusalem: the Reason whereof was, the difference of Religion which then was between the Jews and the Samaritans. Of which I shall give you this brief account.

The Samaritans were originally that Colony of the Affyrians which we find in the Book of Kings was, upon the Captivity of the Ten Tribes, planted in Samaria by Salmanassar. They were Heathens, and worshipped their own Idols, till they were so infested with Lions, that for the redress of this mischief they desired to be instructed in the worship of the God of Israel, hoping by this means to appease the anger of the God of the Country; and then they worshipped the God of Israel together with their own Idols; for so it is said in the History of the Kings, that they feared the Lord, and served their own Gods.

After the Tribe of Judah were returned from the Captivity of Babylon, and the Temple of Jerusalem was rebuilt, all the Jews were obliged by a solemn Covenant to put away their Heathen Wives. It happened that Manasses, a Jewish Priest, had married the Daughter of Sanballat the Samaritan; and being unwilling to put away his Wife, Sanballat excited the Samaritans to build a Temple upon Mount Gerizim near the City of Samaria, in opposition to the Temple at Jerusalem, and made Manasses his Son-in-law Priest there.

Upon the building of this new Temple there arose a great feud between the Jews and Samaritans, which in process of time grew to so violent a hatred that they would not so much as shew common civility to one another. And this was the reason why the Samaritans would not receive our Saviour in his journey, because they perceived he was going to worship at Jerusalem.

At this uncivil usage of our Saviour, two of his Disciples, James and John, presently take fire, and out of a well-meaning zeal for the honour of their Master, and of the true God, and of Jerusalem the true place of his Worship, they are immediately for dispatching out of the way these Enemies of God, and Christ, and the true Religion; these Hereticks and Schismatics, for so they called one another. And to this end they desire our Saviour to give them power to call for fire from Heaven to consume them, as Elias had done in a like case, and that too not far from Samaria; and it is not improbable that their being so near the place where Elias had done the like before, might prompt them to this request.

Our Saviour seeing them in this heat, notwithstanding all the reasons they pretended for their passion, and for all they sheltered themselves under the great Example of Elias, doth very calmly but severely reprove this temper of theirs, Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of: for the Son of Man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save them.

Grotius observes, that these two excellent Sentences are left out in a Manuscript that is in England. I cannot tell what Manuscript he refers to; but if it were a Copy written out in the height of Popery, no wonder if some zealous Transcriber, offended at this passage, struck it out of the Gospel, being confident our Saviour would not say any thing that was so directly contrary to the current Doctrine and Practice of those times. But thanks be to God this admirable saying is still preserved, and can never be made use of upon a fitter occasion.

Ye know not what manner of Spirit ye are of: That is, Ye own your selves to be my Disciples, but do you consider what spirit now acts and governs you? Not that surely which my Doctrine designs to mould and fashion you into, which is not a furious and persecuting and destructive spirit, but mild and gentle and saving; tender of the lives and interests of men, even of those who are our greatest Enemies: You ought to consider, That you are not now under the rough and sour Dispensation of the Law, but the calm and peaceable Institution of the Gospel; to which the spirit of Elias, though he was a very good man in his time, would be altogether unsuitable. God permitted it then, under that imperfect way of Religion; but now under the Gospel it would be intolerable: For that designs universal love, and peace, and good-will: and now no difference of Religion, no pretence of zeal for God and Christ can warrant and justify this passionate and fierce, this vindictive and exterminating spirit.

For

For the Son of Man is not come to destroy mens lives, but to save them. He says indeed elsewhere, that he was not come to send Peace, but a Sword; which we are not to understand of the natural tendency of his Religion, but of the accidental event and effect of it, through the malice and perverseness of men: But here he speaks of the proper intention and design of his coming: He came not to kill and destroy, but for the healing of the Nations; for the salvation and redemption of Mankind, not only from the wrath to come, but from a great part of the evils and miseries of this life: He came to discountenance all fierceness and rage and cruelty in men, one towards another; to restrain and subdue that furious and unpeaceable spirit, which is so troublesome to the world, and the cause of so many mischiefs and disorders in it: And to introduce a Religion which consults not only the eternal salvation of mens souls, but their temporal peace and security, their comfort and happiness in this world.

The words thus explained contain this Observation, That a revengeful, and cruel, and destructive Spirit is directly contrary to the design and temper of the Gospel, and not to be excused upon any pretence of zeal for God and Religion.

In the prosecution of this Argument, I shall confine my discourse to these Three heads.

First, To shew the opposition of this spirit to the true Spirit and design of the Christian Religion.

Secondly, The unjustifiableness of it upon any pretence of zeal for God and Religion.

Thirdly To apply this Discourse to the occasion of this Day.

I. First, I shall shew the opposition of this spirit to the true Spirit and design of the Christian Religion: That it is directly opposite to the main and fundamental Precepts of the Gospel, and to the great Patterns and Examples of our Religion, our Blessed Saviour, and the Primitive Christians.

1. This spirit which our Saviour here reproveth in his Disciples, is directly opposite to the main and fundamental Precepts of the Gospel; which command us to love one another, and to love all men, even our very enemies; and are so far from permitting us to persecute those who hate us, that they forbid us to hate those who persecute us: They require us to be merciful as our Father which is in Heaven is merciful; to be kind and tender-hearted, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us: And to put on as the elect of God, bowels of mercy, meekness and long suffering, and to follow peace with all men, and to shew all meekness to all men: And particularly the Pastors and Governors of the Church are especially charged to be of this temper, The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men; apt to teach, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth. To all which Precepts, and many more that I might reckon up, nothing can be more plainly opposite than inhumane Cruelties and Persecutions, treacherous Conspiracies and bloody Massacres, a barbarous Inquisition, and a holy League to extirpate all that differ from us. And instead of instructing in meekness those that oppose themselves, to convert men with fire and faggot, and to teach them as Gideon did the men of Succoth with briars and thorns; and instead of waiting for their repentance and endeavouring to recover them out of the snare of the Devil, to put them quick into his hands, and to dispatch them to Hell as fast as is possible. If the precepts of Christianity can be contradicted, surely it cannot be done more grossly and palpably than by such practices.

2. This spirit is likewise directly opposite to the great Patterns and Examples of our Religion, our Blessed Saviour, and the Primitive Christians. It was prophesied of our Saviour that he should be the Prince of peace, and should make it one of his great businesses upon earth, to make Peace in Heaven and earth, to reconcile Men to God and to one another, to take up all those feuds and to extinguish all those animosities that were in the World; to bring to agreement and a peaceable demeanour one towards another those that were most distant in their tempers and interests, to make the lamb and the wolf lye down together, that there might be no more destroying nor devouring in all God's holy mountain; that is, that that cruel and destructive spirit which prevail'd before in the world should then be banished out of all Christian societies.

And in conformity to these predictions, when our Saviour was born into the world the Angels sang that heavenly Anthem, Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will among men. And when he appeared in the world his whole life and carriage was gentle and peaceable, full of meekness and charity. His great business was to be beneficial to others, to seek and to save that which was lost; he went about doing good, to the bodies and to the souls of men: his miracles were not destructive to mankind, but healing and charitable. He could, if he had pleased, by his miraculous power have confounded his enemies, and have thundred out death and destruction against the Infidel World, as his pretended Vicar hath since done against Hereticks. But intending that his Religion should be propagated in human ways, and that Men should be drawn to the profession of it by the bands of love, and the cords of a man, by the gentle and peaceable methods of Reason and Persuasion; he gave no example of a furious zeal and religious rage against those who despised his Doctrine. It was propounded to men for their great advantage, and they rejected it at their utmost peril. It seemed good to the Author of this institution to compel no man to it by temporal punishments. When he went about making proselytes he offered violence to no man, only said, If any man will be my disciple, If any man will come after me. And when his disciples were leaving him he does not set up an Inquisition to torture and punish them for their defection from the faith, only says, Will ye also go away?

And in imitation of this blessed Pattern the Christian Church continued to speak and act for several Ages. And this was the language of the holy Fathers, Lex nova non se vindicat ultore gladio, the Christian Law doth not avenge it self by the Sword. This was then the style of Councils, Nemini ad credendum vim inferre, to offer violence to no man to compel him to the Faith. I proceed in the

II. Second place, to shew the Unjustifiableness of this spirit upon any pretence whatsoever of zeal for God and Religion. No case can be put with Circumstances of greater advantage and more likely to justify this spirit and temper, than the case here in the Text. Those against whom the Disciples would have called for fire from Heaven, were Hereticks and Schismatics from the true Church; they had affronted our Saviour himself in his own person; the honour of God, and of that Religion which he had set up in the World, and of Jerusalem which he had appointed for the place of his worship, were all concerned in this case: so that if ever it were warrantable to put on this fierce and furious zeal, here was a case that seem'd to require it: But even in these circumstances our Saviour thinks fit to rebuke and discountenance this this spirit, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. And he gives such a reason as ought in all differences of Religion, how wide soever they be, to deter men from this temper, For the Son of man is not come to destroy mens lives but to save them; that is, this Spirit is utterly inconsistent with the great design of Christian Religion, and the end of our Saviour's coming into the world.

And now, what hath the Church of Rome to plead for her cruelty to men for the cause of Religion, which the Disciples might not much better have pleaded for themselves in their case? what hath she to say against those who are the objects of her cruelty and persecution, which would not have held against the Samaritans? Does she practise these severities out of a zeal for truth, and for the honour of God, and Christ, and the true Religion? Why, upon these very accounts it was, that the Disciples would have called for fire from Heaven to have destroyed the Samaritans. Is the Church of Rome persuaded that those whom she persecutes are Hereticks and Schismaticks, and that no punishment can be too great for such offenders? So the Disciples were persuaded of the Samaritans: and upon much better grounds: Only the Disciples had some excuse in their case, which the Church of Rome hath not; and that was Ignorance: And this Apology our Saviour makes for them, ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of: They had been bred up in the Jewish Religion, which gave some indulgence to this kind of temper, and they were able to cite a great Example for themselves; besides, they were then but learners and not thoroughly instructed in the Christian Doctrine. But in the Church of Rome, whatever the case of particular persons may be, as to the whole Church and the Governing part of it, this ignorance is wilful and affected, and therefore inexcusable. For the Christian Religion, which they profess to embrace, does as plainly teach the contrary as it does any other matter whatsoever: And it is not more evident in the New Testament that Christ died for sinners, than that Christians should not kill one another for the misbelief of any Article of Revealed Religion; much less for the disbelief of such Articles as are invented by men, and imposed as the Doctrines of Christ.

You have heard what kind of Spirit it is, which our Saviour here reproves in his Disciples. It was a furious and destructive Spirit, contrary to Christian charity and goodness. But yet this may be said in mitigation of their fault, that they themselves offered no violence to their enemies: They left it to God, and no doubt would have been very glad that he would have manifested his severity upon them, by sending down fire from Heaven to have consumed them.

But there is a much worse Spirit than this in the world, which is not only contrary to Christianity, but to the common principles of Natural Religion, and even to Humanity it self: Which by falshood and perfidiousness, by secret plots and conspiracies, or by open sedition and rebellion, by an Inquisition or Massacre, by deposing and killing Kings, by fire and sword, by the ruine of their Country, and betraying it into the hands of Foreigners; and in a word, by dissolving all the bonds of human Society, and subverting the peace and order of the World, that is, by all the wicked ways imaginable both to incite men to promote and advance their Religion. As if all the world were made for them, and there were not only no other Christians, but no other Men beside themselves; as Babylon of old proudly vaunted, I am, and there is none besides me: And as if the God, whom the Christians worship, were not the God of order but of confusion; as if He whom we call the Father of mercies, were delighted with cruelty, and could not

not have a more pleasing sacrifice offer'd to him than a Massacre, nor put a greater honour upon his Priests than to make them Judges of an Inquisition, that is, the inventors and decreers of torments for men more righteous and innocent than themselves.

Thus to misrepresent God and Religion, is to devest them of all their Majesty and Glory. For if that of Seneca be true, that sine bonitate nulla majestas, without Goodness there can be no such thing as Majesty, then to separate goodness and mercy from God, compassion and charity from Religion, is to make the two best things in the world, God and Religion good for nothing.

How much righter apprehensions had the Heathen of the Divine Nature, which they looked upon as so benign and beneficial to mankind, that (as Tully admirably says) Dii immortales ad usum hominum fabricati penè videantur, The nature of the immortal Gods may almost seem to be exactly framed for the benefit and advantage of men. And as for Religion, they always spake of it as the great band of human Society, and the foundation of truth and fidelity, and justice among men. But when Religion once comes to supplant moral Righteousness, and to teach men the absurdest things in the world, to lye for the truth, and to kill men for God's sake : when it serves to no other purpose, but to be a bond of conspiracy, to inflame the tempers of men to a greater fierceness, and to set a keener edge upon their spirits, and to make them ten times more the children of wrath and cruelty than they were by nature, then surely it loses its nature, and ceases to be Religion : For let any man say worse of Atheism and Infidelity, if he can. And, for God's sake, what is Religion good for, but to reform the manners and dispositions of men, to restrain humane nature from violence and cruelty, from falshood and treachery, from Sedition and Rebellion? Better it were there were no Revealed Religion, and that humane nature were left to the conduct of its own principles and inclinations, which are much more mild and merciful, much more for the peace and happiness of humane society ; than to be acted by a Religion that inspires men with so wild a fury, and prompts them to commit such outrages : and is continually supplanting Government, and undermining the welfare of mankind ; in short, such a Religion as teaches men to propagate and advance it self by means so evidently contrary to the very nature and end of all Religion.

And this, if it be well consider'd, will appear to be a very convincing way of reasoning, by shewing the last result and consequence of such principles, and of such a Train of Propositions, to be a most gross and palpable absurdity. For example, We will at present admit Popery to be the true Religion, and their Doctrines of extirpating Hereticks, of the lawfulness of deposing Kings, and subverting Government by all the cruel and wicked ways that can be thought of, to be, as in truth they are, the doctrines of this Religion : In this case, I would not trouble my self to debate particulars : but if in the gross, and upon the whole matter it be evident that such a Religion as this is as bad or worse than Infidelity and no Religion, this is conviction enough to a wise man, and as good as a demonstration, that this is not the true Religion, and that it cannot be from God.

How much better teachers of Religion were the old Heathen Philosophers : In all whose Books and Writings there is not one Principle to be found of Treachery or Rebellion ; nothing that gives the least countenance to an Association or a Massacre, to the betraying of ones Native Country, or the cutting of his neighbour's throat for difference in opinion. I speak it with grief and shame, because the credit of our common Christianity is somewhat concerned in it, that Panætius and Antipater and Diogenes the Stoick, Tully and and Plutarch and Seneca were much honeſter and more Chriſtian Caſuiſts, than the Jefuits are, or the generality of the Caſuiſts of any other Order, that I know of, in the Church of Rome. I come now in the

III. Third and laſt place, to make ſome Application of this Diſcourſe.

1. Let not Religion ſuffer for thoſe faults and miſcarriages which really proceed from the ignorance of Religion, and from the want of it. That under colour and pretence of Religion, very bad things are done, is no argument that Religion it ſelf is not good: Becauſe the beſt things are liable to be perverted and abuſed to very ill purpoſes, nay the corruption of them is commonly the worſt; as, they ſay, the richeſt and nobleſt Wines make the ſharpeſt Vinegar. If the light that is in you, ſaith our Saviour, be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs?

2. Let us beware of that Church which countenanceth this unchriſtian Spirit here condemned by our Saviour; and which teaches us ſuch Doctrines, and warrants ſuch Practices as are conſonant thereto. You all know, without my ſaying ſo, that I mean the Church of Rome; in which are taught ſuch Doctrines as theſe, That Hereticks, that is, all who diſſer from them in matters of Faith, are to be extirpated by fire and Sword; which was decreed in the third and fourth Lateran Councils, where all Chriſtians are ſtrictly charged to endeavour this to the uttermoſt of their power, Sicut reputari cupiunt & haberi fideles, as they deſire to be eſteemed and accounted Chriſtians. Next their Doctrines of depoſing Kings, and of abſolving their Subjects from obedience to them; which were not only univerſally believed, but practiſed by the Popes and Roman Church for ſeveral Ages. Indeed this Doctrine hath not been at all times alike frankly and openly avowed, but it is undoubtedly theirs; and hath frequently been put in execution, though they have not thought it ſo convenient at all turns to make profeſſion of it. It is a certain kind of Engine, which is to be ſcrew'd up or let down as occaſion ſerves; and is commonly kept like Goliath's Sword in the Sanctuary behind the Ephod, but yet ſo that the High-Prieſt can lend it out upon an extraordinary occaſion.

And for Practices conſonant to theſe Doctrines, I ſhall go no farther than the horrid and bloody Deſign of this Day. Such a Mystery of Iniquity, as had been hid from ages and generations; Such a Maſter-piece of Villany, as eye had not ſeen, nor ear heard, nor ever before entred into the heart of man: So prodigiouſly barbarous, both in the ſubſtance and circumſtances of it, as is not to be parallell'd in all the voluminous Records of Time, from the foundation of the World.

Of late years our Adverſaries (for ſo they have made themſelves without any provocation of ours) have almoſt had the impudence to deny ſo plain a matter of fact; but I wiſh they have not taken an effectual courſe by freſh Conſpiracies, of equal or greater horror, to confirm the belief of it with a witneſs. But I ſhall not anticipate what will be more proper for another Day, but confine my ſelf to the preſent Occaſion.

I will not trouble you with the particular Narrative of this dark Conſpiracy, nor the obſcure manner of its diſcovery, which Bellarmin himſelf acknowledges not to have been without a Miracle. Let us thank God that it was ſo happily diſcovered and diſappointed, as I hope their preſent deſign will be by the ſame wonderful and merciful providence of God towards a moſt unworthy People. And may the lameſneſs and halting of Ignatius Loyola, the Founder of the Jefuits, never depart from that Order, but be a Fate continually attending all their villanous Plots and Contrivances.

I ſhall

I shall only observe to you, that after the discovery of this Plot the Authors of it were not convinced of the evil, but sorry for the miscarriage of it. Sir Everard Digby, whose very original Papers and Letters are now in my hands. after he was in Prison, and knew he must suffer, calls it the best Cause; and was extremely troubled to hear it censured by Catholicks and Priests, contrary to his expectation, for a great sin: Let me tell you, says he, what a grief it is, to hear THAT so much condemned, which I did believe would have been otherwise thought of by Catholicks. And yet he concludes that Letter with these words: In how full joy should I dye, if I could do any thing for the Cause which I love more than my life! And in another Letter he says, he could have said something to have mitigated the odium of this business, as to that Point of involving those of his own Religion in the common ruin. I dare not (says he) take that course that I could, to make it appear less odious, for divers were to have been brought out of danger, who now would rather hurt them than otherwise. I do not think there would have been three worth the saving, that should have been lost. And as to the rest, that were to have been swallowed up in that destruction, he seems not to have the least relenting in his mind about them. All doubts he seems to have look'd upon as temptations, and intreats his Friends to pray for the pardoning of his not sufficient striving against temptations since this business was undertook.

Good God! that any thing that is called Religion, should so perfectly strip men of all humanity, and transform the mild and gentle race of mankind into such Wolves and Tygers: that ever a pretended zeal for Thy glory should instigate men to dishonour Thee at such a rate! It is believed by many, and not without cause, that the Pope and his Faction are the Antichrist. I will say no more than I know in this matter; I am not so sure that it is he that is particularly designed in Scripture by that Name, as I am of the main Articles of the Christian Faith: But however that be, I challenge Antichrist himself, whoever he be, and whenever he comes, to do worse and wicked things than these.

But I must remember my Text, and take heed of imitating that Spirit which is there condemned, whilst I am inveighing against it. And in truth it almost looks uncharitably to speak the truth in these matters, and barely to relate what these men have not blush'd to do. I need not say I cannot, aggravate these things; they are too horrible in themselves, even when they are express'd in the softest and gentlest words.

I would not be understood to charge every particular person who is, or hath been in the Roman Communion, with the guilt of these or the like practices: But I must charge their Doctrines and Principles with them: I must charge the Heads of their Church, and the prevalent teaching and governing part of it, who are usually the contrivers and abettors, the executioners and applauders of these cur'd Designs.

I do willingly acknowledge the great Piety and Charity of several persons who have lived and died in that Communion, as Erasmus, Father Paul, Thuanus, and many others; who had in truth more goodness than the Principles of that Religion do either incline men to, or allow of. And yet he that considers how universally almost the Papists in Ireland were engaged in that Massacre, which is still fresh in our memories, will find it very hard to determine how many degrees of innocency and good nature, or of coldness and indifferency in Religion, are necessary to overballance the fury of a blind zeal and a misguided Conscience.

I doubt not but Papists are made like other men. Nature hath not generally given them such savage and cruel dispositions, but their Religion hath

hath made them so. Whereas true Christianity is not only the best, but the best-natur'd Institution in the world; and so far as any Church is departed from good nature, and become cruel and barbarous, so far is it degenerated from Christianity. I am loth to say it, and yet I am confident 'tis very true, That many Papists would have been excellent Persons and very good Men, if their Religion had not hindered them; if the Doctrines and Principles of their Church had not perverted and spoiled their natural Dispositions.

I speak not this to exasperate You, worthy Patriots and the great Bulwark of our Religion, to any unreasonable or unnecessary, much less unchristian Severities against them: No, let us not do like them; let us never do any thing for Religion that is contrary to it: But I speak it to awaken your care thus far, That if their Priests will always be putting these pernicious Principles into the minds of the People, effectual Provision may be made, that it may never be in their Power again to put them in Practice. We have found by Experience, that ever since the Reformation they have been continually pecking at the Foundations of our Peace and Religion: When God knows we have been so far from thirsting after their Blood, that we did not so much as desire their disquiet but in order to our own necessary safety, and indeed to theirs.

And God be praised for those matchless Instances which we are able to give of the generous humanity and Christian temper of the English Protestants. After Queen Mary's Death, when the Protestant Religion was restored, Bishop Bonner notwithstanding all his Cruelties and Butcheries, was permitted quietly to live and dye amongst us. And after the Treason of this Day, nay at this very time since the discovery of so barbarous a Design, and the highest Provocation in the World, by the treacherous Murder of one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, a very good Man and a most excellent Magistrate, who had been active in the discovery of this Plot; I say, after all this, and notwithstanding the continued and insupportable insolence of their Carriage and Behaviour, even upon this occasion, no Violence, nay not so much as any incivility, that I ever heard of, hath been offer'd to any of them. I would to God they would but seriously consider this one difference between our Religion and theirs, and which of them comes nearest to the Wisdom which is from above, which is peaceable, and gentle, and full of mercy. And I do heartily pray, and have good hopes, that upon this occasion God will open their eyes so far, as to convince a great many among them, that that cannot be the true Religion which inspires men with such barbarous minds.

I have now done, and if I have been transported upon this Argument somewhat beyond my usual temper, the Occasion of this Day, and our present circumstances, will, I hope, bear me out. I have expressed my self all along with a just sense, and with no unjust severity, concerning these horrid Principles and Practices; but yet with great pity and tenderness towards those miserably seduced Souls, who have been deluded by them, and ensnared in them. And I can truly say, as the Roman Orator did of himself upon another occasion, Me natura misericordem, patria severum, crudellem nec patria nec natura esse voluit. My nature inclines me to be tender and compassionate; a hearty zeal for our Religion, and concernment for the publick welfare of my Country, may perhaps have made me a little severe; but neither my natural disposition, nor the temper of the English Nation, nor the Genius of the Protestant, that is, the true Christian Religion, will allow me to be cruel.

For the future, Let us encourage our selves in the Lord our God; and commit our Cause, and the keeping of our Souls to Him in well doing: And, under God, let us leave it to the wisdom and care of His Majesty, and His two Houses of Parliament, to make a lasting Provision for the security of our Peace and Religion against all the secret contrivances and open attempts of these sons of violence. And let us remember those words of David, Psal. 37. 12, 13, 14, 15. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth: The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day is coming. The wicked have drawn out the sword, and bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation: Their swords shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

And I hope, considering what God hath heretofore done, and hath now begun to do for us, we may take encouragement to our selves against all the Enemies of our Religion, which are confederated against us, in the words of the Prophet, Isa. 8. 9, 10. Associate your selves, O ye People, and ye shall be broken in pieces, and give ear all ye of far Countries: Gird your selves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: Gird your selves, and ye shall be broken in pieces: Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought: Speak the word and it shall not stand. FOR GOD IS WITH US.

And now what remains, but to make our most devout and thankful acknowledgments to Almighty God, for the invaluable Blessing of our Reformed Religion, and for the miraculous Deliverance of this Day, and for the wonderful Discovery of the late horrid and barbarous Conspiracy against our Prince, our Peace, and our Religion?

To Him therefore, our most gracious and merciful God, our Shield, and our Rock, and our mighty Deliverer: Who hath brought us out of the Land of Egypt, and out of the House of Bondage; and hath set us free from Popish Tyranny and Superstition, a Yoke which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear.

Who hath, from time to time, delivered us from the bloody and merciless designs of wicked and unreasonable men; and hath render'd all the plots and contrivances, the mischievous counsels and devices of these worse than Heathens, of none effect.

Who did as upon this Day, rescue our King and our Princes, our Nobles and the Heads of our Tribes, the Governours of our Church and the Judges of the Land, from that fearful Destruction which was ready to have swallowed them up.

Who still brings to light the hidden things of darkness, and hath hitherto preserved our Religion and Civil Interests to us, in despite of all the malicious and restless attempts of our Adversaries.

Unto that great God, who hath done so great things for us, and hath saved us by a mighty Salvation: Who hath delivered us, and doth deliver us, and, we trust, will still deliver us: be glory and honour, thanksgiving and praise, from generation to generation. And let all the People say, Amen.

Stewards of the Yorkshire Feast.

GENTLEMEN,

T*His Sermon, which was first Preached, and is now Published at your desires, I dedicate to your Names, to whose Prudence and Care the direction and management of this first General Meeting of our Country-men was committed; Heartily wishing that it may be some way serviceable to the healing of our unhappy Differences, and the restoring of Unity and Charity among Christians, especially those of the Protestant Reform'd Religion. I am,*

Gentlemen,

Your affectionate Country-man and humble Servant,

Jo. Tillotson.

S E R M O N XX.

Preached at the first General Meeting of the Gentlemen, and Others, in and near LONDON, Born within the County of YORK.

JOHN XIII. 34, 35.

A new Commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another: By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye love one another.

AS the Christian Religion in general is the best Philosophy and most perfect Institution of Life; containing in it the most entire and compleat System of moral Rules and Precepts that was ever yet extant in the World: so it peculiarly excels in the Doctrine of Love and Charity; earnestly recommending, strictly enjoining, and vehemently and almost perpetually pressing and inculcating the excellency and necessity of this best of Graces and Virtues; and propounding to us, for our imitation and encouragement, the most lively and heroical Example of kindness and charity that ever was, in the Life and Death of the great Founder of our Religion, the author and finisher of our faith, Jesus the Son of God.

So that the Gospel, as it hath in all other parts of our Duty, cleared the dimness and obscurity of natural Light, and supplied the imperfections of former Revelations, so doth it most eminently reign and triumph in this great and blessed virtue of Charity; in which all the Philosophy and Religions that had been before in the World, whether Jewish or Pagan, were so remarkably defective.

With great reason then doth our blessed Saviour call this a new Commandment, and assert it to himself as a thing peculiar to his Doctrine and Religion; considering how imperfectly it had been taught and how little it had been practised in the World before; A new Commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another: By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye love one another.

I shall reduce my Discourse upon these Words under these six Heads.

First, To enquire in what sense our Saviour calls this Commandment of loving one another a new Commandment.

Secondly, To declare to you the nature of this Commandment, by instancing in the chief Acts and Properties of Love.

Thirdly, To consider the degrees and measures of our Charity, with regard to the several Objects about which it is exercised.

Fourthly,

Fourthly, Our Obligation to this Duty, not only from our Saviour's Authority, but likewise from our own Nature, and from the Reasonableness and Excellency of the thing commanded.

Fifthly, The great Example which is here propounded to our imitation; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

Sixthly, and Lastly, The Place and Rank which this Precept holds in the Christian Religion. Our Saviour makes it the proper badge of a Disciple, the distinctive mark and character of our Profession; By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye love one another.

I. In what sense our Saviour calls this Commandment of loving one another a new Commandment; Not that it is absolutely and altogether New, but upon some special accounts. For it is a branch of the ancient and primitive Law of Nature. Aristotle truly observes, that upon grounds of natural kindred and likeness all men are friends, and kindly dispos'd towards one another. And it is a known Precept of the Jewish Religion, to love our neighbour as our selves.

In some sense then, it is no new Commandment; and so St. John, who was most likely to understand our Saviour's meaning in this particular, (all his preaching and writing being almost nothing else but an inculcating of this one Precept) explains this matter, telling us that in several respects it was and it was not a new Commandment, 1 Joh. 2. 7, 8. Brethren, I write no new Commandment unto you, but that which ye had from the beginning, that is, from ancient times: But then he corrects himself; Again, πάλιν, but yet a new Commandment I write unto you. So that though it was not absolutely new, yet upon divers considerable accounts it was so, and in a peculiar manner proper to the Evangelical Institution; and is in so express and particular a manner ascribed to the teaching of the Holy Ghost, which was conferr'd upon Christians by the Faith of the Gospel, as if there hardly needed any outward instruction and exhortation to that purpose, 1 Theff. 4. 9. But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you, for ye your selves are θεωδιδάκτοι, divinely taught and inspired to love one another.

This Commandment then of loving one another is by our Lord and Saviour so much enlarged as to the Object of it, beyond what either the Jews or Heathens did understand it to be, extending to all mankind, and even to our greatest enemies; so greatly advanced and heightned as to the Degree of it, even to the laying down of our lives for one another; so effectually taught, so mightily encouraged, so very much urged and insisted upon, that it may very well be called a new Commandment: for though it was not altogether unknown to mankind before, yet it was never so taught, so encouraged; never was such an illustrious Example given of it, never so much weight and stress laid upon it by any Philosophy or Religion that was before in the World.

II. I shall endeavour to declare to you the Nature of this Commandment, or the Duty required by it. And that will best be done, by instancing in the chief Acts and Properties of Love and Charity. As, Humanity, and kindness in all our carriage and behaviour towards one another; for Love smooths the dispositions of men, so that they are not apt to grate upon one another: Next, to rejoyce in the good and happiness of one another, and to grieve at their evils and sufferings; for Love unites the interests of men so as to make them affected with what happens to another, as if it were in some sort their own case: Then, to contribute as much as in us lies to the happiness of one another, by relieving one another's wants, and redressing their Misfortunes:

Again,

Again, tenderness of their good name and reputation; a proneness to interpret all the words and actions of men to the best sense; patience and forbearance towards one another; and when differences happen, to manage them with all possible calmness and kindness, and to be ready to forgive and to be reconciled to one another; to pray one for another; and if occasion be, at least if the publick good of Christianity require it, to be ready to lay down our lives for our brethren, and to sacrifice our selves for the furtherance of their Salvation.

III. We will consider the Degrees and measures of our Charity, with regard to the various Objects about which it is exercised.

And as to the negative part of this Duty, it is to be extended equally towards all. We are not to hate or bear ill-will to any man, or to do him any harm or mischief; Love worketh no evil to his neighbour. Thus much charity we are to exercise towards all without any exception, without any difference.

And as to the positive part of this Duty, we should bear an universal good-will to all men, wishing every man's happiness, and praying for it as heartily as for our own: And if we be sincere herein, we shall be ready upon all occasions to procure and promote the welfare of all men. But the outward acts and testimonies of our Charity neither can be actually extended to all, nor ought to be all alike. We do not know the wants of all, and therefore our knowledge of persons, and of their conditions, doth necessarily limit the effects of our Charity within a certain compass; and of those we do know, we can but relieve a small part for want of ability. Whence it becomes necessary, that we set some rules to our selves for the more discreet ordering of our Charity; such as these; Cases of extremity ought to take place of all other. Obligations of Nature, and nearness of Relation, seem to challenge the next place. Obligations of kindness, and upon the accounts of benefits received, may well lay the next claim. And then the Household of Faith is to be peculiarly considered. And after these, the merit of the persons, and all circumstances belonging to them, are to be weighed and valued: Those who labour in an honest calling, but are oppress'd with their charge; those who are fallen from a plentiful condition, especially by misfortune and the providence of God, without their own fault; those who have relieved others, and have been eminently charitable and beneficial to mankind; and lastly, those whose visible necessities and infirmities of body or mind, whether by age or by accident, do plead for them: All these do challenge our more especial regard and consideration.

IV. We will consider our Obligations to this Duty, not only from our Saviour's Authority, but likewise from our own Nature, and from the reasonableness and excellency of the thing commanded. This is the Commandment of the Son of God, who came down from Heaven with full Authority to declare the Will of God to us. And this is peculiarly His Commandment, which he urgeth upon his Disciples so earnestly, and so as if he almost required nothing else in comparison of this. Joh. 15. 12. This is my commandment, that ye love one another: And Ver. 17. These things I command you, that ye love one another. As if this were the end of all his Precepts, and of his whole Doctrine, to bring us to the practice of this Duty. And so S. John, the loving and beloved Disciple, speaks of it as the great Messsage which the Son of God was to deliver to mankind, 1 Joh. 3. 11. This is the Messsage which ye have heard from the beginning, that ye should love one another. And Ver. 23. This is his Commandment, mandment, that we should believe on the Name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us Commandment. And Chap. 4. v. 21. This Commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God loveth his brother also.

But besides the Authority of our Saviour, we have a precedent obligation to it from our own Nature, and from the Reasonableness and Excellency of the thing it self. The frame of our Nature disposeth us to it, and our inclination to Society, in which there can be no pleasure, no advantage, without mutual love and kindness. And Equity also calls for it, for that we our selves wish and expect kindness from others is conviction enough to us that we owe it to others. The fulfilling of this Law is the great perfection of our Natures, the advancement and enlargement of our Souls, the chief ornament and beauty of a great mind. It makes us like to God, the best and most perfect and happiest Being, in that which is the prime excellency and happiness and glory of the Divine Nature.

And the advantages of this temper are unspeakable and innumerable. It freeth our souls from those unruly and troublesome and disquieting Passions which are the great torment of our Spirits; from Anger and Envy, from Malice and Revenge, from Jealousie and Discontent. It makes our minds calm and chearful, and puts our souls into an easie posture, and into good humour, and maintains us in the possession and enjoyment of our selves: It preserves men from many mischiefs and inconveniences, to which enmity and ill-will do perpetually expose them: It is apt to make Friends, and to gain Enemies; and to render every condition either pleasant, or easie, or tolerable to us. So that to love others, is the truest love to our selves, and doth redound to our own unspeakable benefit and advantage in all respects.

It is a very considerable part of our Duty, and almost equall'd by our Saviour with the first and great Commandment of the Law. It is highly acceptable to God, most beneficial to others, and very comfortable to our selves. It is the easiest of all Duties, and it makes all others easie; the pleasure of it makes the pains to signifie nothing, and the delightful reflection upon it afterwards is a most ample reward of it. It is a Duty in every man's power to perform, how strait and indigent soever his fortune and condition be. The poorest man may be as charitable as a Prince; he may have as much kindness in his heart, though his hand cannot be so bountiful and munificent. Our Saviour instanceth in the giving of a cup of cold water, as a Charity that will be highly accepted and rewarded by God. And one of the most celebrated Charities that ever was, how small was it for the matter of it, and yet how great in regard of the mind that gave it? I mean the Widow's two mites, which she cast into the Treasury: One could hardly give less, and yet none can give more, for she gave all that she had. All these excellencies and advantages of Love and Charity, which I have briefly recounted, are so many Arguments, so many Obligations to the practice of this Duty:

V. We will consider the great instance and example which is here propounded to our imitation; As I have loved you, that ye also love one another. The Son of God's becoming Man, his whole life, his bitter death and passion, all that he did, and all that he suffered, was one great and continued proof and evidence of his mighty love to mankind. The greatest instance of love among men, and that too but very rare, is for a man to lay down his life for another, for his Friend; but the Son of God died for all mankind, and we were all his enemies. And should we not chearfully imitate the example of that great great Love and Charity, the effects whereof are so comfortable, so beneficial, so happy to every one of us. Had he not loved us, and died for us, we had certainly perish'd, we had been miserable and undone to all eternity.

And to perpetuate this great Example of Charity, and that it might be always fresh in our memories, the great Sacrament of our Religion was on purpose instituted for the commemoration of this great love of the Son of God, in laying down his life, and shedding his precious blood for the wicked and rebellious race of mankind. But I have not time to enlarge upon this noble Argument as it deserves

VI. The last thing to be considered is the place and rank which this Precept and Duty holds in the Christian Religion. Our blessed Saviour here makes it the proper badge and cognisance of our Profession; By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples if ye love one another. The different Sects among the Jews had some peculiar Character to distinguish them from one another. The Scholars of the several great Rabbi's among them had some peculiar Sayings and Opinions, some Customs and Traditions whereby they were severally known: And so likewise the Disciples of John the Baptist were particularly remarkable for their great Austerities. In allusion to these distinctions of Sects and Schools among the Jews, our Saviour fixeth upon this mark and character whereby his Disciples should be known from the Disciples of any other Institution, A mighty love and affection to one another.

Other Sects were distinguish'd by little Opinions, or by some external Rites and Observances in Religion; but our Saviour pitcheth upon that which is the most real and substantial, the most large and extensive, the most useful and beneficial, the most humane and the most divine quality of which we are capable.

This was his great Commandment to his Disciples, before he left the World: This was the Legacy he left them, and the effect of his last Prayers for them: And for this end among others, he instituted the Sacrament of his blessed Body and Blood, to be a lively remembrance of his great Charity to mankind, and a perpetual bond of Love and Union amongst his Followers.

And the Apostles of our Lord and Saviour do upon all occasions recommend this to us, as a principal Duty and Part of our Religion; telling us, That in Christ Jesus, that is, in the Christian Religion, nothing will avail, nor not Faith it self, unless it be enlivened and inspired by Charity; That Love is the end of the Commandment, ἡ ἀγάπη ἐστὶν τὸ τέλος τῆς ἐντολῆς, the end of the Evangelical declaration, the first Fruit of the Spirit, the spring and root of all those Graces and Virtues which concern our duty towards one another: That it is the sum and abridgement, the accomplishment and fulfilling of the whole Law: That without this, whatever we pretend to in Christianity, we are nothing, and our Religion is vain: That this is the greatest of all Graces and Virtues, greater than Faith and Hope; and of perpetual use and duration. Charity never fails.

And therefore they exhort above all things to endeavour after it, as the Crown of all other Virtues: Above all things have fervent charity among your selves, saith St. Peter: And St. Paul, having enumerated most other Christian Virtues, exhorts us above all to strive after this, And above all these things put on Charity, which is the bond of perfection. This St. John makes one of the most certain signs of our love to God, and the want of it an undeniable argument of the contrary: If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he bath not seen ? This he declares to be one of the best evidences that we are in a state of Grace and Salvation, Hereby we know that we are passed from death to life, because we love the Brethren.

So that well might our blessed Saviour chuse this for the badge of his Disciples, and make it the great Precept of the best and most perfect Institution : Other things might have served better for pomp and ostentation, and have more gratified the Curiosity, or Enthusiasm, or Superstition of mankind, but there is no quality in the world which upon a sober and impartial consideration is of a more solid and intrinsick value.

And in the first Ages of Christianity, the Christians were very eminent for this Virtue, and particularly noted for it ; Nobis notam inurit apud quosdam, it is a mark and brand set upon us by some, saith Tertullian ; and he tells us that it was proverbially said among the Heathen, Behold how these Christians love one another. Lucian, that great scoffer at all Religion, acknowledgeth in behalf of Christians, that this was the great Principle which their Master had instill'd into them : And Julian, the bitterest enemy that Christianity ever had, could not forbear to propound to the Heathen for an example the charity of the Galileans, for so by way of reproach he calls the Christians, who (says he) gave up themselves to humanity and kindness ; which he acknowledgeth to have been very much to the advantage and reputation of our Religion : And in the same Letter to Arsacius, the Heathen High Priest of Galatia, he gives this memorable Testimony of the Christians, that their Charity was not limited and confin'd only to themselves, but extended even to their Enemies ; which could not be said either of the Jews or Heathens : His words are these, It is a shame, that when the Jews suffer none of theirs to beg, and the impious Galileans relieve not only their own, but those also of our Religion, that we only should be defective in so necessary a Duty. By all which it is evident that Love and Charity is not only the great Precept of our Saviour, but was in those first and blest Times the general practice of his Disciples, and acknowledged by the Heathens as a very peculiar and remarkable quality in them.

The application I shall make of this discourse shall be threefold.

1. With relation to the Church of Rome.
2. With regard to our selves who profess the Protestant Reform'd Religion.
3. With a more particular respect to the occasion of this Meeting.

I. First, With relation to the Church of Rome ; Which we cannot chuse but think of, whenever we speak of Charity and loving one another ; especially having had so late a Discovery of their affection to us, and so considerable a testimony of the kindness and charity which they designed towards us : such as may justly make the ears of all that hear it to tingle, and render Poperie execrable and infamous, a frightful and hateful thing to the end of the World.

It is now but too visible how grossly this great Commandment of our Saviour is contradicted, not only by the Practices of those in that Communion from the Pope down to the meanest Friar ; but by the very Doctrines and Principles, by the Genius and Spirit of that Religion, which is wholly calculated for cruelty and persecution. Where now is that mark of a Disciple, so much insisted upon by our Lord and Master, to be found in that Church ? And yet what is the Christian Church but the Society and Community of Christ's Disciples ? Surely in all reason, that which our Lord made the distinctive Mark and Character of his Disciples, should be the principal mark of a true Church. Bellarmino reckons up no less than fifteen marks of the true Church

Church, all which the Church of Rome arrogates to her self alone: But he wisely forgot that which is worth all the rest, and which our Saviour insists upon as the chief of all other, A sincere Love and Charity to all Christians: This he knew would by no means agree to his own Church.

But for all that, it is very reasonable that Churches as well as particular Christians should be judged by their Charity. The Church of Rome would engross all Faith to her self: Faith in its utmost perfection, to the degree and pitch of infallibility; and they allow no body in the world, besides themselves, no though they believe all the Articles of the Apostles Creed, to have one grain of true Faith; because they do not believe upon the Authority of their Church, which they pretend to be the only foundation of true Faith. This is a most arrogant and vain pretence; but admit it were true, yet in the Judgment of St. Paul, Though they had all faith, if they have not charity, they are nothing.

The greatest wonder of all is this, that they who hate and persecute Christians most, do all this while the most confidently of all others pretend to be the Disciples of Christ, and will allow none to be so but themselves. That Church which excommunicates all other Christian Churches in the world, and if she could, would extirpate them out of the world, will yet needs assume to her self to be the only Christian Church: As if our Saviour had said, Hereby shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye hate, and excommunicate, and kill one another: What shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue? thou empty and impudent pretence of Christianity!

II. Secondly, With relation to our selves, who profess the Protestant Reformed Religion. How is this great Precept of our Saviour not only shamefully neglected, but plainly violated by us? And that not only by private hatred and ill-will, quarrels and contentions in our civil conversation and intercourse with one another; but by most unchristian divisions and animosities in that common relation wherein we stand to one another, as Brethren, as Christians, as Protestants.

Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us? And are we not in a more peculiar and eminent manner brethren, being all the Children of God by Faith in Jesus Christ? Are we not all members of the same Body, and partakers of the same Spirit, and Heirs of the same blessed Hopes of eternal life.

So that being Brethren upon so many accounts, and by so many bonds and endearments all united to one another, and all travelling towards the same heavenly Country, why do we fall out by the way, since we be Brethren? Why do we not as becomes Brethren, dwell together in unity? but are so apt to quarrel and break out into heats, to crumble into Sects and Parties, to divide and separate from one another upon every slight and trifling occasion.

Give me leave a little more fully to expostulate this matter, but very calmly and in the spirit of meekness, and in the name of our dear Lord who loved us all at such a rate as to die for us, to recommend to you this new Commandment of his, that ye love one another: Which is almost a new Commandment still, and hardly the worse for wearing; so seldom is it put on, and so little hath it been practised among Christians for several Ages.

Consider seriously with your selves; ought not the great matters wherein we are agreed, our union in the Doctrines of the Christian Religion and in all the necessary Articles of that Faith which was once delivered to the Saints, in the same Sacraments, and in all the substantial parts of God's worship, and in the great Duties and Vertues of the Christian life, to be of greater force to unite us, than difference in doubtful Opinions, and in little Rites and Circumstances of Worship to divide and break us?

Are not the things about which we differ in their nature indifferent? that is, things about which there ought to be no difference among wise men? Are they not at a great distance from the life and essence of Religion, and rather good or bad as they tend to the Peace and Unity of the Church, or are made use of to Schism and Faction, than either necessary or evil in themselves? And shall little scruples weigh so far with us, as by breaking the Peace of the Church about them to endanger our whole Religion? Shall we take one another by the throat for a hundred pence, when our common Adversary stands ready to clap upon us an Action of ten thousand Talents? Can we in good earnest be contented that rather than the Surplice should not be thrown out, Papery should come in; and rather than receive the Sacrament in the humble but indifferent posture of kneeling, to swallow the Camel of Transubstantiation, and adore the Elements of Bread and Wine for our God and Saviour? and rather than to submit to a Set Form of Prayer, to have the Service of God perform'd in an unknown Tongue?

Are we not yet made sensible, at least in this our day, by so clear a Demonstration as the Providence of God hath lately given us: and had not He been infinitely merciful to us, might have proved the dearest and most dangerous Experiment that ever was: I say, are we not yet convinced, what mighty advantages our Enemies have made of our Divisions, and what a plentiful harvest they have had among us, during our Differences, and upon occasion of them; and how near their Religion was to have entered in upon us at once, at those wide breaches which we had made for it? And will we still take counsel of our Enemies, and chuse to follow that course to which, of all other, they who hate us and seek our ruin would most certainly advise and direct us? Will we freely offer them that advantage which they would be contented to purchase at any rate?

Let us, after all our sad experience, at last take Warning to keep a steadfast eye upon our chief Enemy, and not suffer our selves to be diverted from the consideration and regard of our greatest danger by the petty provocations of our Friends; so I chuse to call those who dissent from us in lesser matters because I would fain have them so, and they ought in all reason to be so: But however they behave themselves, we ought not much to mind those who only sling dirt at us, whilst we are sure there are others who fly at our throats, and strike at our very hearts.

Let us learn this wisdom of our Enemies, who though they have many great differences among themselves, yet they have made a shift, at this time, to unite together to destroy us: And shall not we do as much to save our selves?

It was a Principle among the ancient Romans, a brave and wise People, donare inimicitias Reip. to give up and sacrifice their private enmities and quarrels to the publick good and the safety of the Commonwealth. And is it not to every considerate man as clear as the Sun at Noon day, that nothing can maintain and support the Protestant Religion amongst us, and found our Church upon a Rock, so that when the rain falls, and the winds blow, and the floods beat upon it, it shall stand firm and unshaken: That nothing can be a Bulwark of sufficient force to resist all the arts and attempts of Papery, pery, but an establish'd National Religion, firmly united and compacted in all the parts of it? Is it not plain to every eye, that little Sects and separate Congregations can never do it? but will be like a Foundation of sand to a weighty Building, which whatever shew it may make cannot stand long, because it wants Union at the Foundation, and for that reason must necessarily want strength and firmness.

It is not for private persons to undertake in matters of publick concernment; but I think we have no cause to doubt but the Governours of our Church (notwithstanding all the advantages of Authority, and we think of reason too on our side) are Persons of that Piety and Prudence, that for Peace sake, and in order to a firm Union among Protestants, they would be content, if that would do it, not to insist upon little things; but to yeild them up, whether to the infirmity, or importunity, or perhaps in some very few things, to the plausible exceptions of those who differ from us.

But then surely, on the other side, men ought to bring along with them a peaceable disposition, and a mind ready to comply with the Church in which they were born and baptized, in all reasonable and lawful things, and desirous upon any terms that are tolerable to return to the Communion of it: a mind free from passion and prejudice, from pcevish exceptions, and groundless and endless scruples; not apt to insist upon little cavils and objections, to which the very best things, and the greatest and the clearest Truths in the World are and always will be liable: And whatever they have been heretofore, to be henceforth no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of Doctrine, by the slight of men and cunning craftiness of those who lie in wait to deceive.

And if we were thus affected on all hands, we might yet be a happy Church and Nation; if we would govern our selves by these Rules, and walk according to them, peace would be upon us, and mercy, and on the Israel of God.

III. Thirdly, I shall conclude all with a few words in relation to the occasion of this present meeting. I have all this while been recommending to you, from the Authority and Example of our Blessed Saviour, and from the nature and reason of the thing it self, this most excellent Grace and Virtue of Charity, in the most proper Acts and Instances of it: But besides particular Acts of Charity to be exercised upon emergent occasions, there are likewise charitable Customs which are highly commendable, because they are more certain and constant, of a larger extent, and of a longer continuance; As the Meeting of the Sons of the Clergy, which is now form'd and establish'd into a charitable Corporation: And the Anniversary Meetings of those of the several Counties of England, who reside, or happen to be in London; for two of the best and noblest ends that can be, the maintaining of Friendship, and the promoting of Charity. These, and others of the like kind, I call charitable Customs, which of late years have very much obtained in this great and famous City. And it cannot but be a great pleasure and satisfaction to all good men, to see so generous, so humane, so Christian a disposition to prevail and reign so much amongst us.

The strange overflowing of Vice and Wickedness in our Land, and the prodigious increase and impudence of infidelity and impiety, hath of late years boaded very ill to us, and brought terrible Judgments upon this City and Nation, and seems still to threaten us with more and greater: And the greatest comfort I have had under these sad apprehensions of God's displeasure hath been this, that though bad men were perhaps never worse in in any Age, yet the good, who I hope are not a few, were never more truly and substantially good: I do verily believe there never were, in any time, greater and more real effects of Charity; not from a blind superstition, and an ignorant zeal, and a mercenary and arrogant and presumptuous principle of Merit, but from a sound knowledge, and a sincere love and obedience to God, or, as the Apostle expresseth it, out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned.

And who, that loves God and Religion, can chuse but take great contentment to see so general and forward an inclination in People this way? Which hath been very much cherished of late years by this sort of Meetings: and that to very good purpose and effect, in many charitable contributions disposed in the best and wisest ways: and which likewise hath tended very much to the reconciling of the minds of men, and the allaying of those fierce heats and animosities which have been caused by our Civil confusions and Religious distractions. For there is nothing many times wanting to take away prejudice, and to extinguish hatred and ill-will, but an opportunity for men to see and understand one another; by which they will quickly perceive, that they are not such Monsters as they have been represented one to another at a distance.

We are, I think, one of the last Counties of England that have entred into this friendly and charitable kind of Society; Let us make amends for our late setting out by quickning our pace, that so we may overtake and outstrip those who are gone before us: Let not our Charity partake of the coldness of our Climate, but let us endeavour that it may be equal to the extent of our Country; and as we are incomparably the greatest County of England, let it appear that we are so by the largeness and extent of our Charity.

O Lord, who hast taught us that all our doings without Charity are nothing, send thy Holy Ghost, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of Charity, the very bond of Peace, and of all Vertues: Without which who-soever liveth, is counted dead before thee. Grant this for thy only Son Jesus Christ's sake.

Now the God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

I JOHN IV. 1.

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false Prophets are gone out into the World.

THIS caution and counsel was given upon occasion of the false Prophets and Teachers that were risen up in the beginning of the Christian Church, who endeavoured to seduce men from the true Doctrine of the Gospel delivered by the Apostles of our Lord and Saviour. And these teaching contrary things, could not both be from God; and therefore St. John calls upon Christians to examine the Doctrines and Pretences of those new Teachers, whether they were from God or not. Believe not every Spirit; that is, not every one that takes upon him to be inspired and to be a Teacher come from God: But try the Spirits; that is, examine those that make this pretence, whether it be real or not; and examine the Doctrines which they bring, because there are many Impostors abroad in the World.

This is the plain sense of the Words: In which there are contained these four Propositions.

First, That men may, and often do, falsely pretend to Inspiration. And this is the reason upon which the Apostle grounds this Exhortation: Because many false Prophets are gone out into the world, therefore we should try who are true, and who are false.

Secondly, We are not to believe every one that pretends to be inspired, and to teach a Divine Doctrine: This follows upon the former; because men may falsely pretend to Inspiration, therefore we are not to believe every one that makes this pretence. For any man that hath but confidence enough, and conscience little enough, may pretend to come from God. And if we admit all pretences of this kind, we lie at the mercy of every crafty and confident man to be led by him into what delusions he pleaseth.

Thirdly, Neither are we to reject all that pretend to come from God. This is sufficiently implied in the Text; for when the Apostle says believe not every Spirit, he supposeth we are to believe some; and when he saith try the Spirits whether they be of God, he supposeth some to be of God, and that those which are so are to be believed. These three Observations are so plain that I need only to name them to make way for the Fourth, Which I principally designed to insist upon from these Words. And that is this, That there is some way to discern mere pretenders to Inspiration, from those who are truly and divinely inspired: And this is necessarily implied in the Apostle's bidding us to try the Spirits whether they are of God. For it were were in vain to make any trial, if there be no way to discern between pretended and real Inspiration.

Now the handling of this will give occasion to two very material Enquiries and useful to be resolved.

I. How we may discern between true and counterfeit Doctrines : those which really are from God, and those which only pretend to be so?

II. To whom this judgment of discerning doth appertain?

I. How we may discern between true and counterfeit Doctrines and Revelations? for the clearing of this I shall lay down these following Propositions.

I. That Reason is the faculty whereby Revelations are to be discerned ; or to use the phrase in the Text, it is that whereby we are to judge what Spirits are of God, and what not. For all Revelation from God supposeth us to be men, and to be endued with Reason ; and therefore it does not create new Faculties in us, but propounds new Objects to that Faculty which was in us before. Whatever Doctrines God reveals to men are propounded to their Understandings, and by this Faculty we are to examine all Doctrines which pretend to be from God, and upon examination to judge whether there be reason to receive them as Divine, or to reject them as Impostures.

2. All supernatural Revelation supposeth the truth of the Principles of Natural Religion. We must first be assured that there is a God, before we can know that he hath made any Revelation of himself : and we must know that his Words are true, otherwise there were no sufficient reason to believe the Revelations which he makes to us : and we must believe his Authority over us, and that he will reward our obedience to his Laws, and punish our breach of them ; otherwise there would neither be sufficient obligation nor encouragement to Obedience. These and many other things are supposed to be true, and naturally known to us, antecedently to all supernatural Revelation ; otherwise the Revelations of God would signify nothing to us, nor be of any force with us.

3. All Reasonings about Divine Revelations must necessarily be governed by the Principles of Natural Religion : that is, by those apprehensions which men naturally have of the Divine perfections, and by the clear Notions of good and evil which are imprinted upon our Natures. Because we have no other way to judge what is worthy of God, and credible to be revealed by him, and what not, but by the natural Notions which we have of God and of his essential Perfections : which, because we know him to be immutable, we have reason to believe he will never contradict. And by these Principles likewise, we are to interpret what God hath revealed ; and when any doubt ariseth concerning the meaning of any divine Revelation (as that of the Holy Scriptures) we are to govern our selves in the interpretation of it by what is most agreeable to those natural Notions which we have of God, and we have all the reason in the World to reject that sense which is contrary thereto. For instance, when God is represented in Scripture as having a humane shape, eyes, ears and hands, the Notions which men naturally have of the Divine Nature and Perfections do sufficiently direct us to interpret these expressions in a sense worthy of God, and agreeable to his Perfection : And therefore it is reasonable to understand them as rather spoken to our capacity, and in a Figure, than to be literally intended. And this will proportionably hold in many other cases.

4. Nothing

4. Nothing ought to be received as a Revelation from God which plainly contradicts the Principles of Natural Religion, or overthrows the certainty of them. For instance, it were in vain to pretend a Revelation from God, That there is no God, because this is a contradiction in terms.

So likewise to pretend a command from God, That we are to hate and despise him; because it is not credible that God should require any thing of Reasonable Creatures so unsuitable to their Natures, and to their Obligations to him; Besides that such a Law as this does tacitly involve a contradiction; because upon such a supposition, to despise God would be to obey him; and yet to obey him is certainly to honour him. So that in this case to honour God, and to despise him, would be the same thing, and equal contempts of him. In like manner it would be vain to pretend any Revelation from God, That there is no life after this, nor rewards and punishments in another World: because this is contrary to those natural apprehensions which have generally possessed mankind, and would take away the main force and sanction of the Divine Laws. The like may be said concerning any pretended Revelation from God, which evidently contradicts those natural Notions which men have of good and evil; as, That God should command, or allow Sedition and Rebellion, Perfidiousness and Perjury; because the practice of these would be apparently destructive of the peace and happiness of Mankind, and would naturally bring confusion into the World: But God is not the God of Confusion, but of Order, which St. Paul appeals to as a Principle naturally known. Upon the same account nothing ought to be entertained as a Divine Revelation which overthrows the certainty of the Principles of natural Religion; because that would take away the certainty of Divine Revelation it self, which supposeth the truth of those principles. For instance, whoever pretends any Revelation that brings the Providence of God into question, does by that very thing make such a Revelation questionable. For if God take no care of the World, have no concernment for humane affairs, why should we believe that he makes any Revelation of his Will to men? And by this Principle Moses will have false Prophets to be tried: Deut. 13. 1. If there arise among you a Prophet, and giveth thee a sign or wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet: And he gives the reason of this, ver. 5. Because he hath spoken unto you to turn you away from the Lord your God, which brought you out of the Land of Egypt. Here is a case wherein a false Prophet is supposed to work a true Miracle to give credit to his doctrine (which in other cases the Scripture makes the sign of a true Prophet) but yet in this case he is to be rejected as an Impostor: Because the Doctrine he teacheth would draw men off from the worship of the true God who is naturally known, and had manifested himself to the People of Israel in so miraculous a manner, by bringing them out of the Land of Egypt. So that a Miracle is not enough to give credit to a Prophet who teacheth any thing contrary to that natural Notion which men have, That there is but one God, who only ought to be worshipped.

5. Nothing ought to be received as a Divine Doctrine and Revelation, without good evidence that it is so: that is, without some Argument sufficient to satisfy a prudent and considerate man. Now (supposing there be nothing in the matter of the Revelation that is evidently contrary to the Principles of Natural Religion, nor to any former Revelation which hath already received a greater and more solemn attestation from God) Miracles are owned by all Mankind to be a sufficient Testimony to any Person, or Doctrine, that are from God. This was the Testimony which God gave to Moses to satisfy the people of Israel that he had sent him ; Exod. 4. 1, 2. Moses said, They will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice : for they will say, The Lord hath not appeared unto thee. Upon this God endues him with a power of Miracles, to be an evidence to them, That they may believe that the God of their Fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, hath appeared unto thee. And all along in the Old Testament, when God sent his Prophets to make a new Revelation, or upon any strange and extraordinary message, he always gave credit to them by some Sign or Wonder which they foretold or wrought. And when he sent his Son into the World, he gave Testimony to him by innumerable great and unquestionable Miracles, more and greater than Moses and all the Prophets had wrought. And there was great reason for this : because our Saviour came not only to publish a new Religion to the World, but to put an end to that Religion which God had instituted before. And now that the Gospel hath had the confirmation of such Miracles as never were wrought upon any other occasion, no Evidence inferiour to this can in reason controul this Revelation, or give credit to any thing contrary to it. And therefore though the false Prophets and Antichrists, foretold by our Saviour, did really work Miracles, yet they were so inconsiderable in comparison of our Saviour's, that they deserve no credit in opposition to that Revelation which had so clear a Testimony given to it from Heaven by Miracles, besides all other concurring Arguments to confirm it.

6. And lastly, No Argument is sufficient to prove a Doctrine or Revelation to be from God, which is not clearer and stronger than the Difficulties and Objections against it : Because all Assent is grounded upon Evidence, and the strongest clearest evidence always carries it : But where the evidence is equal on both sides, that can produce nothing but a suspense and doubt in the mind whether the thing be true or not. If Moses had not confuted Pharaoh's Magicians by working Miracles which they could not work, they might reasonably have disputed it with him who had been the true Prophet : But when he did works plainly above the power of their Magick and the Devil to do, then they submitted and acknowledged that there was the Finger of God. So likewise, though a person work a Miracle (which ordinarily is a good evidence that he is sent by God) yet if the Doctrine he brings be plainly contrary to those natural Notions which we have of God, this is a better objection against the truth of this Doctrine than the other is a proof of it ; as is plain in the case which Moses puts, Deut. 13. which I mentioned before.

Upon the same account no man can reasonably believe the Doctrine of Transubstantiation to be revealed by God ; because every man hath as great evidence that Transubstantiation is false, as any man can pretend to have that God hath revealed any such thing. Suppose Transubstantiation to be part of the Christian Doctrine, it must have the same confirmation with the whole, and that is Miracles : But of all Doctrines in the world it is peculiarly incapable of being proved by a Miracle. For if a Miracle were wrought for the proof of it, the very same assurance which a man hath of the truth of the Miracle, he hath of the falshood of the Doctrine, that is, the clear evidence of his senses for both. For that there is a Miracle wrought to prove, that what he sees in the Sacrament is not bread but the body of Christ, he hath only the evidence of his senses ; and he hath the very same evidence to prove, that what he sees in the Sacrament is not the body of Christ, but bread. So that here ariseth a new controversy, whether a man should believe his senses giving testimony against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, or bearing testimony to the Miracle which is wrought to confirm that Doctrine :

For

For there is just the same evidence against the truth of the Doctrine, which there is for the truth of the Miracle. So that the Argument for Transubstantiation, and the Objection against it, do just ballance one another; and where the weights in both Scales are equal, it is impossible that the one should weigh down the other: and consequently Transubstantiation is not to be proved by a Miracle; for that would be, to prove to a man by something that he sees, that he does not see what he sees.

And thus I have endeavoured, as briefly and clearly as I could, to give satisfaction to the first Enquiry I propounded, viz. How we may discern between true and counterfeit Revelations and Doctrines: I proceed now to the

II. To whom this judgment of discerning does appertain. Whether to Christians in general, or to some particular Person or Persons, authorized by God to judge for the rest of mankind, by whose judgment all men are concluded and bound up. And this is an enquiry of no small Importance; because it is one of the most fundamental Points in difference between Us and the Church of Rome. And however in many particular Controversies, as concerning Transubstantiation, the Communion in one kind, the service of God in an unknown Tongue, the business of Indulgences, the Invocation of Saints, the Worship of Images, they are not able to offer any thing that is fit to move a reasonable and considerate man; yet in this Controversie, concerning the Judge of Controversies, they are not destitute of some specious appearance of Reason which deserves to be weighed and considered. Therefore that we may examine this matter to the bottom, I shall do these three things.

1. Lay down some Cautions and Limitations whereby we may understand how far the generality of Christians are allowed to judge in matters of Religion.

2. I shall represent the grounds of this Principle.

3. Endeavour to satisfy the main Objections of our Adversaries against it: And likewise to shew, that there is no such reason and necessity for an universal infallible Judge as they pretend.

I. I shall lay down some Cautions and Limitations, by which we may understand how far the generality of Christians are allowed to judge in matters of Religion.

First, Private Persons are only to judge for themselves, and not to impose their Judgment upon others, as if they had any Authority over them. And this is reasonable, because if it were otherwise, a Man would deprive others of that Liberty which he assumes to himself, and which he can claim upon no other account, but because it belongs to others equally with himself.

Secondly, This liberty of judging is not so to be understood as to take away the necessity and use of Guides and Teachers in Religion. Nor can this be denied to be a reasonable limitation; because the knowledge of Revealed Religion is not a thing born with us, nor ordinarily supernaturally infused into men; but is to be learned as other things are. And if it be to be learned, there must be some to teach and instruct others: And they that will learn must be modest and humble; and in those things, of which they are no competent Judges, they must give credit to their Teachers, and trust their skill: For instance, every unlearned man is to take it upon the credit of those who are skilful, that the Scriptures are truly and faithfully translated; flated; and for the understanding of obscure Texts of Scripture, and more difficult Points in Religion, he is to rely upon those, whose proper business and employment it is to apply themselves to the understanding of these things. For in these cases every man is not capable of judging himself, and therefore he must necessarily trust others: And in all other things, he ought to be modest; and unless it be in plain matters, which every man can judge of, he ought rather to distrust himself than his Teacher.

And this respect may be given to a Teacher without either supposing him to be infallible, or making an absolute resignation of my judgment to him. A man may be a very able Teacher (suppose of the Mathematicks) and fit to have the respect which is due to a Teacher, tho' he be not infallible in those Sciences: and because Infallibility is not necessary to such a Teacher, it is neither necessary nor convenient that I should absolutely resign up my Judgment to him. For though I have reason to credit him, within the compass of his Art, in things which I do not know, I am not therefore bound to believe him in things plainly contrary to what I and all mankind do certainly know. For example, if upon pretence of his skill in Arithmetick, which I am learning of him, he should tell me, That twice two do not make four, but five; though I believed him to be the best Mathematician in the World, yet I cannot believe him in this thing: Nor is there reason I should; because I did not come to learn this of him, but knew as much or that before as he or any man else could tell me. The case is the same in matters of Religion; in which there are some things so plain, and lie so level to all capacities, that every man is almost equally judge of them: As I shall have occasion farther to shew by and by.

Thirdly, Neither does this liberty of judging exempt men from a due submission and obedience to their Teachers and Governours. Every man is bound to obey the lawful Commands of his Governours; and what by publick Consent and Authority is determined and established, ought not to be gainsaid by private Persons, but upon very clear evidence of the falshood or unlawfulness of it. And this is every man's duty, for the maintaining of Order, and out of regard to the Peace and Unity of the Church; which is not to be violated upon every scruple and frivolous pretence: And when men are perverse and disobedient, Authority is Judge, and may restrain and punish them.

Fourthly, Nor do I so far extend this Liberty of judging in Religion, as to think every man fit to dispute the Controversies of Religion. A great part of people are ignorant, and of so mean capacity as not to be able to judge of the force of a very good Argument, much less of the issue of a long Dispute; and such Persons ought not to engage in disputes of Religion; but to beg God's direction, and to rely upon their Teachers; and above all to live up to the plain dictates of natural Light, and the clear Commands of God's Word, and this will be their best security. And if the Providence of God hath placed them under such Guides as do seduce them into Error, their Ignorance is invincible, and God will not condemn them for it, so long as they sincerely endeavour to do the will of God so far as they know it. And this being the case of many, especially in the Church of Rome where Ignorance is so indoltriously cherished, I have so much charity as to hope well concerning many of them: And seeing that Church teacheth and enjoins the people to worship Images, it is in some sense charitably done of them not to let them know the Second Commandment, that they may not be guilty of sinning against so plain a Law. Having premised these Cautions, I proceed in the

II. Place, To represent to you the grounds of this Principle of our Religion, viz. That we allow private persons to judge for themselves in matters of Religion.

First, Because many things in Religion, especially those which are most necessary to be believed and practised, are so plain, that every man of ordinary capacity, after competent instruction in matters of Religion (which is always to be supposed) can as well judge of them for himself, as any man, or company of men in the world can judge for him. Because in these he hath a plain Rule to go by, Natural Light and clear Revelation of Scripture. And this is no new Principle of the Protestants, but most expressly owned by the Ancient Fathers: Whatever things are necessary, are plain, saith St. Chrysostom. All things are plainly contained in Scripture which concern faith and a good life, saith St. Austin. And nothing can be more reasonable, than that those things which are plain to every man should be left to every man's judgment. For every man can judge of what is plain; of evident Truth and Falshood, Virtue and Vice, of Doctrines and Laws plainly delivered in Scripture, if we believe any thing to be so, which is next to madness to deny. I will refer it to no man's Judgment upon earth to determine for me, Whether there be a God or not? Whether Murder and Perjury be Sins? Whether it be not plain in Scripture, That Jesus Christ is the Son of God, That he became man, and died for us, and rose again? So that there is no need of a Judge in these cases. Nor can I possibly believe any man to be so absolutely infallible, as not to call his Infallibility into question, if he determines any thing contrary to what is plain and evident to all mankind. For if he should determine that there is no God, or that he is not to be worshipped, or that he will not punish and reward men, or, which is the case that Bellarmine puts, that Virtue is Vice, and Vice Virtue; he would hereby take away the very foundation of Religion; and how can I look upon him any longer as a Judge in matters of Religion, when there can be no such thing as Religion if he have judged and determined right?

Secondly, The Scripture plainly allows this liberty to particular and private Persons to judge for themselves. And for this I need go no farther than my Text, which bids men try the Spirits whether they be of God. I do not think this is spoken only to the Pope or a General Council, but to Christians in general: for to these the Apostle writes. Now if St. John had believed that God had constituted an infallible Judge in his Church, to whose Sentence and Determination all Christians are bound to submit, he ought in all reason to have referred Christians to him for the trial of Spirits, and not have left it to every man's private judgment to examine and to determine these things. But it seems St. Paul was likewise of the same mind; and tho' he was guided by an infallible Spirit, yet he did not expect that men should blindly submit to his Doctrine: Nay, so far is he from that, that he commends the Bereans for that very thing for which I dare say the Church of Rome would have check'd them most severely, namely, for searching the Scriptures to see whether those things which the Apostles deliver'd were so or not: This liberty St. Paul allowed; and tho' he was inspired by God, yet he treated those whom he taught like men. And indeed, it were a hard case that a necessity of believing Divine Revelations, and rejecting Impostures, should be imposed upon Christians; and yet the liberty of judging, whether a Doctrine be from God or not, should be taken away from them.

Thirdly, Our Adversaries themselves are forced to grant that which in effect is as much as we contend for. For tho' they deny a liberty of judging in particular Points of Religion, yet they are forced to grant men a liberty of of judging upon the whole. When they of the Church of Rome would perswade a Jew, or a Heathen, to become a Christian; or a Heretick; (as they are pleased to call us) to come over to the Communion of their Church, and offer Arguments to induce them thereto; they do by this very thing, whether they will or no, make that man Judge which is the true Church, and the true Religion. Because it would be ridiculous to perswade a man to turn to their Religion, and to urge him with Reason: to do so, and yet to deny him the use of his own judgment whether their Reasons be sufficient to move them to make such a change. Now, as the Apostle reasons in another case, if men be fit to judge for themselves in so great and important a matter as the choice of their Religion, why should they be thought unworthy to judge in lesser matters? They tell us indeed that a man may use his judgment in the choice of his Religion; but when he hath once chosen, he is then for ever to resign up his judgment to their Church: But what tolerable reason can any man give, why a man should be fit to judge upon the whole, and yet unfit to judge upon particular Points? especially if it be considered, that no man can make a discreet judgment of any Religion, before he hath examined the particular Doctrines of it, and made a judgment concerning them. Is it credible, that God should give a man judgment in the most fundamental and important matter of all, viz. To discern the true Religion, and the true Church, from the false; for no other end, but to enable him to chuse once for all to whom he should resign and enslave his judgment for ever? which is just as reasonable as if one should say, That God hath given a man eyes for no other end, but to look out once for all, and to pitch upon a discreet person to lead him about blind-fold all the days of his life. I come now to the

III. Thing I propounded, which is, To Answer the main objection of our Adversaries against this Principle; and likewise to shew that there is no such Reason and necessity for an universal infallible Judge, as they pretend. Now their great Objection is this, if every man may judge for himself, there will be nothing but confusion in Religion, there will be no end of Controversies: so that an universal infallible Judge is necessary, and without this God had not made sufficient provision for the assurance of mens faith, and for the Peace and Unity of his Church: Or, as it is expressed in the Canon Law, aliter Dominus non videretur fuisse discretus, otherwise our Lord had not seem'd to be discreet. How plausible soever this Objection may appear, I do not despair but if men will lay aside prejudice, and impartially consider things, to make it abundantly evident, that this ground is not sufficient to found an Infallible Judge upon. And therefore in answer to it, I desire these following particulars may be considered.

First, That this which they say, rather proves what God should have done according to their fancy, than what he hath really and actually done. My Text expressly bids Christians to try the Spirits, which to any man's sense does imply that they may judge of these matters: But the Church of Rome says they may not; because if this liberty were permitted, God had not ordered things wisely, and for the best, for the peace and unity of his Church. But, as the Apostle says in another case, What art thou, O man, that objectest against God?

Secondly, If this Reasoning be good, we may as well conclude that there is an universal infallible Judge set over the whole World in all Temporal matters, to whose Authority all mankind is bound to submit. Because this is as necessary to the peace of the World, as the other is to the peace of the Church.

Church. And men surely are every whit as apt to be obstinate and perverse about matters of Temporal Right, as about matters of Faith. But it is evident in fact and experience that there is no such universal Judge, appointed by God over the whole world, to decide all Cases of temporal Right; and for want of him the world is fain to shift as well as it can. But now a very acute and scholastical man that would argue that God must needs have done whatever he fancies convenient for the World should be done, might by the very same way of Reasoning conclude the necessity of an universal infallible Judge in Civil matters as well as in matters of Religion: And their aliter Dominus non videretur fuisse discretus, otherwise God had not seem'd to be discreet, is every whit as cogent and as civil, in the one Case as the other.

Thirdly, There is no need of such a Judge, to assure men in matters of Religion; because men be sufficiently certain without him. I hope it may be certain and clear enough That there is a God; and That his Providence governs the World: and That there is another life after this, though neither Pope nor Council had ever declared any thing about these matters. And for Revealed Doctrines, we may be certain enough of all that is necessary, if it be true which the Fathers tell us, That all things necessary are plainly revealed in the Holy Scriptures.

Fourthly, An infallible Judge, if there were one, is no certain way to end Controversies, and to preserve the unity of the Church; unless it were likewise infallibly certain, That there is such a Judge, and Who he is. For till men were sure of both these, there would still be a Controversy whether there be an infallible Judge, and who he is. And if it be true which they tell us, That without an infallible Judge Controversies cannot be ended, then a Controversy concerning an infallible Judge can never be ended. And there are two Controversies actually on foot about an infallible Judge; One, Whether there be an infallible Judge or not? which is a Controversy between Us and the Church of Rome: and the other, Who this infallible Judge is? which is a Controversy among themselves, which could never yet be decided: And yet till it be decided, Infallibility, if they had it, would be of no use to them for the ending of Controversies.

Fifthly, There is no such absolute need, as is pretended, of determining all Controversies in Religion. If men would divest themselves of prejudice and interest, as they ought in matters of Religion, the necessary things of Religion are plain enough, and men would generally agree well enough, about them: But if men will suffer themselves to be byassed by these, they would not hearken to an infallible Judge, if there were one; or they would find out some way or other to call his Infallibility into question. And as for doubtful and lesser matters in Religion, charity and mutual forbearance among Christians would make the Church as peaceable and happy as perhaps it was ever design'd to be in this World, without absolute unity in Opinion.

Sixthly and Lastly, Whatever may be the inconveniences of mens judging for themselves in Religion, yet taking this Principle with the Cautions I have given, I doubt not to make it appear, that the inconveniences are far the least on that side. The present condition of humane Nature doth not admit of any constitution of things, whether in Religion or Civil matters, which is free from all kind of exception and inconvenience: That is the best state of things which is liable to the least and fewest. If men be modest, and humble, and willing to learn, God has done that which is sufficient for the assurance of our Faith, and for the peace of his Church, without an infallible Judge: and if men will not be so, I cannot tell what would would be sufficient. I am sure there were Heresies and Schisms in the Apostles Times, when Those who governed the Church were certainly guided by an infallible Spirit. God hath appointed Guides and Teachers for us in matters of Religion, and if we will be contented to be instructed by them in those necessary Articles and Duties of Religion, which are plainly contained in Scripture; and to be counselled and directed by them in things that are more doubtful and difficult, I do not see why we might not do well enough without any infallible Judge or Guide.

But still it will be said, Who shall judge what things are plain and what doubtful? The answer to this, in my opinion, is not difficult. For if there be any thing plain in Religion, every man that hath been duly instructed in the Principles of Religion can judge of it, or else it is not plain. But there are some things in Religion so very plain, that no Guide or Judge can in reason claim that authority over men, as to oblige them to believe or do the contrary; no, tho he pretend to Infallibility; no, tho he were an Apostle, tho he were an Angel from Heaven. St. Paul puts the case so high, Gal. 1. 8. Though we, or an Angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you, than what you have received, let him be accursed: which plainly supposeth that Christians may and can judge when Doctrines are contrary to the Gospel. What? not believe an Apostle, nor an Angel from heaven, if he should teach any thing evidently contrary to the plain Doctrine of the Gospel? If he should determine Virtue to be Vice, and Vice to be Virtue? No; not an Apostle, nor an Angel; because such a Doctrine as this would confound and overturn all things in Religion. And yet Bellarmin puts this very Case, and says, if the Pope should so determine, we were bound to believe him, unless we would sin against Conscience.

I will conclude this Discourse by putting a very plain and familiar Case; by which it will appear what credit and authority is fit to be given to a Guide and what not. Suppose I came a Stranger into England, and landing at Dover took a Guide there to conduct me in my way to Tork, which I knew before by the Map to lie North of Dover: having committed my self to him, if he lead me for two or three days together out of any plain Road, and many times over hedge and ditch, I cannot but think it strange, that in a civil and well-inhabited Country there should be no Highways from one part of it to another: Yet thus far I submit to him, tho not without some regret and impatience. But then if after this, for two or three days more he lead me directly South, and with my face full upon the Sun at noon-day, and at last bring me back again to Dover Pere; and still bids me follow him: Then certainly no Modesty does oblige a man not to dispute with his Guide, and to tell him surely that can be no way because it is Sea. Now tho he set never so bold a face upon the matter, and tell me with all the gravity and authority in the world, That it is not the Sea but dry Land under the species and appearance of Water; and that whatever my eyes tell me, having once committed my self to his guidance, I must not trust my own senses in the case; it being one of the most dangerous sorts of Infidelity for a man to believe his own eyes rather than his faithful and infallible Guide: All this moves me not; But I begin to expostulate roundly with him, and to let him understand that if I must not believe what I see, he is like to be of no farther use to me; because I shall not be able, at this rate, to know whether I have a Guide, and whether I follow him or not. In short, I tell him plainly, that when I took him for my Guide, I did not take him to tell me the difference between North and South, between a Hedge and a Highway, between Sea and dry Land; all this I knew before, as well as he or any man else

He could tell me; but I took him to conduct and direct me the nearest way to Truth. And therefore after all his impertinent talk, after all his Motives of Credibility to persuade me to believe him, and all his confident Sayings, which he gravely calls Demonstrations, I stand stilly upon the shore, and leave my learned and reverend Guide to take his own course, and to dispose of himself as he pleaseth; but firmly resolved not to follow him. And is any man to be blamed that breaks with his Guide upon these Terms?

And this is truly the Case, when a man commits himself to the Guidance of any Person or Church: if by vertue of this Authority they will needs persuade me out of my senses, and not to believe what I see, but what they say; that Virtue is Vice, and Vice Virtue, if they declare them to be so: And that because they say they are infallible, I am to receive all their Dictates for Oracles, tho' never so evidently false and absurd in the Judgment of all Mankind: In this case there is no way to be rid of these unreasonable People, but to desire of them, since one kindness deserves another, and all Contradictions are alike easie to be believed, that they would be pleased to believe that Infidelity is Faith, and that when I absolutely renounce their Authority, I do yield a most perfect submission and obedience to it.

Upon the whole matter, all the Revelations of God, as well as the Laws of men, go upon this presumption, that men are not stark Fools; but that they will consider their Interest and have some regard to the great concernment of their eternal Salvation. And this is as much to secure men from mistake in matters of Belief, as God hath afforded to keep men from sin in matters of Practice. He hath made no effectual and infallible provision that men shall not sin; and yet it would puzzle any man to give a good Reason, why God should take more care to secure men against Errors in belief, than against sin and wickedness in their Lives.

I shall now only draw three or four Inferences from this Discourse which I have made, and so conclude.

1. That it is every man's Duty, who hath ability and capacity for it, to endeavour to understand the grounds of his Religion. For to try Doctrines, is to enquire into the grounds and reasons of them; which the better any man understands, the more firmly he will be established in the Truth, and be the more resolute in the day of Trial, and the better able to withstand the arts and assaults of cunning Adversaries, and the fierce storms of Persecution. And on the contrary, that man will soon be moved from his steadfastness who never examined the Grounds and Reasons of his belief. When it comes to the Trial, he that hath but little to say for his Religion will probably neither do nor suffer much for it.

2. That all Doctrines are vehemently to be suspected which decline Trial, and are so loth to be brought into the light; which will not endure a fair Examination, but magisterially require an implicit Faith: Whereas Truth is bold and full of courage, and loves to appear openly; and is so secure and confident of her own strength as to offer her self to the severest Trial and Examination. But to deny all liberty of Enquiry and Judgment in matters of Religion, is the greatest injury and disparagement to Truth that can be, and a tacit acknowledgment that she lies under some disadvantage, and that there is less to be said for her than for Error.

I have often wonder'd why the People in the Church of Rome do not suspect their Teachers and Guides to have some ill design upon them, when they do so industriously debar them of the means of Knowledge, and are so very loth to let them understand what it is that we have to say against their Religion. For can any thing in the world be more suspicious, than to perswade men, to put out their eyes, upon promise that they will help them to a much better and more faithful Guide? If any Church, any profession of men, be unwilling their Doctrines should be exposed to Trial, it is a certain sign they know something by them that is faulty, and which will not endure the light. This is the account which our Saviour gives us in a like case; It was because mens deeds were evil that they loved darknes rather than light. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light; neither cometh he to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd: But he that doeth the truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God.

3. Since Reason and Christianity allow this liberty to private persons to judge for themselves in matters of Religion, we should use this privilege with much modesty and humility, with great submission and deference to our Spiritual Rulers and Guides, whom God hath appointed in his Church. And there is very great need of this Caution, since by experience we find this liberty so much abused by many to the nourishing of Pride and Self-conceit, of Division and Faction; and those who are least able to judge, to be frequently the most forward and confident, the most peremptory and perverse: and instead of demeaning themselves with the submission of Learners, to assume to themselves the authority of Judges, even in the most doubtful and disputable matters.

The Tyranny of the Roman Church over the Minds and Consciences of men, is not to be justified upon any account; but nothing puts so plausible a colour upon it, as the ill use that is too frequently made of this natural Privilege of mens judging for themselves in a matter of so infinite concernment, as that of their eternal happiness. But then it is to be considered, that the proper remedy in this case, is not to deprive men of this privilege, but to use the best means to prevent the abuse of it. For though the inconveniences arising from the ill use of it may be very great, yet the mischiefs on the other hand is intolerable. Religion it self is liable to be abused to very bad purposes, and frequently is so; but it is not therefore best that there should be no Religion: And yet this Objection, if it be of any force and pursued home, is every whit as strong against Religion it self, as against mens liberty of judging in matters of Religion. Nay I add farther, that no man can judiciously embrace the true Religion, unless he be permitted to judge whether that which he embraces be the true Religion or not.

4. When upon due Trial and Examination we are well settled and establish'd in our Religion, let us hold fast the profession of our Faith without wavering; and not be like Children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of Doctrine, through the slight of men, and the cunning craftiness of those who lie in wait to deceive. And above all, let us resolve to live according to the excellent Rules and Precepts of our holy Religion; let us heartily obey that Doctrine which we profess to believe. We, who enjoy the Protestant Religion, have all the means and advantages of understanding the Will of God, free liberty and full scope of enquiring into it; and informing our selves concerning it: We have all the opportunities we can wish of coming to the knowledge of our Duty: The Oracles of God lie open to us, and his Law is continually before our eyes; his word is nigh unto us in our mouths and in our hearts; (that is, we may read it and meditate upon it) that we may do it: The key of Knowledge is put into our hands, so that if we do not enter into the kingdom of Heaven, it is we our selves that shut our selves out. And where there is nothing to hinder us from the knowledge of our Duty, there certainly nothing can excuse us from the practice of it. For the end of all knowledge is to direct men in their duty, and effectually to engage them to the performance of it: The great business of Religion is, to make men truly good, and to teach them to live well. And if Religion have not this effect, it matters not of what Church any man lists and enters himself; for most certainly, A bad man can be saved in none. Tho' a man know the right way to Heaven never so well, and be entred into it, yet if he will not walk therein, he shall never come thither: Nay, it will be an aggravation of this man's unhappiness, that he was lost in the way to Heaven, and perish'd in the very road to Salvation. But if we will in good earnest apply our selves to the practice of Religion, and the obedience of God's Holy Laws, his Grace will never be wanting to us to so good a purpose.

I have not time to recommend Religion to you at large, with all its advantages. I will comprise what I have to say in a few words, and mind ~~them at your peril~~ Let that which is our great concernment be our great care, To know the truth and to do it, To fear God and keep his Commandments. Considering the Reasonableness and the Reward of Piety and Virtue, nothing can be wiser; considering the mighty assistance of God's Grace, which he is ready to afford us, and the unspeakable satisfaction and delight which is to be had in the doing of our duty, nothing can be easier: Nothing will give us that pleasure, while we live; nothing can minister that true and solid comfort to us, when we come to die: There is probably no such way for a man to be happy in this World; to be sure, there is no way but this to escape the intolerable and endless miseries of another World.

Now God grant that we may all know and do in this our day, the things that belong to our peace, for his Mercies sake in Jesus Christ: To whom, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all Honour and Glory now and for ever. Amen.

TO THE Right Worshipful, and my Honoured Friend,
Joseph Reeve, Esq;
 High Sheriff of the County of SURREY.

S I R,

WHen I had perform'd the Service which you were pleased to call me to in the Preaching of this Sermon, I had no thoughts of making it more publick; And yet in this also I was the more easily induced to comply with your desire, because of the suitableness of the Argument to the Age in which we live; wherein as Men have run into the wildest extremities in other things, so particularly in the matter of Oaths; some making Conscience of taking any Oaths at all, and too many none at all of breaking them.

To convince the great mistake of the one extreme, and to check the growing evil and mischief of the other, is the chief design of this Discourse. To which I shall be very glad if by God's Blessing it may prove any-wise serviceable. I am,

S I R,

Your very faithful and humble Servant,

Jo. Tillotson.

S E R M O N XXII.

The Lawfulness and Obligation of Oaths.

H. E. B. VI. 16.

And an Oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

THE Necessity of Religion to the support of humane Society, in nothing appears more evidently than in this, That the obligation of an Oath, which is so necessary for the maintenance of peace and justice among men, depends wholly upon the sense and belief of a Deity. For no reason can be imagined why any man that doth not believe a God, should make the least conscience of an Oath, which is nothing else but a solemn appeal to God as a witness of the truth of what we say. So that whoever promotes Atheism and Infidelity, doth the most destructive thing imaginable to humane Society, because he takes away the reverence and obligation of Oaths: And whenever that is generally cast off, humane Society must disband, and all things run into disorder. The just sense whereof made David cry out to God with so much earnestness, as if the world had been cracking, and the frame of it ready to break in pieces, Psal. 12. Help, Lord, for the righteous man ceaseth, and the faithful fail from among the children of men: Intimating, That when Faith fails from among men, nothing but a particular and immediate interposition of the Divine Providence can preserve the world from falling into confusion. And our Blessed Saviour gives this as a sign of the end of the world, and the approaching dissolution of all things, when faith and truth shall hardly be found among men, Luke 18. 8. When the Son of man comes, shall he find Faith on the earth? This state of things doth loudly call for his coming to destroy the world, which is even ready to dissolve and fall in pieces of it self when these bands and pillars of humane Society do break and fail. And surely never in any age was this sign of the coming of the Son of Man more glaring and terrible than in this degenerate Age wherein we live, when almost all sorts of men seem to have broke loose from all obligations to faith and truth.

And therefore I do not know any Argument more proper and useful to be treated of upon this occasion than of the Nature and Obligation of an Oath, which is the utmost security that one man can give to another of the truth of what he says; the strongest tie of fidelity, the surest ground of judicial proceedings, and the most firm and sacred bond that can be laid upon all that are concerned in the administration of publick Justice; upon Judge, and Jury, and Witnesses.

And for this reason I have pitch'd upon these words: In which the Apostle declares to us the great use and necessity of Oaths among men; an Oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. He had said before, that for our greater assurance and comfort God hath confirmed his promises to us by

by an Oath; condescending herein to deal with us after the manner of men, who when they would give credit to a doubtful matter, confirm what they say by an Oath. And generally when any doubt or controversy ariseth between Parties concerning a matter of fact, one side affirming and the other denying, an end is put to this contest by an Oath; An Oath for confirmation being to them an end of all strife: An Oath for confirmation, εις βεβαιωσιν, for the greater assurance and establishment of a thing: Not that an Oath is always a certain and infallible decision of things according to truth and right, but that this is the utmost credit that we can give to any thing, and the last resort of truth and confidence among men: After this we can go no farther; for if the Religion of an Oath will not oblige men to speak truth, nothing will. This is the utmost security that men can give, and must therefore be the final decision of all contests; An Oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

Now from this assertion of the Apostle concerning the great use and end of Oaths among men, I shall take occasion,

1. To consider the nature of an Oath, and the kinds of it.
2. To shew the great use and even necessity of Oaths, in many cases.
3. To vindicate the lawfulness of them where they are necessary.
4. To shew the sacred obligation of an Oath.

I shall be as brief in these as the just handling of them will bear.

I. For the nature of an Oath, and the kinds of it. An Oath is an invocation of God, or an appeal to him as a witness of the truth of what we say. So that an Oath is a sacred thing, as being an act of Religion and an invocation of the Name of God: And this, whether the Name of God be expressly mentioned in it or not. If a man only say, I swear, or I take my Oath, that a thing is, or is not, so or so; or that I will, or will not, do such a thing: Or if a man answer upon his Oath, being abjured and required so to do: Or if a man swear by Heaven, or by Earth, or by any other thing that hath relation to God; in all these cases a man doth virtually call God to witness; and in so doing he doth by consequence invoke him as a Judge and an Avenger, in case what he swears be not true: And if this be express, the Oath is a formal Imprecation; but whether it be, or not, a curse upon our selves is always implied in case of Perjury.

There are two sorts of Oaths, Affertory and Promissory. An assertory Oath is when a man affirms or denies upon Oath a matter of fact, past, or present: when he swears that a thing was, or is so, or not so. A promissory Oath is a promise confirmed by an Oath, which always respects something that is future: And if the promise be made directly and immediately to God, then it is called a Vow; if to men, an Oath. I proceed to the

II. Thing, which is to shew the great use and even necessity of Oaths, in many cases: which is so great, that humane Society can very hardly, if at all, subsist long without them. Government would many times be very insecure, and for the faithful discharge of Offices of great trust, in which the welfare of the publick is nearly concerned, it is not possible to find any security equal to that of an Oath; because the obligation of that reacheth to the most secret and hidden practices of men, and takes hold of them in many cases where the penalty of no humane Law can have any awe or force upon them: and especially, it is (as the Civil Law expresseth it) maximum expediendarum litium remedium, the best means of ending controversies.

And

And where mens estates or lives are concerned, no evidence but what is assur'd by an Oath will be thought sufficient to decide the matter, so as to give full and general satisfaction to mankind. For in matters of so great concernment, when men have all the assurance that can be had, and not till then, they are contented to sit down and rest satisfied with it. And among all Nations an Oath hath always been thought the only peremptory and satisfactory way of deciding such controversies.

III. The third thing I propos'd was to vindicate the lawfulness of Oaths, where they are necessary. And it is a very strong inducement to believe the lawfulness of them, that the unavoidable condition of humane affairs hath made them so necessary. The Apostle takes it for granted that an Oath is not only of great use in humane affairs, but in many cases of great necessity, to confirm a doubtful thing, and to put an end to controversies which cannot otherwise be decided to the satisfaction of the Parties contending; An Oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. And indeed it is hardly imaginable that God should not have left that lawful, which is so evidently necessary to the peace and security of mankind.

But because there is a Sett, sprung up in our memory, which hath called in question the lawfulness of all Oaths, to the great mischief and disturbance of humane Society, I shall endeavour to search this matter to the bottom, and to manifest how unreasonable and groundless this Opinion is. And to this end, I shall

First, Prove the lawfulness of Oaths from the authority of this Text, and from the reasons plainly contained, or strongly implied in it.

Secondly, I shall shew the weakness and insufficiency of the grounds of the contrary Opinion; whether from Reason, or from Scripture, which last they principally rely upon; and if it could be made out from thence, would determine the case.

I. I shall prove the lawfulness of Oaths from the Authority of this Text, and the reasons plainly contained, or strongly implied in it. Because the Apostle doth not only speak of the use of Oaths among men without any manner of censure and reproof, but as a commendable custom and practice, and in many cases necessary for the confirmation of doubtful matters, and in order to the final decision of Controversies and Differences among men. For,

First, He speaks of it as the general practice of Mankind, to confirm things by an Oath in order to the ending of differences. And indeed there is nothing that hath more universally obtained in all Ages and Nations of the world; than which there is not a more certain indication that a thing is agreeable to the Law of Nature and the best Reason of Mankind. And that this was no degenerate practice of Mankind, like that of Idolatry, is from hence evident; that when God separated a People to himself, it was practised among them, by the holy Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and was afterwards not only allowed, but in many Cases commanded by the Law of Moses; which had it been a thing evil in it self and forbidden by the Law of Nature, would not have been done.

Secondly, Another undeniable Argument from the Text of the lawfulness of Oaths is, that God himself, in condescension to the custom of men who use to confirm and give credit to what they say by an Oath, is represented by the Apostle as confirming his promise to us by an Oath, Ver. 13. When God made the promise to Abraham, because he could swear by none greater, he swears by himself. For men verily swear by the greater; and an Oath for confirma- tion is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an Oath: which he certainly would not have done, had an Oath been unlawful in it self. For that had been to comply with men in an evil practice, and by his own example to give countenance to it in the highest manner: But though God condescend to represent himself to us after the manner of men, he never does it in any thing that is in its own nature evil and sinful.

Thirdly, From the great Usefulness of Oaths in humane affairs, to give credit and confirmation to our word, and to put an end to Contestations. Now that which serves to such excellent purposes, and is so convenient for humane society, and for mutual security and confidence among men, ought not easily to be presumed unlawful, till it be plainly proved to be so. And if we consider the nature of an Oath, and every thing belonging to it, there is nothing that hath the least appearance of evil in it. There is surely no evil in it, as it is an act of Religion; nor as it is an appeal to God as a witness and avenger in case we swear falsely; nor as it is a confirmation of a doubtful matter; nor as it puts an end to strife and controversy. And these are all the essential ingredients of an Oath, and the ends of it; and they are all so good, that they rather commend it, than give the least colour of ground to condemn it. I proceed in the Second place, to shew the weakness and insufficiency of the grounds of the contrary Opinion; whether from Reason or from Scripture.

First, From Reason. They say the necessity of an Oath is occasioned by the want of truth and fidelity among men. And that every man ought to demean himself with that faithfulness and integrity as may give credit and confirmation to his word; and then Oaths will be needless. This pretence will be fully answered if we consider these two things.

1. That in matters of great importance no other obligation, besides that of an Oath, hath been thought sufficient amongst the best and wisest of men to assert their fidelity to one another. Even the best men (to use the words of a great Author) have not trusted the best men without it. As we see in very remarkable instances, where Oaths have passed between those who might be thought to have the greatest confidence in one another: As between Abraham and his old faithful servant Eliezer, concerning the choice of a wife for his Son: Between Father and Son, Jacob and Joseph, concerning the burial of his Father in the Land of Canaan: Between two of the dearest and most intimate Friends, David and Jonathan, to assure their Friendship to one another; and it had its effect long after Jonathan's death, in the saving of Mephibosheth, when reason of State and the security of his Throne seem'd to move David strongly to the contrary; for it is expressly said 2 Sam. 21. 7. that David spared Mephibosheth, Jonathan's Son, because of the oath of the Lord that was between them; implying, that had it not been for his Oath, other considerations might probably have prevail'd with him to have permitted him to have been cut off with the rest of Saul's Children.

2. This Reason, which is alledged against Oaths among men, is much stronger against God's confirming his promises to us by an Oath. For he who is truth it self is surely of all other most to be credited upon his bare word, and his oath needless to give confirmation to it; and yet he condescends to add his oath to his word; and therefore that reason is evidently of no force.

Secondly, From Scripture. Our Saviour seems altogether to forbid swearing in any case, Matth. 5. 33, 34. Ye have heard that it hath been said to them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thyself: but I say unto you, swear not at all; neither

Neither by heaven, &c. But let your communication be yea, yea, and nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil. And this Law St. James recites, chap. 5. vers. 12. as that which Christians ought to have a very particular and principal regard to; above all things my brethren swear not: And he makes the breach of this Law a damning sin, lest ye fall into condemnation. But the Authority of our Saviour alone is sufficient, and therefore I shall only consider that Text.

And, because here lies the main strength of this opinion of the unlawfulness of Oaths, it is very fit that this Text be fully consider'd; and that it be made very evident, that it was not our Saviour's meaning by this prohibition wholly to forbid the use of Oaths.

But before I enter upon this matter, I will readily grant, that there is scarce any Error whatsoever that hath a more plausible colour from Scripture, than this; which makes the case of those who are seduced into it the more pityable: But then it ought to be consider'd, how much this Doctrine of the unlawfulness of Oaths reflects upon the Christian Religion: since it is so evidently prejudicial both to humane Society in general, and particularly to those persons that entertain it: neither of which ought rashly to be supposed and taken for granted, concerning any Law delivered by our Saviour: Because upon these terms it will be very hard for us to vindicate the divine wisdom of our Saviour's Doctrine, and the Reasonableness of the Christian Religion. Of the inconvenience of this Doctrine to humane Society, I have spoken already. But besides this, it is very prejudicial to them that hold it. It renders them suspected to Government, and in many cases incapable of the common benefits of Justice and other privileges of humane Society, and exposeth them to great Penalties as the constitution of all Laws and Governments at present is, and it is not easie to imagine how they should be otherwise. And which is very considerable in this matter, it sets those who refuse Oaths upon very unequal terms with the rest of Mankind, if where the estates and lives of men are equally concern'd, their bare testimonies shall be admitted without an Oath, and others shall be obliged to speak upon Oath: Nothing being more certain in experience, than that many men will lie for their interest when they will not be perjured; God having planted in the natural Consciences of men a secret dread of perjury above most other sins. And this inconvenience is so great, as to render those who refuse oaths in all cases almost intolerable to humane Society. I speak not this either to bring them into trouble, or to perswade them to measure truth by their interest: but on the other hand I must needs say, that it is no Argument either of a wise or good man to take up any opinion, especially such a one as is greatly to his prejudice, upon slight grounds. And this very consideration that it is so much to their inconvenience, may justly move them to be very careful in the examination of it.

This being premis'd, I come now to explain this Prohibition of our Saviour; and to this purpose, I desire these three things may be well consider'd.

First, That several circumstances of these words of our Saviour do manifestly shew that they ought to be interpreted in a limited sense, as only forbidding swearing in common conversation; needle's and beedle's oaths (as one expresseth it) and in general all voluntary swearing unless upon some great and weighty cause, in which the glory of God and the good of the souls of men is concerned. For that in such cases a voluntary Oath may be lawful, I am induced to believe from the example of St. Paul, who useth it more than once upon such occasions; of which I shall hereafter give particular Instances.

And this was the sense of wise men among the Heathen, that men should not swear but upon necessity and great occasion. Thus Eusebius, the Philosopher in Stobæus, counsels men. Some (says he) advise men to be careful to swear the truth; but I advise principally that men do not easily swear at all, that is, not upon any slight but only upon weighty occasions; To the same purpose Epictetus, Shun oaths wholly, if it be possible; if not, however as much as thou canst: And so likewise Simplicius in his Comment upon him, We ought wholly to shun swearing, except upon occasions of great necessity. And Quintilian among the Romans, In totum jurare, nisi ubi necesse est, gravi viro parum convenit; To swear at all, except where it is necessary, does not well suit with a wise man.

And, that this prohibition of our Saviour's ought to be understood of Oaths in ordinary conversation, appears from the opposition which our Saviour makes, Swear not at all; but let your communication be yea, yea; That is, in your ordinary commerce and affairs do not interpose oaths, but say and do. And this is very much confirmed, in that our Saviour does not under this general Prohibition, instance in such oaths as are expressly by the name of God: The reason whereof is this; The Jews thought it unlawful in ordinary communication to swear expressly by the name of God, but lawful to swear by the Creatures, as by Heaven and Earth, &c. So that our Saviour's meaning is as if he had said, You think you may swear in common conversation provided you do not swear by the name of God; but I say unto you, let your communication be without oaths of any kind: you shall not so much as swear by heaven or by earth, because God is virtually invoked in every oath. And unless we suppose this to be our Saviour's meaning, I do not see what good Reason can be given why our Saviour should only forbid them to swear by the Creatures, and not much rather by the Name of God; such oaths being surely of all others most to be avoided, as being the most direct abuse and profanation of the Name of God.

Secondly, It is very considerable to the explaining of this Prohibition, that there are the like general expressions in other Jewish Authors concerning this very matter, which yet must of necessity be thus limited. Maimonides, from the ancient Rabbies, gives this Rule, that it is best not to swear at all. And Philo useth almost the same words. And Rabbi Jonathan comes very near our Saviour's expression, when he says, The just man will not swear at all; not so much as by the common Names of God, nor by his Attributes, nor by his Works, as by Heaven, or the Angels, or the Law. Now it is not imaginable, that these learned Jews should condemn Oaths in all cases, when the Law of Moses did in many cases expressly require them. And therefore they are to be understood of voluntary oaths in ordinary conversation. And that the Jews meant this by not swearing at all, seems to be very plain from a passage in Josephus, who says that the Sect of the Essenes forbade their Disciples to swear at all; and yet he tells us at the same time, that they who were admitted into that Sect took an oath to observe the Laws and Rules of it. So that they who forbade to swear at all, allowed of Oaths imposed by the Authority of Superiors.

Thirdly, which will peremptorily decide this matter, This Prohibition of our Saviour's cannot be understood to forbid all Oaths, without a plain contradiction to the undoubted practice of the primitive Christians, and of the Apostles, and even of our Lord himself. Origen and Tertullian tell us, that the Christians refused to swear by the Emperor's Genius; not because it was an Oath, but because they thought it to be idolatrous: But the same Tertullian tullian says, that the Christians were willing to swear per salutem Imperatoris, by the health and safety of the Emperour. Athanasius being accused to Constantius purged himself by oath, and desired that his Accuser might be put to his Oath sub attestazione veritatis, by calling the truth to witness; by which form (says he) we Christians are wont to swear. But which is more than this, S. Paul, upon weighty occasions, does several times in his Epistles call God to witness for the truth of what he says; which is the very formality of an Oath. God is my witness, Rom. i. 9. As God is true, our word was not yea and nay, 2 Cor. i. 18. and v. 23. I call God for a record upon my soul. Before God I lye not, Gal. i. 20. God is my record, Phil. i. 8. God is my witness, 1 Thes. 2. 5. These are all unquestionable Oaths; which we cannot imagine St. Paul would have used, had they been directly contrary to our Saviour's Law. And whereas some defend this upon account of his extraordinary Inspiration, I cannot possibly see how this mends the matter. For certainly it is very inconvenient to say, that they who were to teach the Precepts of Christ to others, did themselves break them by inspiration.

But I go yet farther, and shall urge an example beyond all exception.

Our Saviour himself (who surely would not be the first example of breaking his own Laws) did not refuse to answer upon Oath, being called there-to at his Trial. So we find Matt. 26. 63. The high Priest said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be Christ the Son of God; that is, he required him to answer this question upon Oath. For among the Jews, the form of giving an Oath to witnesses and others was not by tendering a formal Oath to them, as the custom is among us, but by adjuring them, that is, requiring them to answer upon Oath: As is plain from Levit. 5. 1. If a man hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness whether he hath seen or known of such a thing, if he do not utter it, when he shall bear his iniquity. If ye have heard the voice of swearing, that is, if being adjured or demanded to answer upon Oath concerning what he hath seen or heard, he do not utter the truth, he is perjured. Now to this adjuration of the high Priest our Saviour answered, Thou hast said; which words are not an avoiding to answer (as some have thought) but a direct answer, as if he had said, It is as thou sayest, it is even so, I am the Son of God. For upon this answer the high Priest said, He hath spoken blasphemy. But to put the matter beyond all doubt, St. Mark tells us, Mark 14. 61. that he being asked by the high Priest, Art thou the Christ the Son of the Blessed? He answered, I am. So that unless we will interpret our Saviour's Doctrine contrary to his own practice, we cannot understand him to forbid all Oaths, and consequently they are not unlawful.

I have been the longer upon this, that I might give clear satisfaction in this matter to those that are willing to receive it.

As for the Ceremonies in use among us in the taking of Oaths, it is no just Exception against them, that they are not found in Scripture. For this was always matter of Liberty; and several Nations have used several Rites and Ceremonies in their Oaths. It was the custom of the Grecians, to swear laying their hands upon the Altar, quod sanctissimum jusjurandum est habitum, (saith A. Gellius) which was looked upon as the most sacred form of swearing. The Romans were wont Jovem Lapidem jurare; that is, he that swore by Jupiter held a Flint-stone in his hand, and flung it violently from him with these words, Si sciens fallo ita me Jupiter bonis omnibus ejiciat, ut ego hunc Lapidem: If I knowingly falsify, God so throw me out of all my possessions as I do this Stone.

In Scripture there are two Ceremonies mentioned of Swearing: One, of putting the hand under the Thigh of him to whom the Oath was made. Thus

Eliezer

Eliczer swore to Abraham, Gen. 24. and Joseph to Jacob, Gen. 1. The other was by lifting up the hand to heaven: Thus Abraham expresseth the manner of an Oath, Gen. 14. 22. I have lift up my hand to the most high God. And thus God condescending to the manner of men expresseth himself, Deut. 32. 40. If I lift up my hand to heaven, and swear. In allusion to this Custom the Psalmist describes the Perjured person, Psal. 144. 8. Whose mouth speaketh vanity; and whose right hand is a right hand of falshood. And there is not the least intimation in Scripture that either of these Ceremonies were prescribed and appointed by God, but voluntarily instituted and taken up by men. And thus among us the Ceremony of Swearing is by laying the hand on the holy Gospel, and kissing the Book; which is both very solemn and significant. And this is the reason why this solemn kind of Oath is called a corporal Oath, and was anciently so called; because the sign or ceremony of it is performed by some part of the Body. And this Solemnity is an aggravation of the Perjury, because it makes it both more deliberate, and more scandalous.

I shall speak but briefly to the

IV. And last particular, viz. the sacred obligation of an Oath: because it is a solemn appeal to God as a witness of the truth of what we say: To God, I say, from whose piercing and all-seeing eye, from whose perfect and infinite knowledge, nothing is or can be hid; So that there is not a thought in our heart but he sees it, nor a word in our tongue but he discerns the truth or falshood of it. Whenever we swear, we appeal to his Knowledge, and refer our selves to his just judgment who is the powerful Patron and Protector of Right, and the almighty Judge and Avenger of all falshood and unrighteousness. So that it is not possible for men to lay a more sacred and solemn obligation upon their Consciences, than by the Religion of an Oath. Moses very well expresseth it, by binding our souls with a bond, Numb. 30. 2. If a man swear an oath, to bind his soul with a bond; intimating that he that swears lays the strongest obligation upon himself, and puts his Soul in pawn for the truth of what he says. And this obligation no man can violate, but at the utmost peril of the judgment and vengeance of God. For every Oath implies a Curse upon our selves in case of Perjury, as Plutarch observes. And this was always the sense of Mankind concerning the obligation of Oaths. Nullum vinculum ad astringendam fidem majores nostri jurejurando arctius esse voluerunt, saith Tully: Our forefathers had no stricter bond whereby to oblige the faith of men to one another, than that of an Oath. To the same purpose is that in the Comedian, Aliud si scirem, qui firmare meam apud vos possem fidem, sanctius quam jusjurandum, id pollicerer tibi. If I knew any thing more sacred than an Oath, whereby to confirm to you the truth of what I say, I would make use of it.

I will crave your patience a little longer, whilst by way of inference from this Discourse, I represent to you the great Sin of Swearing in common conversation, upon trivial and needless occasions, and the hainousness of the sin of Perjury.

I. First, The great sin of Swearing, upon trivial and needless occasions; in common conversation. Because an Oath is a solemn thing, and reserved for great occasions, to give confirmation to our word in some weighty matter, and to put an end to controversies which cannot otherwise be peremptorily and satisfactorily decided. And therefore to use Oaths upon light occasions argues great profaneness and irreverence of Almighty God. So Ulpian the great Roman Lawyer observes, Nonnullus esse faciles ad jurandum contemptu Religionis, that mens proneness to swearing comes from a contempt of Religion; than which nothing disposeth men more to Atheism and Infidelity.

lity. Besides that it doth many times surprize men unawares into Perjury : And how can it be otherwise, when men use to interlard all their careless talk with Oaths, but that they must often be Perjur'd? And which is worse, it prepares men for deliberate Perjury ; For with those who are accustomed to swear upon light occasions, an Oath will go off with them more roundly about weightier matters. From a common custom of Swearing (saith Hierocles) men easily slide into perjury : Therefore (says he) if thou wouldst not be perjured, do not use to swear. And this perhaps is the meaning of St. James, when he cautions Christians so vehemently against common swearing, ἵνα μὴ εἰς ὑποκριτὴν πέσῃτε, (for so some of the best ancient Copies read it) lest ye fall into hypocrisie, that is, lest ye lie and be perjured, by using your selves to rash and inconsiderate swearing.

And men expose themselves to this danger to no purpose ; Oaths in common discourse being so far from confirming a man's word, that with wise men they much weaken it : For common swearing (if it have any serious meaning at all) argues in a man a perpetual distrust of his own reputation, and is an acknowledgment that he thinks his bare word not to be worthy of credit. And it is so far from adorning and filling a man's discourse, that it makes it look swollen and bloated, and more bold and blustering, than becomes persons of gentle and good breeding. Besides that it is a great incivility, because it highly offends and grates upon all sober and considerate persons ; who cannot be presumed with any manner of ease and patience to hear God affronted, and his great and glorious Name so irreverently tost upon every slight occasion.

And it is no excuse to men that many times they do it ignorantly, and not observing and knowing what they do. For certainly it is no extenuation of a fault, that a man hath got the habit of it so perfect that he commits it when he does not think of it. Which consideration should make men oppose the beginnings of this vice, lest it grow into a habit very hard to be left. Nemo novit, nisi qui expertus est, quam sit difficile consuetudinem jurandi extinguere, saith St. Austin ; No man knows, but he that hath tried, how hard it is to get rid of this custom of Swearing : But yet it is certain men may do it, by resolution and great care of themselves : For he that can chuse whether he will speak or not, can chuse whether he will swear or not when he speaks. Major consuetudo majorem intentionem flagitat ; The more inveterate a custom is, the greater care should be used to break our selves of it.

In short, This practice is so contrary to so plain a Precept of our Saviour, and by the breach whereof we incur so great a danger (as S. James assures us) that it must be a great charity that can find out a way to reconcile a common custom of swearing with a serious belief of the Christian Religion : Which I would to God those who are concerned would seriously lay to heart ; especially, since this Sin, of all others, hath the least of Temptation to it. Profit or Pleasure there is none in it, nor any thing in mens natural tempers to incite them to it. For tho some men pour out Oaths so freely as if they came naturally from them, yet surely no man is born of a swearing constitution.

All that can be pretended for it, is Custom and Fashion : But to shew that this is no Excuse, it is very observable that it is particularly in the matter of Oaths and Perjury that the Holy Ghost gives that caution, Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil.

And lastly, it deserves to be considered, that this sin is so much the greater because of the frequent returns of it in those that are accustomed to it. So that although it were but small in it self (as it is not) yet the frequent practice of this sin would quickly mount it up to a great score.

2. Secondly,

2. Secondly, To represent the hainousness of the sin of Perjury. But before I aggravate this Crime, it is fit to let men know how many ways they may be guilty of it.

1. When a man asserts upon Oath what he knows to be otherwise : Or promiseth what he does not intend to perform. In both these cases the very act of swearing is Perjury. And so likewise when a man promiseth upon oath to do that which it is unlawful for him to do because this Oath is contrary to a former obligation.

2^{dly}. When a man is uncertain whether what he swear to, be true. This likewise is Perjury, in the act ; though not of the same degree of guilt with the former, because it is not so fully and directly against his knowledge and conscience. For men ought to be certain of the truth of what they assert upon Oath, and not to swear at a venture. And therefore no man ought positively to swear to the truth of any thing but what he himself hath seen or heard : This being the highest assurance men are capable of in this World. In like manner, he is guilty of perjury in the same degree who promiseth upon Oath what he is not morally and reasonably certain he shall be able to perform.

3^{dly}. They are likewise guilty of Perjury, who do not use great plainness and simplicity in Oaths ; but answer equivocally and doubtfully, or with reservation of something in their minds, thinking thereby to save the truth of what they say. And we all know who they are that make use of these arts, and maintain them to be lawful ; to the infinite scandal of the Christian Religion and prejudice of humane Society, by doing what in them lies to destroy all Faith and mutual confidence among men. For what can be a greater affront to God, than to use his Name to deceive men ? And what can more directly overthrow the great end and use of Oaths, which are for confirmation, and to put an end to strife ? Whereas by these arts the thing is left in the same uncertainty it was before, and there is no decision of it. For there is hardly any form of words can be devised so plain, as not to be liable to Equivocation : To be sure a man when he swears may always reserve something in his mind which will quite alter the sense of whatever he can say or promise upon Oath. And this may be laid down for a certain Rule, That all departure from the simplicity of an Oath is a degree of Perjury, and a man is never a whit the less forsworn because his Perjury is a little finer and more artificial than ordinary. And though men think by this device to save themselves harmless from the guilt of so great a sin, they do really increase it, by adding to their iniquity the impudent folly of mocking God and deceiving themselves.

And whereas it is pleaded in the favour of mental reservation, that the whole Proposition, as made up of what is express'd in words and of that which is reserved in the mind, is true ; For instance, if a man being ask'd upon Oath whether he be a Priest, shall answer he is not, reserving in his mind that he is not a Priest of Bacchus, or some such thing, the whole Proposition is true, and then they say a man may swear to that which is true, without danger of Perjury : This is of no force, because, though the whole Proposition be true, it is deceitful, and contrary to that sincerity which ought to be in an oath : And the end of an Oath is hereby likewise defeated, which is to ascertain the truth of what we say : But if a man reserve something in his mind which alters the truth of what he says, the thing is still as doubtful and uncertain as it was before. Besides, if this be a good reason, a man may swear with reservation in all cases ; because the reason equally extends to all cases ; for if the truth of the Proposition, as made up up of what is express'd in words and reserv'd in the mind, will excuse a man from Perjury, then no man can be perjur'd that swears with reservation: But this the Casuits of the Roman Church do not allow, but only in some particular cases, as before an incompetent Judge, or the like; for they see well enough that if this were allow'd in all cases, it would destroy all Faith among men. And therefore since the reason extends alike to all cases, it is plain that it is to be allow'd in none.

4thly. He is guilty of Perjury after the act, who having a real intention when he swears, to perform what he promiseth, yet afterwards neglects to do it: Not for want of Power (for so long as that continues the obligation ceaseth) but for want of Will, and due regard to his Oath.

Now that Perjury is a most heinous Sin, is evident, because it is contrary to so plain and great a Law of God; one of the ten Words or Precepts of the Moral Law, thou shalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain; thou shalt not bring or apply the name of God to a falsehood: Or, as Josephus renders it, Thou shalt not adjure God to a false thing: Which our Saviour renders yet more plainly, Matt. 5. 33. Thou shalt not forswear thy self. For he seems to refer to the 3d Commandment when he says, Ye have heard that it was said to them of old time, thou shalt not forswear thy self, as he had done before to the 6th and 7th, When he says, It was said to them of old time, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not commit adultery. So that the primary, if not the sole intention of this Law, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, is to forbid the great sin of Perjury. And I do not remember that in Scripture the phrase of taking God's name in vain, is used in any other sense. And thus it is certainly used, Prov. 30. 9. Lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of the Lord my God in vain, i. e. lest Poverty should tempt me to steal, and stealth should engage me in Perjury. For among the Jews an oath was tendered to him that was suspected of theft, as appears from Levit. 6. 2. where it is said, If any one be guilty of theft, and lyeth concerning it, or sweareth falsely; he shall restore all that about which he hath sworn falsely. Lest I steal, and take the name of the Lord my God in vain; that is, be perjured, being examined upon Oath, concerning a thing stollen. And for this reason the thief and the perjured person are put together, Zech. 5. 4. where it is said, that a curse shall enter into the house of the thief, and of him that sweareth falsely by the name of God. From all which it is very probable, that the whole intention of the 3d Commandment is to forbid this great sin of Perjury. To deter men from which, a severe threatening is there added; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain: that is, he will most severely punish such a one. And 'tis very observable, that there is no threatening added to any other Commandment, but to this and the second; Intimating to us that, next to Idolatry and the worship of a false God, Perjury is one of the greatest affronts that can be offered to the divine Majesty. This is one of those sins that cry so loud to Heaven, and quickens the pace of God's judgments, Mal. 3. 9. I will come near to you in judgment, and be a swift witness against the swearer: For this God threatens utter destruction to the man and his house, Zech. 5. 4 speaking of the curse that goeth over the face of the whole earth: God (says he) will bring it forth, and it shall enter into the house of him that sweareth falsely by the name of God, and shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof, It shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it. This sin by the secret judgment of God undermines Estates and Families to the utter ruin of them. And among the Heathen it was always reckoned one of the greatest of Crimes, and which they did believe God did not only punish upon the guilty person himself, but upon his Family and Posterity; and many times upon whole Nations, as the Prophet also tells us, that because of Oaths the Land mourns.

I need not use many words to aggravate this sin; it is certainly a Crime of the highest nature. Deliberate Perjury being directly against a man's knowledge, so that no man can commit it without slaring his Conscience in the face; which is one of the greatest aggravations of any Crime. And it is equally a sin against both Tables; being the highest affront to God, and of most injurious consequence to men. It is an horrible abuse of the name of God, an open contempt of his Judgment, and an insolent defiance of his Vengeance: And in respect of men, it is not only a wrong to this or that particular person who suffers by it, but Treason against humane Society; subverting at once the foundations of publick Peace and Justice, and the private security of every man's life and fortune. It is a defeating of the best and last way that the wisdom of men could devise for the decision of doubtful matters. Solomon very fully and elegantly expresseth the destructive nature of this sin, Prov. 25. 18. A false witness against his neighbour is a maul, and a sword, and a sharp arrow: intimating, that amongst all the instruments of ruin and mischief that have been devised by mankind, none is of more pernicious consequence to humane Society than Perjury, and breach of Faith. It is a pestilence that usually walketh in darkness, and a secret stab and blow against which many times there is no possibility of defence.

And therefore it highly concerns those who upon these and the like occasions are called upon their Oath, whether as Jurors or Witnesses, to set God before their eyes, and to have his fear in their hearts whenever they come to take an Oath. And to govern and discharge their Consciences in this matter by known and approv'd Rules, and by the Resolutions of pious and wise men, and not by the loose Reasonings and Resolutions of Pamphlets, sent abroad to serve the turns of unpeaceable and ill-minded men (whether Atheists, or Papists, or others) on purpose to debauch the Consciences of men by teaching them to play fast and loose with Oaths. And it is a very sad sign of the decay of Christian Religion among us, to see so many who call themselves Christians, to make so little conscience of so great a sin, as even the Light of Nature would blush and tremble at.

I will conclude all with those excellent Sayings of the Son of Sirach concerning these two sins (I have been speaking of) profane Swearing and Perjury, Eccl. 23. 9, 10, &c. Accustom not thy mouth to swearing; neither use thy self to the naming of the holy one. A man that useth much swearing shall be filled with iniquity, and the plague shall never depart from his house. If he shall offend, his sin shall be upon him; and if he acknowledge not his sin, he maketh a double offence. And if he swear falsely he shall not be innocent, but his house shall be full of calamities. And to represent to us the dreadful nature of this sin of Perjury, There is (saith he) a word that is cloathed about with death, meaning a rash and false Oath; There is a word that is cloathed about with death, God grant it be not found in the heritage of Jacob: for all such things shall be far from the godly; and they will not wallow in these sins. From which God preserve all good men, and make them careful to preserve themselves; as they value the present peace of their own consciences, and the favour of Almighty God in this world and the other, for his mercies sake in Jesus Christ, To whom, &c.

Of the Reverend
Mr. Thomas Gouge,

The 4th of November, 1681.

At St. Anne's Black-Fryars:

With a brief Account of his Life.

TO THE Right Worshipful the PRESIDENT,
 The TREASURER,
 And the rest of the Worthy Governours of the Hospital of Christ-Church in LONDON.

WHen upon the Request of some of the Relations and Friends of the Reverend Mr. Gouge deceased, and to speak the truth, in compliance with mine own inclination to do right to the Memory of so good a Man, and to set so great an Example in the view of all Men, I had determined to make this Discourse publick; I knew not where more fitly to address it than to your selves, who are the living Pattern of the same Virtue, and the faithful Dispensers and Managers of one of the best and greatest Charities in the World; especially since he had a particular relation to you, and was pleased for some Years last past, without any other consideration but that of Charity, to employ his constant pains in Catechising the poor Children of your Hospital; wisely considering of how great consequence it was to this City, to have the foundations of Religion well laid in the tender Years of so many Persons as were afterwards to be planted there in several Professions; and from a true humility of Mind, being ready to stoop to the meanest Office and Service to do good.

I have heard from an intimate Friend of his, that he would sometimes with great pleasure say, that he had two Livings which he would not exchange for two of the greatest in England, meaning Wales and Christ's Hospital; Contrary to common account he esteemed every advantage of being useful and serviceable to God and Men a rich Benefice, and those his best Patrons and Benefactors, not who did him good, but who gave him the opportunity and means of doing it. To you therefore as his Patrons, this Sermon doth of right belong, and to you I humbly dedicate it; heartily beseeching Almighty God, to raise up many by his Example, that may serve their generation according to the will of God, as he did. I am

Your faithful and humble Servant,

Jo. Tillotson.

S E R M O N XXIII.

Preached at the Funeral of Mr. Thomas Gouge :
With a short Account of his Life.

LUKE XX. 37, 38.

Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; For all live to him.

THE occasion of these words of our blessed Saviour was an Objection which the Sadduces made against the Resurrection, grounded upon a case which had sometimes happened among them, of a Woman that had had seven Brethren successively to her Husbands. Upon which case they put this Question to our Saviour; Whose wife of the seven shall this woman be at the Resurrection? That is, If men live in another world, how shall the controversie between these seven Brethren be decided? for they all seem to have an equal claim to this Woman, each of them having had her to wife.

This captious Question was not easie to be answered by the Pharisees, who fancied the enjoyments of the next life to be of the same kind with the sensual pleasures of this world, only greater and more durable. From which Tradition of the Jews concerning a sensual Paradise, Mahomet seems to have taken the pattern of his: as he did likewise many other things from the Jewish Traditions. Now upon this supposition, that in the next life there will be marrying and giving in marriage, it was a Question not easily satisfied, Whose wife of the seven this woman should then be?

But our Saviour clearly avoids the whole force of it, by shewing the different state of men in this world, and in the other. The children of this world (says he) marry, and are given in marriage, but they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage. And he does not barely and magisterially assert this Doctrine, but gives a plain and substantial Reason for it; because they cannot die any more. After men have lived a while in this world they are taken away by death, and therefore marriage is necessary to maintain a succession of mankind; but in the other world men shall become immortal and live for ever, and then the reason of marriage will wholly cease: For when men can die no more, there will then be no need of any new supplies of mankind.

Our Saviour having thus cleared himself of this Objection by taking away the ground and foundation of it, he produceth an Argument for the Proof of the Resurrection, in the words of my Text; Now that the dead are raised,
Moses

Moses even shewed at the Bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. That is, when in one of his Books God is brought in speaking to him out of the Bush, and calling himself by the title of the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. From whence our Saviour infers the Resurrection, because God is not the God of the dead but the living: For all live to him.

My design from these words is, to shew the force and strength of this Argument which our Saviour urgeth for the proof of the Resurrection. In order whereunto I shall,

First, Consider it is an Argument ad hominem, and shew the fitness and force of it to convince those with whom our Saviour disputed.

Secondly, I shall enquire, Whether it be more than an Argument ad hominem. And if it be, wherein the real and absolute force of it doth consist?

And then I shall apply this Doctrine of the Resurrection to the present Occasion.

I. First. We will consider it is an Argument ad hominem, and shew the fitness and force of it to convince those with whom our Saviour disputed. And this will appear if we carefully consider these four things.

1. What our Saviour intended directly and immediately to prove by this Argument.

2. The extraordinary veneration which the Jews in general had for the Writings of Moses, above any other Books of the Old Testament.

3. The peculiar notion which the Jews had concerning the use of this Phrase or expression of God's being any ones God.

4. The great respect which the Jews had for these three Fathers of their Nation, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. For each of these make our Saviour's Argument more forcible against those with whom he disputed.

First. We will consider what our Saviour intended directly and immediately to prove by this Argument. And that was this, That there is another state after this life, wherein men shall be happy or miserable according as they have lived in this world. And this doth not only suppose the immortality of the Soul, but forasmuch as the Body is an essential part of man, doth by consequence infer the resurrection of the Body; because otherwise the man would not be happy or miserable in another world. But I cannot see any sufficient ground to believe that our Saviour intended by this Argument directly and immediately to prove the resurrection of the Body, but only by consequence, and as it follows from the admission of a future state wherein men shall be rewarded or punished. For that Reason of our Saviour, that God is not a God of the dead but of the living, if it did directly prove the resurrection of the Body, it would prove that the Bodies of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, were raised to life again, at or before that time when God spake to Moses and called himself the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob: But we do not believe this; and therefore ought not to suppose that it was the intention of our Saviour directly and immediately to prove the resurrection of the Body, but only (as I said before) a future state. And that this was all our Saviour intended, will more plainly appear, if we consider what that Error of the Sadduces was which our Saviour here confutes. And Josephus, who very well understood the difference of the Sects among the Jews, and gives a particular account of them, makes not the least mention of any Controversie between the Pharisees and the Sadduces about the resurrection of the Body. All that he says, is this, That the Pharisees hold the Immortality of the Soul, and that there are Rewards and Punishments in another world: But the Sadduces denied all this, and that there was any other state after this life. And this is the very same account with that which is given of them in the New Testament, ver. 27. of this Chap. The Sadduces who deny that there is any resurrection. The meaning of which is more fully declared, Act. 23. 8. The Sadduces say that there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both. That is, the Sadduces denied that there was any other state of men after this life, and that there was any such thing as an immortal Spirit, either Angels, or the Souls of men surviving their Bodies. And, as Dr. Hammond hath judiciously observed, this is the true importance of the word ἀνάστασις, viz. a future or another state; unless in such Texts where the Context does restrain it to the raising again of the Body, or where some word that denotes the body, as σῶμα or σάρξ, is added to it.
and

Secondly. The force of this Argument against those with whom our Saviour disputed will farther appear, if we consider the great veneration which the Jews in general had for the Writings of Moses above any other Books of the Old Testament; which they (especially the Sadduces) looked upon only as Explications and Comments upon the Law of Moses: But they esteemed nothing as a necessary Article of Faith which had not some foundation in the Writings of Moses. And this seems to me to be the true Reason why our Saviour chose to confute them out of Moses, rather than any other part of the Old Testament: And not as many learned men have imagined, because the Sadduces did not receive any part of the Old Testament, but only the five Books of Moses; so that it was in vain to argue against them out of any other. This I know hath been a general opinion, grounded I think upon the mistake of a passage in Josephus, who says the Sadduces only receive the written Law. But if we carefully consider that passage, we shall find that Josephus doth not there oppose the Law to the other Books of the Old Testament, which were also written; but to Oral Tradition. For he says expressly, that the Sadduces only received the written Law, but the Pharisees, over and besides what was written, received the Oral which they call Tradition.

I deny not but that in the later Prophets there are more express Texts for the proof of a future state, than any are to be found in the Books of Moses; as Daniel 12. 2. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And indeed it seems very plain that holy men among the Jews, towards the expiration of the Legal dispensation, had still clearer and more express apprehensions concerning a future state than are to be met with in the Writings of Moses, or of any of the Prophets.

The Law given by Moses did suppose the Immortality of the Souls of men, and the expectation of another life after this, as Principles of Religion in some degree naturally known; but made no new and express Revelation of these things. Nor was there any occasion for it, the Law of Moses being a Political Law, not intended for the Government of Mankind, but of one particular Nation; and therefore was establish'd, as Political Laws are, upon temporal promises and threatnings; promising temporal prosperity to the observation of its precepts, and threatning the breach of them with temporal judgments and calamities.

And this I take to be the true reason why arguments fetch'd from another world are so obscurely insisted upon under that Dispensation; not but that another life after this was always suppos'd, and was undoubtedly the hope and expectation of good men under the Law, but the clear discovery very of it was reserv'd for the Times of the Messias. And therefore as those Times drew on, and the Son of righteousness was near his rising, the shadows of the night began to be chased away, and mens apprehensions of a future state to clear up; so that in the time of the Maccabees good men spake with more confidence and assurance of these things.

It is likewise to be consider'd, that the temporal calamities and sufferings with which the Jews were almost continually harass'd from the time of their Captivity had very much wean'd good men from the consideration of temporal promises, and awaken'd their minds to the more serious thoughts of another world. It being natural to men when they are destitute of present comfort, to support themselves with the expectation of better things for the future, and as the Apostle to the Hebrews expresseth it, Chap. 6. v. 18. To fly for refuge to lay hold upon the hope that is before them, and to employ their reason to fortifie themselves as well as they can in that perswasion.

And this I doubt not was the true occasion of those clearer and riper apprehensions of good men concerning a future state, in those times of distress and perlecution: it being very agreeable to the wisdom and goodness of the Divine Providence not to leave his People destitute of sufficient support under great trials and sufferings: And nothing but the hopes of a better life could have born up the spirits of men under such cruel tortures. And of this we have a most remarkable Instance in the History of the seven Brethren in the Maccabees, who being cruelly tortured and put to death by Antiochus, do most expressly declare their confident expectation of a resurrection to a better life. To which History the Apostle certainly refers, Heb. 11. 35. when he says, Others were tortured, not expecting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection: where the word, which we render were tortured, is ἐτυμπαίνοντο, which is the very word used in the Maccabees to express the particular kind of torture us'd upon them; besides that being offer'd deliverance they most resolutely refus'd to accept of it, with this express declaration, that they hop'd for a resurrection to a better life.

But to return to my purpose; Notwithstanding there might be more clear and express Texts to this purpose in the ancient Prophets, yet our Saviour knowing how great a regard not only the Sadduces, but all the Jews had to the Authority of Moses, he thought fit to bring his proof of the resurrection out of his Writings, as that which was the most likely to convince them.

Thirdly. If we consider farther the peculiar Notion which the Jews had concerning the use of this phrase or expression of God's being any ones God. And that was this: That God is no where in Scripture said to be any ones God while he was alive. And therefore they tell us that while Isaac lived, God is not called the God of Isaac, but the fear of Isaac. As Gen. 31. 42. Except the God of Abraham, and the fear of Isaac, had been with me; and Ver. 53. when Laban made a Covenant with Jacob, 'tis said that Laban did swear by the God of Abraham, and the God of Nabor, and the God of their Fathers, but Jacob swore by the fear of his Father Isaac. I will not warrant this Observation to be good, because I certainly know it is not true. For God doth expressly call himself the God of Isaac, while Isaac was yet alive, Genes. 28. 13. I am the Lord God of Abraham thy Father, and the God of Isaac. It is sufficient to my purpose, that this was a Notion anciently current among the Jews. And therefore our Saviour's Argument from this Expression must be so much the stronger against them: For if the Souls of Men be extinguish'd by death (as the Sadduces believ'd) what did it signifie to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to have God called their God, after they were were dead? But surely, for God to be any ones God, doth signify some great benefit and advantage; which yet (according to the notion which the Jews had of this Phrase) could not respect this Life, because, according to them, God is not said to be any ones God till after he is dead: But it is thus said of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, after their death, and therefore our Saviour infers very strongly against them, that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, were not extinguished by death, but do still live somewhere: for God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. And then he adds by way of further Explication, for all live to him. That is, though those good men who are departed this life, do not still live to us, here in this World, yet they live to God, and are with him.

Fourthly, If we consider the great respect which the Jews had for those three Fathers of their Nation, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. They had an extraordinary Opinion of them, and esteemed nothing too great to be thought or said of them. And therefore, we find that they looked upon it as a great arrogance for any man to assume any thing to himself that might seem to set him above Abraham, Isaac or Jacob. With what indignation did they fly upon our Saviour on this account? Joh. 4. 12. Art thou greater than our father Jacob? and chap. 8. vers. 53. Art thou greater than our father Abraham? whom makest thou thy self? Now they who had so superstitious a veneration for them, would easily believe any thing of privilege to belong to them: so that our Saviour doth with great advantage instance in them, in favour of whom they would be inclined to extend the meaning of any promise to the utmost, and allow it to signify as much as the words could possibly bear. So that it is no wonder that the Text tells us that this Argument put the Sadduces to silence. They durst not attempt a thing so odious, as to go about to take away any thing of privilege from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

And thus I have, as briefly as the matter would bear, endeavoured to shew the fitness and force of this Argument to convince those with whom our Saviour disputed. I come now, in the

II. Second place, to inquire, Whether this be any more than an argument ad hominem; and if it be, wherein the real and absolute force of it doth consist? II.

I do not think it necessary to believe that every Argument used by our Saviour, or his Apostles, is absolutely and in it self conclusive of the matter in debate. For an Argument which doth not really prove the thing in Question, may yet be a very good Argument ad hominem; and in some cases more convincing to him with whom we dispute, than that which is a better Argument in it self. Now it is possible, that our Saviour's intention might not be to bring a conclusive proof of the Resurrection, but only to confute those who would needs be disputing with him. And to that purpose an Argument ad hominem, which proceeded upon grounds which they themselves could not deny, might be very proper and effectual. But although it be not necessary to believe, that this was more than an Argument ad hominem; yet it is the better to us, if it be absolutely and in it self conclusive of the thing in Question. And this I hope will sufficiently appear, if we consider these four things.

1. That for God to be any ones God doth signify some very extraordinary blessing and happiness to those persons of whom this is said.

2. If we consider the eminent faith and obedience of the persons to whom this promise is made.

3. Their condition in this world.

4. The general importance of this promise abstracting from the persons particularly specified and named in it, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

First, If we consider that for God to be any ones God doth signifie some very extraordinary blessing and happiness to those persons of whom this is said. It is a big word for God to declare himself to be any ones God: and the least we can imagine to be meant by it, is that God will in an extraordinary manner employ his power and wisdom to do him good: that he will concern himself more for the happiness of those whose God he declares himself to be, than for others.

Secondly, If we consider the eminent faith and obedience of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Abraham left his Country in obedience to God, not knowing whither he was to go. And which was one of the most unparalleled and strange instances of faith and obedience that can almost be imagined, he was willing to have sacrificed his only Son at the command of God. Isaac and Jacob were also very good men, and devout worshippers of the true God, when almost the whole world was sunk into Idolatry and all manner of impiety. Now what can we imagine, but that the good God did design some extraordinary reward to such faithful servants of his? especially if we consider, that he intended this gracious declaration of his concerning them, for a standing encouragement to all those who in after Ages should follow the faith, and tread in the steps of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

Thirdly, If we consider the condition of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in this world: The Scripture tells us, that they were pilgrims and strangers upon the earth; had no fixed and settled habitation, but were forced to wander from one Kingdom and Country to another; that they were exposed to many hazards and difficulties, to great troubles and afflictions in this world; so that there was no such peculiar happiness befell them in this life above the common rate of men, as may seem to fill up the big words of this promise, that God would be their God. For so far as the Scripture History informs us, and further we cannot know of this matter, Esau was as prosperous as Jacob; and Jacob had a great many more troubles and afflictions in this life than Esau had. But surely when God calls himself the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, this signifies that God intended some very peculiar blessing and advantage to them above others: which seeing they did not enjoy in this world, it is very reasonable to believe that one time or other this gracious declaration and promise of God was made good to them.

And therefore the Apostle to the Hebrews, chap. 11. from this very expression of God's being said to be the God of Abraham and others, argues that some extraordinary happiness was reserved for them in another world: and that upon this very ground I am now speaking of, namely, because the condition of Abraham and some others, was not such in this world as might seem to answer the fulness of this promise. All these, says he, died in the faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims upon the Earth. From whence he reasons very strongly, that these good men might reasonably expect something better than any thing that had befallen them in this World. For they, says he, that say such things, declare plainly that they seek a Country; which at the 16th verse he calls a better Country, that is a heavenly. They that say such things; that is, they who acknowledge themselves themselves to be strangers and pilgrims in the Earth, and yet pretend that God hath promised to be their God, declare plainly that they expect some reward beyond this life. From all which he concludes, Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, because he hath prepared for them a City, intimating that if no happiness had remained for these good men in another world, this promise of God's being their God, would shamefully have fallen short of what it seemed to import, viz. some extraordinary reward and blessing worthy of God to bestow; something more certain and lasting, than any of the enjoyments of this world; which since God had abundantly performed to them in the happiness of another life, his promise to them was made good to the full, and he needed not be ashamed to be called their God. But if nothing beyond this life had been reserved for them, that Saying of old Jacob towards the conclusion of his life, few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, would have been an eternal reflection upon the truth and faithfulness of him who had so often called himself the God of Jacob.

But now, because to all this it may be said, that this Promise seems to have been made good to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in this world: For was not God the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, when he took such a particular and extraordinary care of them, and protected them from the manifold dangers they were exposed to by such a special and immediate providence, suffering no one to do them harm, but rebuking even Kings for their sakes? Was not he Abraham's God, when he blest him so miraculously with a Son in his old Age, and with so considerable an estate to leave to him? Was not that Saying of Jacob a great acknowledgment of the gracious providence of God towards him, With my staff passed I over this Jordan, and now I am become two bands? And though it must needs be a very cutting affliction to him to lose his Son Joseph, as he thought he had done, yet that was more than recompenced to him in Joseph's strange advancement in Egypt, whereby God put into his Hands the opportunity of saving his Father and his whole Family alive. And was not God the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in making them Fathers of so numerous an off-spring, as afterwards became a great Nation: and in giving them a fruitful Land; and bringing them to the quiet possession of it by such a series of wonderful Miracles? what need then is there of extending this promise to another world? doth it not seem abundantly made good in those great blessings which God bestowed upon them whilst they liv'd, and afterwards upon their posterity, in this world? And does not this agree well enough with the first and most obvious sense of these words, I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; that is, I am he that was their God while they were alive, and am still the God of their posterity for their sakes; I say, because the three former Considerations are liable to this Objection, which seems wholly to take off the force of this Argument; therefore, for the full clearing of this matter, I will add one consideration more.

Fourthly then, we will consider the general importance of this Promise, abstracting from the particular persons specified and named in it, viz. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and that is, that God will make a wide and plain difference between good and bad men; he will be so the God of good men as he is not of the wicked: and some time or other put every good man into a better and happier condition than any wicked man: so that the general importance of this promise is finally resolved into the equity and justice of the Divine Providence.

And unless we suppose another life after this, it will certainly be very hard, and I think impossible, to reconcile the History of the Old Testament, and the common appearances of things in this World, with the Justice and Goodness of God's Providence.

It cannot be denied, but that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and several good men in the Old Testament, had many signal Testimonies of the divine favour vouchsafed to them in this world: But we read likewise of several wicked men that had as large a share of temporal blessings. It is very true that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, had great estates, and were petty Princes: But Pharaoh was a mighty Prince in comparison of them; and the Kingdom of Egypt, which probably was the first and chief seat of Idolatry, was at the same time one of the most potent and flourishing Kingdoms in the world: and was blest with a prodigious plenty, whereby they were furnished with store of Corn when good Jacob and his Family had like to have perished by famine. 'Tis true, Joseph was advanc'd to great power in Egypt, and thereby had the opportunity of saving his Father's house, by selling them, and feeding them in Egypt: But then it is to be considered again, that this cost them very dear, and their coming thither was the occasion of a long and cruel bondage to Jacob's Posterity, so that we see that these good men had no such blessings, but what were common with them to many others that were wicked: and the blessings which God bestowed upon them, had great abatements by the intermixture of many and sore afflictions.

It seems then upon the whole matter, to be very plain, that the Providences of God in this world towards good men are so contriv'd, that it may sufficiently appear, to those who wisely consider the works of God, that they are not neglected by him; and yet that these outward blessings are so promiscuously dispensed, that no man can certainly be concluded to be a good man from any happiness he enjoys in this life; And the prosperity of good men is usually on purpose so shadowed and mixed with afflictions, as may justly raise their hopes, to the expectation of a more perfect happiness and better reward, than any they meet with in this world.

And if so, then the general importance of this Promise, that God will be the God of good men, must necessarily signify something beyond this world: Because in this world there is not that clear difference universally made between good and bad men which the Justice of the Divine Providence doth require, and which seems to be intended, in the general sense of this Promise. For if this Promise (though personally made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob) be intended, as the Scripture tells us it was for a standing encouragement to good men in all Ages, then it must contain in it this general Truth, that God will some time or other plentifully reward every good man; that is, he will do something far better for him, than for any wicked man: But if there be no life after this, it is impossible to reconcile this sense of it with the course of God's Providence, and with the History of the Bible.

And to make this out fully, and at once, I will only produce that single instance of Abel and Cain. Abel offer'd to God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, and he had this testimony, that he pleased God; which was in effect to declare, that God was the God of Abel, and not of Cain; so that by virtue of the general importance of this Promise, it might justly be expected, that Abel's condition should have been much better than Cain's:
But

But if there be no happiness after this life, Abel's was evidently much worse. For upon this very account, that he pleased God better, he was killed by Cain, who had offered to God a slight and contemptuous offering. And Cain lived a long time after, and grew great, and built Cities. Now supposing there were no other life after this, this must have been a most horrible Example to all Ages, from the beginning of the world to the end of it, and have made men for ever afraid to please God upon such hard terms; when they were sure of no other reward for so doing, but to be oppress'd and slain by the hands of the wicked. So that if this were really the Case, it would puzzle all the Wit and Reason of mankind to vindicate the equity and justice of the Divine Providence, and to rescue it out of the hands of this terrible Objection.

And thus have I as briefly as I could, endeavour'd to clear to you the force of this Argument used by our Saviour for the proof of the Resurrection. And have the longer insisted upon it, because at first appearance it seems to be but a very obscure and remote Argument: And yet so much the more necessary to be clear'd, because this in all probability was that very Text upon which the Jews in our Saviour's time grounded their belief of a future state, in opposition to the error of the Sadduces; and which they call'd by way of eminency the promise made of God unto the Fathers. As will plainly appear, if we consider what St. Paul says to this purpose; when he appeals so often to the Pharisees for his agreement with them in this Article of the Resurrection, and likewise in the ground of it from the promise made of God unto the fathers. Acts 24. 14, 15. But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresie, so worship I the God of my Fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets; and have hope towards God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead. From whence it is clear, that they both grounded their hope of the resurrection upon something written in the Law and the Prophets: and what that was, he expresseth more particular, c. 26. v. 6, 7. And now I stand, and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers; unto which promise our twelve Tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. By the promise made of God unto the Fathers, he means some promise made by God to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; for so St. Luke more than once, in his History of the Acts, explains this phrase of the God of their Fathers, Acts 3. 13. The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our Fathers; and c. 7. v. 32. I am the God of thy Fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Now what was the great and famous Promise which God made to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? was it not this of being their God? So that it was this very Promise upon which St. Paul tells us, the Jews grounded their hope of a future state, because they understood it necessarily to signify some blessing and happiness beyond this life.

And now having, I hope, sufficiently clear'd this matter, I shall make some improvement of this Doctrine, of a future state, and that to these three purposes.

I. To raise our minds above this world, and the enjoyments of this present life. Were but men thoroughly convinced of this plain and certain Truth, that there is a vast difference between Time and Eternity, between a few years and everlasting Ages: would we but represent to our selves what thoughts and apprehensions dying persons have of this world; world ; how vain and empty a thing it appears to them, how like a pageant and a shadow it looks as it passeth away from them, methinks none of these things could be a sufficient temptation to any man to forget God and his soul ; but notwithstanding all the delights and pleasures of sense, we should be strangely intent upon the concerns of another world, and almost wholly taken up, with the thoughts of that vast Eternity which we are ready to launch into. For what is there in this world, this waste and howling wilderness, this rude and barbarous Country which we are but to pass through, which should detain our affections here, and take off our thoughts from our everlasting habitation ; from that better and that heavenly Country, where we hope to live and be happy for ever ?

If we settle our affections upon the enjoyments of this present Life, so as to be extremely pleas'd and transported with them, and to say in our hearts, It is good for us to be here ; if we be excessively griev'd or discontented for the want or loss of them, and if we look upon our present state in this world any otherwise than as a preparation and passage to a better life, it is a sign that our faith and hope of the happiness of another life is but very weak and faint, and that we do not heartily and in good earnest believe what we pretend to do concerning these things. For did we stedfastly believe and were thoroughly perswaded of what our Religion so plainly declares to us concerning the unspeakable and endless happiness of good men in another world, our affections would sit more loose to this world, and our hopes would raise our hearts as much above these present and sensible things, as the heavens are high above the earth ; we should value nothing here below, but as it serves for our present support and passage, or may be made a means to secure and encrease our future felicity.

2. The consideration of another Life should quicken our preparation for that blessed state which remains for us in the other world. This Life is a state of probation and trial. This world is God's school, where immortal spirits clothed with flesh are trained and bred up for eternity. And then certainly it is not an indifferent thing, and a matter of slight concernment to us, how we live and demean our selves in this world ; whether we indulge our selves in ungodliness and worldly lusts, or live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world : No ; it is a matter of infinite moment, as much as our Souls and all Eternity are worth. Let us not deceive our selves ; for as we sow, so shall we reap : If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption ; but if we sow to the spirit, we shall of the spirit reap everlasting life. Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. The righteous hath hopes in his death. Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.

But the ungodly are not so : whoever hath lived a wicked and vicious life, feels strange throws and pangs in his conscience when he comes to be cast upon a sick bed. The wicked is like the troubled sea (saith the Prophet) when it cannot rest ; full of trouble and confusion, especially in a dying hour. It is death to such a man to look back upon his life, and a hell to him to think of eternity. When his guilty and trembling Soul is ready to leave his Body, and just stepping into the other world, what horror and amazement do then seize upon him ? what a rage doth such a man feel in his breast, when he seriously considers, that he hath been so great a fool as for the false and imperfect pleasure of a few days, to make himself miserable for ever ?

3. Let the consideration of that unspeakable Reward which God hath promised to good men at the Resurrection, encourage us to obedience and a holy life. We serve a great Prince who is able to promote us to honour ; a most gracious Master who will not let the least service we do for him pass unrewarded. This is the inference which the Apostle makes from this large discourse of the Doctrine of the Resurrection, 1 Cor. 15. 58. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the Work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord. Nothing will make death more welcome to us, than a constant course of service and obedience to God. Sleep, saith Solomon, is sweet to the labouring man : so after a great diligence and industry in working out our own salvation, and (as it is said of David) serving our generation according to the will of God, how pleasant will it be to fall asleep ? And as an useful and well-spent life will make our death to be sweet, so our Resurrection to be glorious. Whatever acts of Piety we do to God, or of charity to men ; whatever we lay out upon the poor and afflicted, and necessitous, will all be considered by God in the day of recompences, and most plentifully rewarded to us.

And surely no consideration ought to be more prevalent to persuade us to alms-deeds and charity to the poor, than that of a Resurrection to another life. Besides the promises of this life which are made to works of charity, and there is not any grace or virtue whatsoever, which hath so many and so great promises of temporal blessings made to it in Scripture as this grace of Charity ; I say, besides the promises of this Life, the great promise of eternal Life is in Scripture in a more especial manner entail'd upon it. Luke 12. 33. Give alms, saith our Saviour, provide your selves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not ; and c. 16. v. 9. make to your selves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye shall fail they may receive you into everlasting habitations. And 1 Tim. 6. 17, 18, 19. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, &c. that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal Life ; the word θεμελίον, which our Translation renders foundation, according to the common use of it, seems in this place to have a more peculiar Notion, and to signify the security that is given by a pledge, or by an instrument or obligation of contract for the performance of Covenants. For besides that the phrase of laying up in store, or treasuring up a foundation, seems to be a very odd jumbling of metaphors ; this very word θεμελίον almost necessarily requires this notion as it is used by the same Apostle, in his second Epistle to Timothy, chap. 2. v. 19. where it is said, the foundation of God stands sure, having this seal, &c. a seal being very improper to strengthen a foundation, but very fit to confirm a Covenant. And then surely it ought to be render'd, the Covenant of God remains firm, having this seal. And so likewise in the foremention'd Text, the sense will be much more easy and current if we render it thus, treasuring up, or providing for themselves a good security or pledge against the time to come ; I add pledge, because that anciently was the common way of security for things lent : besides that the Apostle seems plainly to allude to that passage, Tobit 4. 8, 9. If thou hast abundance, give alms accordingly, &c. for thou layest up a good treasure for thy self against the day of necessity, δῖμα δ' ἀγαθὸν ἐκποιεῖς, for thou treasurest up for thy self a good Pledge ; to which this of the Apostle exactly answers, ἀποθηκεύεις ἑαυτοῖς θεμελίον καλόν, treasuring up, or providing for themselves a good pledge or security, &c. the sense however is plain, that the charity of Alms is one of the best ways of securing our future happiness.

And yet further to encourage us to abound in works of charity, the Scripture tells us, that proportionably to the degrees of our charity shall be the degrees of our reward; upon this consideration the Apostle exhorts the Corinthians to be liberal in their Charity, 2 Cor. 9. 6. he that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly, but he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully. So that whatever we lay out in this kind, is to the greatest advantage, and upon the best security; two considerations which use to be very prevalent with rich men to lay out their money.

We certainly do it to the greatest advantage; because God will consider the very smallest thing that any of us do in this kind. He that shall give so much as a cup of cold water to a disciple, in the name of a disciple, shall not lose his reward; these last words shall not lose his reward, are a misnomer, and signify much more than they seem to speak, viz. that he shall have a very great reward, infinitely beyond the value of what he hath done.

And we do it likewise upon the best security; so Solomon assures us, Prov. 19. 17. He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given he will pay him again: and we may be confident of our security where God is surety; nay, he tells us that in this case he looks upon himself as principal, and that whatever we do in ways of mercy and charity to the poor, he takes as done to himself. So our Lord hath told us, Matth. 25. 40. and we shall hear the same from him again out of his own mouth, when he shall appear in his Majesty to judge the world, Then the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

And on the other side, the Scripture no where passeth a more severe doom upon any sort of persons, than upon those who have no bowels of compassion towards their brethren in distress. That is a fearful sentence indeed, which the Apostle pronounceth upon such persons, James 2. 13. He shall have judgment without mercy that hath shewed no mercy. And this our Saviour represents to us in a most solemn manner, in that lively description which he makes of the Judgment of the great day, Matth. 25. 31. &c. When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats. And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you, before the foundation of the world. For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall He say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels: For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat, &c. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal. And if this be, as most certainly it is, a true and proper representation of the process of that Day, then the great matter of enquiry will be, What works of charity and mercy have been done or neglected by us, and accordingly a Sentence of eternal happiness, or misery, will be pass'd upon us: I was hungry, did ye feed me, or did ye not? I was naked, did ye cloth me, or did ye not? I was sick and in prison, did ye visit me, or did ye not? Not but that all the good or evil of our lives, in what kind soever, shall then be brought to account; But that our Saviour did chuse to instance particularly, and only in things of this nature, should methinks make a mighty impression upon us, and be a powerful consideration to oblige us to have a very peculiar regard to works of mercy and charity, and to make sure to abound in this Grace; that when we shall appear before the great Judge of the World, we may find that mercy from Him, which we have shew'd to others, and which we shall all undoubtedly stand in need of in that Day.

And among all our acts of charity, those which are done upon least probability and foresight of their meeting with any recompence in this world, either by way of real requital or of fame and reputation, as they are of all other most acceptable to God, so they will certainly have the most ample reward in another world. So our Lord hath assured us, and accordingly adviseth us, Luke 14. 12, 13, 14. When thou makest a feast, invite not the rich, because they will recompense thee again: but call the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind, for they cannot recompense thee, but thou shalt be recompenced at the resurrection of the just. If we be Religious for worldly ends and serve God, and do good to men, only in contemplation of some temporal advantage, we take up with present payment, and cut our selves short of our future reward: of such, saith our Lord, Verily I say unto you, they have their reward: they are their own security, and have taken care to satisfy themselves, and therefore are to expect nothing from God. But let us who call our selves Christians do something for God, for which we have no hopes to be recompenced in this world; that we may shew that we trust God, and take his word, and dare venture upon the security of the next world, and that recompence which shall be made at the resurrection of the just.

And how great and glorious that shall be, our Saviour teach us immediately before my Text. They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, they can die no more, but they are equal to the Angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the Resurrection. If then we be heirs of such glorious hopes, and believe that he who is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, will also be our God: let us live as it becomes the Candidates of heaven, and the children of the Resurrection, and such as verily believe another life after this, and hope one day to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the Kingdom of God.

And now that I have represented to you what encouragement there is to well-doing, and particularly to works of Charity, from the consideration of the blessed reward we shall certainly meet with at the Resurrection of the just; I shall crave your patience a little longer, whilst I propose to you one of the fairest Examples of this kind which either this, or perhaps any other Age could easily present us withal: I mean our deceased Brother to whom we are now paying our last solemn respects, the Reverend Mr. THOMAS GOUGE; the worthy Son of a reverend and learned Divine of this City, Dr. William Gouge; who was Minister of this Parish of Black Friars six and forty years; he dyed in 1653, and still lives in the memory of many here present.

I must confess that I am no friend to Funeral Panegyrics, where there is nothing of extraordinary worth and merit in the party commended to give occasion and foundation for them: In such cases, as praises are not due to the dead, so they may be of ill consequence to the living: not only by bringing those of our profession that make a practice of it, under the suspicion of officious and mercenary flattery, but likewise by encouraging men to hope that they also may be well spoken of, and even Sainted when they are dead, though they should have done little or no good in their life : But yet on the other hand, to commend those excellent Persons the vertues of whose lives have been bright and exemplary , is not only a piece of justice due to the dead, but an Act of great charity to the living, setting a pattern of well-doing before our eyes, very apt and powerful to incite and encourage us to go and do likewise.

Upon both these Considerations, first to do right to the memory of so good a man, and then in hopes that the example may prove fruitful and have a considerable effect upon others to beget the like goodness and charity in them, I shall endeavour, in as narrow a compass as may be, to give you the just character of this truly pious and charitable Man, and by setting his life in a true light to recommend with all the advantage I can so excellent a pattern to your imitation.

He was born at Bow near Stratford in the County of Middlesex the 19th day of September 1605. He was bred at Eaton School, and from thence chosen to King's College in Cambridge, being about 20 years of Age, in the year 1626. After he had finish'd the course of his studies, and taken his Degrees, he left the University and his Fellowship, being presented to the living of Colden near Croyden in Surrey, where he continued about two or three years; and from thence was remov'd to St. Sepulchres in London, in the year 1638. and the year after thinking fit to change his condition match'd into a very worthy and ancient Family, marrying one of the Daughters of Sir Robert Darcy.

Being thus settled in this large and populous Parish, he did with great solicitude and pains discharge all the parts of a vigilant and faithful Minister, for above the space of 24 years. For besides his constant and weekly labour of preaching, he was very diligent and charitable in visiting the sick, and ministering not only spiritual counsel and comfort to them, but likewise liberal relief to the wants and necessities of those that were poor and destitute of means to help themselves, in that condition. He did also every morning throughout the year Catechise in the Church, especially the poorer sort who were generally most ignorant; and to encourage them to come thither to be instructed by him, he did once a week distribute money among them, not upon a certain day, but changing it on purpose as he thought good, that he might thereby oblige them to be constantly present; These were chiefly the more aged poor, who being past labour had leisure enough to attend upon this exercise. As for the other sort of poor who were able to work for their living, he set them at work upon his own charge, buying Flax and Hemp for them to spin, and what they spun he took off their hands, paying them for their work, and then got it wrought into Cloth, and sold it as he could, chiefly among his friends, himself bearing the whole loss. And this was a very wise and well-chosen way of charity, and in the good effect of it a much greater charity than if he had given these very persons freely and for nothing so much as they earned by their work; because by this means he took many off from begging, and thereby rescued them at once from two of the most dangerous temptations of this world, Idleness and Poverty; and by degrees reclaim'd them to a vertuous and industrious course of life, which enabled them afterwards to live without being beholden to the charity of others.

And this course so happily devis'd and begun by Mr. Gouge in his own Parish was I think that which gave the first hint to that worthy and useful Citizen Mr. Thomas Firmin of a much larger design, which hath been prosecuted by him for some years with that vigour and good success in this City, that that many hundreds of poor Children, and others who liv'd idle before, unprofitable both to themselves and the publick, are continually maintain'd at work, and taught to earn their own livelihood much in the same way : He being, by the generous assistance and charity of many worthy and well-dispos'd Persons of all ranks, enabled to bear the unavoidable loss and charge of so vast an undertaking ; and by his own forward inclination to charity, and his unwearied diligence and activity, extraordinarily fitted to sustain and go through the incredible pains of it.

But to return to our deceased Friend ; concerning whom I must content my self to pass over many things worthy to be remembred of him, and to speak only of those Vertues of his which were more eminent and remarkable.

Of his Piety towards God, which is the necessary foundation of all other Graces and Vertues, I shall only say this, That it was great and quiet without stir and noise, and much more in Substance and Reality, than in shew and ostentation ; and did not consist in censuring and finding fault with others, but in the due care and Government of his own life and actions, and exercising himself, continually to have a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men ; in which he was such a proficient, that even after a long acquaintance and familiar conversation with him, it was not easie to observe any thing that might deserve blame.

He particularly excell'd in the more peculiar vertues of conversation, in modesty, humility, meekness, cheerfulness, and in kindness and charity towards all men.

So great was his modesty, that it never appear'd either by word or action that he put any value upon himself. This I have often observ'd in him, that the Charities which were procur'd chiefly by his Application and Industry, when he had occasion to give an account of them, he would rather impute to any one who had but the least hand and part in the obtaining of them, than assume any thing of it to himself. Another instance of his modesty was, that when he had quitted his Living of St. Sepulchres upon some dissatisfaction about the terms of conformity, he willingly forbore preaching, saying there was no need of him here in London where there were so many worthy Ministers, and that he thought he might do as much or more good in another way which could give no offence. Only in the latter years of his life, being better satisfy'd in some things he had doubted of before, He had License from some of the Bishops to preach in Wales in his progress ; which he was the more willing to do, because in some places he saw great need of it, and he thought he might do it with greater advantage among the poor People, who were the more likely to regard his instructions, being recommended by his great charity so well known to them, and of which they had so long had the experience and benefit. But where there was no such need, he was very well contented to hear others persuade men to goodness and to practise it himself.

He was clothed with humility, and had in a most eminent degree that ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which St. Peter says, is in the sight of God of so great price : So that there was not the least appearance either of Pride or Passion in any of his words or actions. He was not only free from anger and bitterness, but from all affected gravity and moroseness. His conversation was affable and pleasant ; he had a wonderful serenity of mind and evenness of temper, visible in his very countenance ; he was hardly ever merry, but never melancholy and sad ; and for any thing I could discern, after a long and intimate acquaintance with him, he was upon all occasions and accidents perpetually the same ; always cheerful, and always kind ; of a disposition ready to embrace and oblige all men ; allowing others to differ from him, even in opinions that were very dear to him ; and provided men did but fear God and work Righteousness, he lov'd them heartily, how distant soever from him in judgment about things less necessary ; In all which he is very worthy to be a pattern for men of all Perswasions whatsoever.

But that Vertue which of all other shone brightest in him, and was his most proper and peculiar character, was his cheerful and unwearied diligence in acts of pious Charity. In this he left far behind him all that ever I knew, and, as I said before, had a singular sagacity and prudence in devising the most effectual ways of doing good, and in managing and disposing his charity to the best purposes, and to the greatest extent ; always if it were possible, making it to serve some end of Piety and Religion ; as the instructions of poor children in the Principles of Religion, and furnishing grown persons that were ignorant with the Bible and other Books ; strictly obliging those to whom he gave them to a diligent reading of them, and when he had opportunity exacting of them an account how they had profited by them.

In his occasional Alms to the poor, in which he was very free and bountiful, the relief he gave them was always mingled with good counsel, and as great a tenderness and compassion for their souls as bodies : which very often attain'd the good effect it was likely to have, the one making way for the other with so much advantage, and men being very apt to follow the good advice of those, who give them in hand so sensible a pledge and testimony of their good will to them.

This kind of charity must needs be very expensive to him, but he had a plentiful estate settled upon him, and left him by his Father, and he laid it out as liberally in the most prudent and effectual ways of Charity he could think of, and upon such persons as, all circumstances consider'd, he judg'd to be the fittest and most proper objects of it.

For about nine or ten years last past he did, as is well known to many here present, almost wholly apply his charity to Wales ; because there he judg'd was most occasion for it : And because this was a very great work, he did not only lay out upon it whatever he could spare out of his own estate, but employ'd his whole time and pains to excite and engage the charity of others for his assistance in it.

And in this he had two excellent designs. One, to have poor children brought up to read and write, and to be carefully instructed in the Principles of Religion : The other, to furnish persons of grown Age, the poor especially, with the necessary helps and means of knowledge, as the Bible, and other Books of piety and devotion, in their own Language ; to which end he procur'd the Church Catechism, the Practice of Piety, and that best of Books the Whole Duty of Man, besides several other pious and useful Treatises, some of them to be translated into the Welsh Tongue, and great numbers of all them to be printed, and sent down to the chief Towns in Wales, to be sold at easy rates to those that were able to buy them, and to be freely given to those that were not.

And in both these designs, through the blessing of God upon his unwearied endeavours, he found very great success. For by the large and bountiful contributions which chiefly by his industry and prudent application were obtain'd from charitable Persons of all Ranks and Conditions, from the Nobility and Gentry of Wales and the neighbouring Counties, and several of that Quality in and about London ; from divers of the Right Reverend Bishops,

Bishops, and of the Clergy ; and from that perpetual fountain of charity the City of London, led on and encourag'd by the most bountiful example of the Right honourable the Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen ; to all which he constantly added two Thirds of his own estate, which as I have been credibly inform'd was two hundred pounds a year ; I say, by all these together there were every year eight hundred, sometimes a thousand poor children educated as I said before ; and by this example several of the most considerable Towns of Wales were excited to bring up at their own charge the like number of poor children, in the like manner, and under his inspection and care.

He likewise gave very great numbers of the Books above mention'd both in the Welsh and English Tongues to the poorer sort, so many as were unable to buy them, and willing to read them. But which was the greatest work of all, and amounted indeed to a mighty charge, he procured a new and very fair Impression of the Bible and Liturgy of the Church of England in the Welsh Tongue (the former Impression being spent, and hardly twenty of them to be had in all London,) to the number of eight thousand ; one thousand whereof were freely given to the poor, and the rest sent to the principal Cities and Towns in Wales to be sold to the rich at very reasonable and low rates, viz. at four shillings apiece well bound and clasped ; which was much cheaper than any English Bible was ever sold that was of so fair a print and paper : A work of that charge, that it was not likely to have been done any other way ; And for which this Age, and perhaps the next, will have great cause to thank God on his behalf.

In these good works he employed all his time and care and pains, and his whole heart was in them ; so that he was very little affected with any thing else, and seldom either minded or knew any thing of the strange occurrences of this troublesome and busie Age, such as I think are hardly to be parallel'd in any other. Or if he did mind them, he scarce ever spoke any thing about them. For this was the business he laid to heart, and knowing it to be so much and so certainly the Will of his heavenly Father, it was his meat and drink to be doing of it : and the good success he had in it was a continual feast to him, and gave him a perpetual serenity both of mind and countenance. His great love and zeal for this work made all the pains and difficulties of it seem nothing to him : He would rise early and sit up late, and continued the same diligence and industry to the last, though he was in the threescore and seventeenth year of his Age. And that he might manage the distribution of this great charity with his own hands, and see the good effect of it with his own eyes, he always once, but usually twice a year, at his own charge travelled over a great part of Wales, none of the best Countries to travel in : But for the love of God and men he endured all that, together with the extremity of heat and cold (which in their several seasons are both very great there) not only with patience but with pleasure. So that all things considered there have not, since the primitive times of Christianity, been many among the sons of men to whom that glorious character of the Son of God might be better applied, that he went about doing good. And Wales may as worthily boast of this truly Apostolical man, as of their famous St. David ; who was also very probably a good man, as those times of ignorance and superstition went. But his goodness is so disguised by their fabulous Legends and stories which give us the account of him, that it is not easie to discover it. Indeed ridiculous miracles in abundance are reported of him ; as, that upon occasion of a great number of people resorting from all parts to hear him him preach, for the greater advantage of his being heard, a mountain all on a sudden rose up miraculously under his feet, and his voice was extended to that degree that he might be distinctly heard for two or three miles round about. Such phantastical miracles as these make up a great part of his History. And admitting all these to be true (which a wise man would be loath to do) our departed Friend had that which is much greater and more excellent than all these, a fervent charity to God and men; which is more than to speak (as they would make us believe St. David did) with the tongue of men and Angels, more than to raise or remove mountains.

And now methinks it is pity so good a design so happily prosecuted should fall and die with this good man. And it is now under deliberation, if possible, still to continue and carry it on, and a very worthy and charitable person pitched upon for that purpose, who is willing to undertake that part which he that is gone performed so well: But this will depend upon the continuance of the former Charities and the concurrence of those worthy and well-disposed persons in Wales to contribute their part as formerly; which I perswade my self they will cheerfully do. I will add but one thing more concerning our deceased Brother, that though he meddled not at all in our present heats and differences as a Party, having much better things to mind; yet as a looker on he did very sadly lament them, and for several of the last years of his life he continued in the Communion of our Church, and, as he himself told me, thought himself oblig'd in conscience so to do.

He died in the 77th year of his Age, Octob. 29th, 1681. It so pleased God that his death was very sudden; and so sudden, that in all probability he himself hardly perceived it when it happened, for he died in his sleep; so that we may say of him, as it is said of David, after he had served his generation according to the will of God, he fell asleep.

I confess that a sudden death is generally undesirable, and therefore with reason we pray against it; because so very few are sufficiently prepared for it: But to him the constant employment of whose life was the best preparation for death that was possible, no death could be sudden; nay, it was rather a favour and blessing to him, because by how much the more sudden so much the more easie: As if God had designed to begin the reward of the great pains of his life in an easie death. And indeed it was rather a translation than a death; and, saving that his body was left behind, what was said of Enoch may not unfitly be applied to this pious and good man with respect to the suddenness of his change; he walked with God, and was not, for God took him.

And God grant that we who survive may all of us sincerely endeavour to tread in the steps of his exemplary piety and charity; of his labour of love, his unwearied diligence and patient continuance in doing good, that we may meet with that encouraging commendation which he hath already received from the mouth of our Lord, Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the Joy of thy Lord.

Now the God of Peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you always that which is pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; To whom be glory for ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XXIV.

Preached at the Funeral of the Reverend Benjamin Whitchot, D. D. May 24th, 1683.

2 Cor. V. 6.

Wherefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord.

These Words contain one of the chief grounds of encouragement which the Christian Religion gives us against the fear of death. For our clearer understanding of them it will be requisite to consider the Context, looking back as far as the beginning of the Chapter; where the Apostle pursues the argument of the foregoing Chapter; which was to comfort and encourage Christians under their afflictions and sufferings from this consideration, that these did but prepare the way for a greater and more glorious reward; Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And suppose the worst, that these sufferings should extend to death, there is comfort for us likewise in this case, ver. 1. of this Chapter, For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, &c. If our earthly house of this tabernacle; he calls our body an earthly house, and that we may not look upon it as a certain abode and fixed habitation, he doth by way of correction of himself add, that it is but a tabernacle or tent which must shortly be taken down: And when it is, we shall have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. This is a description of our heavenly habitation, in opposition to our earthly house or tabernacle: It is a building of God, not like those houses or tabernacles which men build, and which are liable to decay and dissolution, to be taken down, or to fall down of themselves, for such are those houses of clay which we dwell in, whose foundations are in the dust, but an habitation prepared by God himself, a house not made with hands; that which is the immediate work of God being in Scripture opposed to that which is made with hands and effected by humane concurrence, and by natural means: And being the immediate work of God, as it is excellent, so it is lasting and durable, which no earthly thing is: eternal in the heavens, that is, eternal and heavenly.

For in this we groan earnestly; that is, while we are in this body we groan by reason of the pressures and afflictions of it. Desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. Desiring to be clothed upon; that is, we could wish not to put off these bodies, not to be strip'd of them by death, but to be of the number of those who at the coming of our Lord without the putting off these bodies shall be changed and clothed upon with their house which is from heaven, and without dying be invested with those spiritual and glorious and heavenly bodies which men shall have at the Resurrection.

This I doubt not is the Apostle's meaning in these words; in which he speaks according to a common opinion among the Disciples grounded (as St. John tells us) upon a mistake of our Saviour's words concerning him, If I will that he tarry till I come: upon which St. John tells us, that there went a saying among the Brethren, that that disciple should not die; that is, that he should live till Christ's coming to Judgment, and then be changed; and consequently that Christ would come to Judgment before the end of that Age. Suitable to this common opinion among Christians, the Apostle here says, in this we groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. It hath puzzled Interpreters what to make of this passage, and well it might; for whatever be meant by being clothed, how can they that are clothed be found naked? but I think it is very clear that our Translators have not attained the true sense of this passage, Εἰ καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐνδύμεθα, ὃ γυμνοὶ ἀπεδοίμεθα, which is most naturally rendred thus, If so be we shall be found clothed, and not naked: That is, if the coming of Christ shall find us in the body and not divested of it; if at Christ's coming to Judgment we shall be found alive and not dead. And then the sense of the whole is very clear and current; we are desirous to be clothed upon with our house from heaven (that is, with our spiritual and immortal bodies) if so be it shall so happen that at the coming of Christ we shall be found alive in these bodies, and not stripp'd of them before by death. And then it follows, For we that are in this tabernacle do groan being burthened (that is, with the afflictions and pressures of this life) not that we would be unclothed (that is, not that we desire by death to be divested of these bodies) but clothed upon (that is, if God see it good we had rather be found alive, and changed, and without putting off these bodies have immortality as it were superinduced) that so mortality might be swallowed up of life. The plain sense is, that he rather desires (if it may be) to be of the number of those who shall be found alive at the coming of Christ, and have this mortal and corruptible body while they are clothed with it, changed into a spiritual and incorruptible body, without the pain and terrour of dying: of which immediate translation into heaven without the painful divorce of soul and body by death, Enoch and Elias were examples in the old Testament.

It follows, ver. 5. Now he that hath wrought for us the self-same thing is God: That is, it is he who hath fitted and prepared us for this Glorious change: who also hath given us the earnest of the Spirit. The spirit is frequently in Scripture called the witness and seal and earnest of our future happiness and blessed Resurrection or change of these vile and earthly bodies into spiritual and heavenly bodies. For as the resurrection of Christ from the dead by the power of the holy Ghost is the great proof and evidence of immortality: so the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelling in us is the pledge and earnest of our Resurrection to an immortal life.

From all which the Apostle concludes in the words of the Text, Therefore we are always confident, that is, we are always of good courage against the fear of death, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord, ὡς τοὶ σωματὶ ἐνδημῶντες which may better be rendred whilst we converse or sojourn in the body, than whilst we are at home; Because the design of the Apostle is to shew that the body is not our house but our tabernacle; and that whilst we are in the body we are not at home, but pilgrims and strangers. And this notion the Heathens had of our present life and condition in this world. Ex vita discedo (saith Tully) tantum ex hospitio non tanquam ex domo; commorandi enim natura diverforium nobis, non habitandi locum dedit. We go out of this life as it were from an Inn, and not from our home; nature having designed it to us as a place to sojourn but not to dwell in.

We are absent from the Lord; that is, we are detained from the blessed sight and enjoyment of God, and kept out of the possession of that happiness which makes Heaven.

So that the Apostle makes an immediate opposition between our continuance in the body, and our blissful enjoyment of God; and lays it down for a certain truth, that whilst we remain in the body we are detained from our happiness, and that so soon as ever we leave the body we shall be admitted into it, knowing, that whilst we converse in the body we are absent from the Lord. And ver. 8. we are willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord; intimating that so soon as we quit these bodies we shall be admitted to the blessed sight and enjoyment of God.

My design from this Text is to draw some useful Corollaries or Conclusions from this Assertion of the Apostle, That whilst we are in these bodies we are detained from our happiness; and that so soon as ever we depart out of them we shall be admitted to the possession and enjoyment of it. And they are these,

1. This Assertion shews us the vanity and falshood of that Opinion, or rather dream, concerning the sleep of the soul from the time of death till the general Resurrection. This is chiefly grounded upon that frequent Metaphor in Scripture by which death is resembled to sleep, and those that are dead are said to be fallen asleep. But this Metaphor is no where in Scripture, that I know of, applied to the soul but to the body resting in the grave in order to its being awakened and raised up at the Resurrection. And thus it is frequently used with express reference to the body, *Dan. 12. 2. Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake. Matth. 27. 52. And the graves were opened, and many bodies of saints which slept arose, Acts 13. 36. David after he had served his own generation by the will of God fell on sleep, and was laid to his fathers and saw corruption; which surely can no otherwise be understood than of his body, 1 Cor. 5. 21. Now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept, that is, the resurrection of of his body is the earnest and assurance that ours also shall be raised. And ver. 51. We shall not all sleep, but shall all be changed; where the Apostle certainly speaks both of the death and change of these corruptible bodies. 1 Thessal. 4. 14. If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with him: That is, the bodies of those that died in the Lord shall be raised, and accompany him at his coming. So that it is the body which is said in Scripture to sleep, and not the Soul. For that is utterly inconsistent with the Apostle's Assertion here in the Text, that while we are in the body we are absent from the Lord, and that so soon as we depart out of the body we shall be present with the Lord. For surely to be with the Lord must signifie a state of happiness, which sleep is not, but only of inactivity: Besides, that the Apostle's Argument would be very flat, and it would be but a cold encouragement against the fear of death, that so soon as we are dead we shall fall asleep and become insensible. But the Apostle useth it is an Argument why we should be willing to die as soon as God pleaseth, and the sooner the better, because so soon as we quit these bodies we shall be present with the Lord, that is, admitted to the blissful sight and enjoyment.*

enjoyment of him : and while we abide in the body we are detained from our happiness : But if our souls shall sleep as well as our bodies till the general Resurrection, it is all one whether we continue in the body or not, as to any happiness we shall enjoy in the mean time ; which is directly contrary to the main scope of the Apostle's Argument.

2. This Assertion of the Apostle's doth perfectly conclude against the feigned Purgatory of the Church of Rome ; which supposeth the far greater number of true and faithful Christians, of those who dye in the Lord, and have obtained eternal redemption by him from hell not to pass immediately into a state of happiness, but to be detain'd in the suburbs of Hell in extremity of torment (equal to that of hell for degree, though not for duration) till their souls be purged, and the guilt of temporal punishments, which they are liable to, be some way or other paid off and discharged. They suppose indeed some very few holy persons (especially those who suffer Martyrdom) to be so perfect at their departure out of the body as to pass immediately into Heaven, because they need no purgation : But most Christians they suppose to dye so imperfect that they stand in need of being purged ; and according to the degree of their imperfection are to be detain'd a shorter or a longer time in Purgatory.

But now, besides that there is no Text in Scripture from whence any such state can probably be concluded (as is acknowledged by many learned men of the Church of Rome) and even that Text which they have most insisted upon (they shall be saved, yet so as by fire) is given up by them as insufficient to conclude the thing. distur is very glad to get off it, by saying there is nothing in it against Purgatory : why ? no body pretends that, but we might reasonably expect that there should be something for it in a Text which hath been so often produced and urged by them for the proof of it. I say, besides that there is nothing in Scripture for Purgatory, there are a great many things against it, and utterly inconsistent with it. In the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus, which was designed to represent to us the different states of good and bad men in another world, there is not the least intimation of Purgatory, but that good men pass immediately into a state of happiness, and bad men into a place of torment. And St. John, Rev. 14. 13. pronounceth all that die in the Lord happy, because they rest from their labours ; which they cannot be said to do who are in a state of great anguish and torment, as those are supposed to be who are in Purgatory.

But above all, this Reasoning of Saint Paul is utterly inconsistent with any imagination of such a state. For he encourageth all Christians in general against the fear of death from the consideration of that happy state they should immediately pass into, by being admitted into the presence of God ; which surely is not Purgatory. We are of good courage (says he) and willing rather to be absent from the body : And great reason we should be so, if so soon as we leave the body we are present with the Lord. But no man sure would be glad to leave the body to go into a place of exquisite and extream torment, which they tell us is the case of most Christians when they die. And what can be more unreasonable, than to make the Apostle to use an Argument to comfort all Christians against the fear of death which concerns but very few in comparison ? So that if the Apostle's reasoning be good, that while we are in this life we are detained from our happiness, and so soon as we depart this life we pass immediately into it, and therefore death is desirable to all good men : I say if this reasoning be good, it is very clear that St. Paul knew nothing of the Doctrine now taught in the Church of Rome concerning Purgatory ; because that is utterly inconsistent with what he expressly asserts in this Chapter ; and quite takes away the force of his whole Argument.

3. To encourage us against the fear of death. And this is the Conclusion which the Apostle makes from this consideration. Therefore (says he) we are of good courage, knowing that whilst we converse in the body we are absent from the Lord. There is in us a natural love of life, and a natural horror and dread of death ; so that our Spirits are apt to shrink at the thoughts of the approach of it. But this fear may very much be mitigated, and even overruled by Reason and the considerations of Religion. For death is not so dreadful in it self, as with regard to the consequences of it : And those will be as we are, comfortable and happy to the good, but dismal and miserable to the wicked. So that the only true antidote against the fear of death is the hopes of a better life ; and the only firm ground of these hopes is the mercy of God in Jesus Christ, upon our due preparation for another world by repentance and a holy life. For the sting of death is sin ; and when that is taken away the terrour and bitterness of death is past : And then death is so far from being dreadful, that in reason it is extremely desirable ; because it lets us into a better state, such as only deserves the name of life. Hi vivunt qui ex corporum vinculis tanquam e carcere evolaverunt : vestra vero quæ dicitur vita, mors est. They truly live (could a Heathen say) who have made their escape out of this prison of the body ; but that which men commonly call life is rather death than life. To live indeed, is to be well, and to be happy ; and that we shall never be till we are got beyond the grave.

4. This Consideration should comfort us under the loss and death of Friends, which certainly is one of the greatest grievances and troubles of humane life. For if they be fit for God, and go to him when they die, they are infinitely happier than it was possible for them to have been in this world ; and the trouble of their absence from us is fully balanced by their being present with the Lord. For why should we lament the end of that life which we are assured is the beginning of immortality ? One reason of our trouble for the loss of Friends is because we loved them : But it is no sign of our love to them to grudge and repine at their happiness. But we hoped to have enjoyed them longer : Be it so ; yet why should we be troubled that they are happy sooner than we expected ? But they are parted from us, and the thought of this is grievous : But yet the consideration of their being parted for a while is not near so sad, as the hopes of a happy meeting again, never to be parted any more, is comfortable and joyful. So that the greater our love to them was, the less should be our grief for them, when we consider that they are happy, and that they are safe ; past all storms, all the troubles and temptations of this life, and out of the reach of all harm and danger for ever. But though the Reason of our duty in this case be very plain, yet the practice of it is very difficult ; and when all is said, natural affection will have its course : And even after our Judgment is satisfied, it will require some time to still and quiet our Passions.

5. This consideration should wean us from the love of life ; and make us not only contented, but willing and glad to leave this world, whenever it shall please God to call us out of it. This Inference the Apostle makes, ver. 8. We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord. Though there were no state of immortality after this life, yet methinks we should not desire to live always in this world. Habet natura (says Tully) ut aliarum rerum, sic vivendi modum: As nature hath set bounds and measures to other things, so likewise to life; of which men should know when they have enough, and not covet so much of it till they be tired and cloyed with it. If there were no other inconvenience in a long life, this is a great one, that in a long course of time we unavoidably see a great many things which we would not; our own misfortunes and the calamities of others; publick confusions and distractions; the loss of Friends and Relations; or which is worse, their misery, or which is worst of all, their miscarriage: Especially, a very infirm and tedious old age is very undesirable: For who would desire to live long uneasy to himself, and troublesome to others? It is time for us to be willing to die, when we cannot live with the good will even of our friends: when those who ought to love us best think much that we live so long, and can hardly forbear to give us broad signs that they are weary of our company. In such a case a man would almost be contented to dye out of civility; and not chuse to make any long stay where he sees that his company is not acceptable. If we think we can be welcome to a better place, and to a more delightful society, why should we desire to thrust our selves any longer upon an ill-natur'd world, upon those who have much ado to refrain from telling us that our room is better than our company?

Some indeed have a very happy and vigorous old age, and the taper of life burns clear in them to the last: Their understandings are good, their memories and senses tolerable, their humour pleasant, and their conversation acceptable, and their Relations kind and respectful to them. But this is a rare felicity, and which seldom happens but to those who have lived wisely and vertuously, and by a religious and regular course of life have preserved some of their best spirits to the last, and have not by vice and extravagance drawn off life to the dregs, and left nothing to be enjoyed but infirmities and ill humours, guilt and repentance: But on the contrary have prudently laid up some considerable comforts and supports for themselves against this gloomy day; having stored their minds with wisdom and knowledge, and taken care to secure to themselves the comfortable reflections of an useful and well-spent life, and the favour and loving kindness of God which is better than life it self. But generally the extremities of old age are very peevish and querulous, and a declining and falling back to the weak and helpless condition of Infancy and Childhood. And yet less care is commonly taken to please aged persons, and less kindness shewed to them (unless it be in expectation of receiving greater from them) than to Children: because these are cherished in hopes, the others in despair of their growing better. So that if God see it good it is not desirable to live to try nature, and the kindness and good will of our Relations to the utmost.

Nay there is reason enough why we should be well contented to dye in any Age of our life. If we are young, we have tasted the best of it: If in our middle Age, we have not only enjoyed all that is desirable of life, but almost all that is tolerable: If we are old, we are come to the dregs of it, and do but see the same things over and over again, and continually with less pleasure.

Especially if we consider the happiness from which we are all this while detained. This life is but our Infancy and Childhood in comparison of the manly pleasures and employments of the other state. And why should we desire to be always children; and to linger here below to play the fools yet a little longer? In this sense that high expression of the Poet is true,

-----*Dii celant homines, ut vivere durent,
Quàm sit dulce mori.*-----

The Gods conceal from men the sweetness of dying, to make them patient and contented to live.

This life is wholly in order to the other. Do but make sure to live well, and there is no need of living long. To the purpose of preparation for another world, the best life is the longest. Some live a great pace, and by continual diligence and industry in serving God and doing good, do really dispatch more of the business of life in a few years, than others do in a whole Age; who go such a santring pace towards Heaven, as if they were in no haste to get thither. But if we were always prepared we should rejoyce at the prospect of our end; as those who have been long tost at Sea are overjoyed at the sight of Land.

I have now done with my Text, but have another Subject to speak of; that excellent Man in whose Place I now stand; whom we all knew, and whom all that knew him well did highly esteem and reverence. He was born in Shropshire of a worthy and ancient Family, the 11th of March 1609. was the sixth Son of his Father: and being bred up to learning, and very capable of it, was sent to the University of Cambridge, and planted there in Emanuel College, where he was chosen Fellow, and was an excellent Tutor and Instruſtour of Youth, and bred up many persons of Quality, and others who afterwards proved useful and eminent; as many perhaps as any Tutour of that Time.

About the age of four or five and thirty he was made Provost of King's College; where he was a most vigilant and prudent Governour, a great encourager of Learning and good Order, and by his careful and wise management of the Estate of the College, brought it into a very flourishing Condition, and left it so.

It cannot be denied (nor am I much concerned to dissemble it) that here he possess'd another man's place, who by the iniquity of the times was wrongfully ejected; I mean Dr. Collins the famous and learned Divinity-Professour of that University. During whose Life (and he lived many years after) by the free consent of the College there were two shares out of the common Dividend allotted to the Provost, one whereof was constantly paid to Dr. Collins, as if he had been still Provost. To this Dr. Whichcot did not only give his consent (without which the thing could not have been done) but was very forward for the doing of it, tho' hereby he did not only considerably lessen his own profit, but likewise incur no small censure and hazard as the Times then were. And lest this had not been kindness enough to that worthy Person, whose Place he possessed, in his last Will he left to his Son, Sir John Collins, a Legacy of one hundred Pounds.

And as he was not wanting either in respect or real kindness to the rightful Owner, so neither did he stoop to do any thing unworthy to obtain that Place; for he never took the Covenant: And not only so, but by the particular friendship and interest which he had in some of the chief of the Visitors, he prevailed to have the greatest part of the Fellows of that College exempted from that Imposition; and preserved them in their Places by that means. And to the Fellows that were ejected by the Visitors, he likewise freely consented that their full Dividend for that year should be paid them, even after they were ejected. Among these was the Reverend and ingenious Dr.

Charles

Charles Mason; upon whom after he was ejected, the College did confer a good Living which then fell in their gift, with the consent of the Provost, who, knowing him to be a worthy man, was contented to run the hazard of the displeasure of those Times.

So that I hope none will be hard upon him, that he was contented upon such terms to be in a capacity to do good in bad Times.

For, besides his care of the College, he had a very great and good influence upon the University in general. Every Lord's Day in the Afternoon, for almost twenty years together, he preached in Trinity Church, where he had a great number, not only of the young Scholars, but of those of greater standing and best repute for Learning in the University his constant and attentive Auditors: And in those wild and unsettled Times contributed more to the forming of the Students of that University to a sober sense of Religion than any man in that Age.

After he left Cambridge he came to London, and was chosen Minister of Black Friars, where he continued till the dreadful Fire; and then retired himself to a Donative he had at Milton near Cambridge; where he preached constantly, and relieved the poor, and had their Children taught to read at his own charge; and made up differences among the Neighbours. Here he stayed till by the promotion of the Reverend Dr. Wilkins, his Predecessor in this Place, to the Bishoprick of Chester, he was by his interest and recommendation presented to this Church. But during the building of it, upon the invitation of the Court of Aldermen, in the Mayoralty of Sir William Turner, he preached before that Honourable Auditory at Guild-Hall Chappel every Sunday in the Afternoon with great acceptance and approbation, for about the space of seven years.

When his Church was built, he bestowed his pains here twice a week, where he had the general love and respect of his Parish; and a very considerable and judicious Auditory, though not very numerous by reason of the weakness of his voice in his declining age.

It pleased God to bless him, as with a plentiful Estate, so with a charitable Mind: Which yet was not so well known to many, because in the disposal of his charity he very much affected secrecy. He frequently bestowed his Alms (as I am informed by those who best knew) on poor house-keepers disabled by age or sickness to support themselves, thinking those to be the most proper objects of it. He was rather frugal in expence upon himself, that so he might have wherewithal to relieve the necessities of others.

And he was not only charitable in his life, but in a very bountiful manner at his death; bequeathing in pious and charitable Legacies to the value of a thousand pounds. To the Library of the University of Cambridge fifty pounds: and of King's College one hundred pounds: and of Emanuel College twenty pounds: to which College he had been a considerable Benefactor before; having founded there several Scholarships to the value of a thousand pounds, out of a Charity with the disposal whereof he was intrusted, and which not without great difficulty and pains he at last recovered.

To the Poor of the several places where his Estate lay, and where he had been Minister, he gave above one hundred pounds.

Among those who had been his Servants, or were so at his death, he disposed in Annuities and Legacies in money to the value of above three hundred pounds.

To other charitable uses and among the poorer of his Relations, above three hundred pounds.

To

To every one of his Tenants he left a Legacy according to the proportion of the Estate they held, by way of remembrance of him: and to one of them that was gone much behind he remitted in his Will seventy pounds. And as became his great goodness, he was ever a remarkably kind Landlord, forgiving his Tenants, and always making abatements to them for hard years or any other accidental losses that happened to them.

I must not omit the wise provision he made in his Will to prevent Law-suits among the Lagatees, by appointing two or three persons of greatest prudence and Authority among his Relations final Arbitrators of all differences that should arise.

Having given this account of his last Will, I come now to the sad part of all: sad I mean to us, but happiest to him. A little before Easter last he went down to Cambridge: where, upon taking a great Cold, he fell into a distemper which in a few days put a period to his life. He died in the house of his ancient and most learned Friend, Dr. Cudworth, Master of Christ's College. During his sickness he had a constant calmness and serenity of mind: and under all his bodily weakness possessed his Soul in great patience. After the Prayers for the Visitation of the Sick (which he said were excellent Prayers) had been used, he was put in mind of receiving the Sacrament; to which he answered, that he most readily embraced the proposal: And after he had received it, said to Dr. Cudworth, I heartily thank you for this most Christian office: I thank you for putting me in mind of receiving this Sacrament; adding this pious ejaculation, The Lord fulfill all his declarations and promises, and pardon all my weaknesses and imperfections. He disclaimed all merit in himself; and declared that whatever he was, he was through the grace and goodness of God in Jesus Christ. He expressed likewise great dislike of the Principles of Separation; and said, he was the more desirous to receive the Sacrament that he might declare his full Communion with the Church of Christ all the world over. He disclaimed Popery, and, as things of near affinity with it, or rather parts of it, all superstition and usurpation upon the consciences of men.

He thanked God, that he had no pain in his body, nor disquiet in his mind.

Towards his last he seemed rather unwilling to be detained any longer in this state; not for any pains he felt in himself, but for the trouble he gave his Friends: saying to one of them who had with great care attended him all along in his sickness, My dear Friend, thou hast taken a great deal of pains to uphold a crazy body, but it will not do: I pray thee give me no more Cordials; for why shouldest thou keep me any longer out of that happy state to which I am going? I thank God I hope in his mercy, that it shall be well with me.

And herein God was pleased particularly to answer those devout and well-weighed petitions of his which he frequently used in his Prayer before Sermon, which I shall set down in his own words, and I doubt not those that were his constant hearers do well remember them; And superadd this, O Lord, to all the grace and favour which thou hast shewn us all along in life, not to remove us hence but with all advantage for Eternity, when we shall be in a due preparation of mind, in a holy constitution of Soul, in a perfect renunciation of the guise of this mad and sinful world, when we shall be intirely resigned up to thee, when we shall have clear acts of faith in God by Jesus Christ, high and reverential thoughts of thee in our minds, enlarged and inflamed affections towards thee, &c. And whensoever we shall come to leave this world, which will be when thou shalt appoint (for the issues of life and death are in thy hands) afford us such a mighty power and presence of thy good Spirit, that we may have solid consolation in believing, and avoid all consternation nation of mind, all doubtfulness and uncertainty concerning our everlasting condition, and at length depart in the Faith of God's Elect, &c. Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.

Thus you have the short History of the life and death of this eminent Person; whose just Character cannot be given in few words, and time will not allow me to use many. To be able to describe him aright it were necessary one should be like him: for which reason I must content my self with a very imperfect draught of him.

I shall not insist upon his exemplary piety and devotion towards God, of which his whole life was one continued Testimony. Nor will I praise his profound Learning, for which he was justly had in so great reputation. The moral improvements of his mind, a God-like temper and disposition (as he was wont to call it) he chiefly valued and aspired after; that universal charity and goodness, which he did continually preach and practise.

His Conversation was exceeding kind and affable, grave and winning, prudent and profitable. He was slow to declare his judgment, and modest in delivering it. Never passionate, never peremptory: so far from imposing upon others, that he was rather apt to yield. And though he had a most profound and well poized judgment, yet was he of all men I ever knew the most patient to hear others differ from him, and the most easie to be convinced when good Reason was offered; and, which is seldom seen, more apt to be favourable to another man's Reason than his own.

Studious and inquisitive men commonly at such an age (at forty or fifty at the utmost) have fixed and settled their Judgments in most Points, and as it were made their last Understanding; supposing they have thought, or read, or heard what can be said on all sides of things; and after that, they grow positive and impatient of contradiction, thinking it a disparagement to them to alter their judgment: But our deceased Friend was so wise, as to be willing to learn to the last; knowing that no man can grow wiser without some change of his mind, without gaining some knowledge which he had not, or correcting some error which he had before.

He had attained so perfect a mastery of his Passions, that for the latter and greatest part of his life he was hardly ever seen to be transported with Anger: and as he was extremely careful not to provoke any man, so not to be provoked by any; using to say, if I provoke a man he is the worse for my company, and if I suffer myself to be provoked by him I shall be the worse for his.

He very seldom reproved any person in company otherwise than by silence, or some sign of uneasiness, or some very soft and gentle word; which yet from the respect men generally bore to him did often prove effectual. For he understood humane nature very well, and how to apply himself to it in the most easie and effectual ways.

He was a great encourager and kind director of young Divines: and one of the most candid hearers of Sermons, I think, that ever was: So that though all men did mightily reverence his Judgment, yet no man had reason to fear his Censure. He never spake well of himself, nor ill of others: making good that saying of Pansa in Tully, Neminem alterius, qui sua consideret virtuti, invidere; that no man is apt to envy the worth and virtues of another, that hath any of his own to trust to.

In a word, he had all those virtues, and in a high degree, which an excellent temper, great consideration, long care and watchfulness over himself, together with the assistance of God's grace (which he continually implored, and mightily relied upon) are apt to produce. Particularly he excelled in the virtues of Conversation, humanity, and gentleness, and humility, a prudent prudent and peaceable and reconciling temper. And God knows we could very ill at this time have spared such a Man ; and have lost from among us as it were so much balm for the healing of the Nation, which is now so miserably rent and torn by those wounds which we madly give our selves. But since God hath thought good to deprive us of him, let his vertues live in our memory, and his example in our lives. Let us endeavour to be what he was, and we shall one day be what he now is, of blessed memory on Earth, and happy for ever in Heaven.

And now methinks the consideration of the Argument I have been upon, and of that great example that is before us should raise our minds above this world, and fix them upon the glory and happiness of the other: Let us then begin heaven here, in the frame and temper of our minds, in our heavenly affections and conversation ; in a due preparation for, and in earnest desires and breathings after that blessed state which we firmly believe and assuredly hope to be one day possessed of : when we shall be removed out of this link of sin and sorrows into the Regions of bliss and immortality : where we shall meet all those worthy and excellent persons who are gone before us, and whose conversation was so delightful to us in this world ; and will be much more so to us in the other, when the spirits of just men shall be made perfect, and shall be quit of all those infirmities which did attend and lessen them in this mortal state ; when we shall meet again with our dear Brother, and all those good men whom we knew in this world, and with the Saints and excellent persons of all Ages to enjoy their blessed friendship and society for ever, in the presence of the blessed God where is fulnes of joy, at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore.

In a firm perswasion of this happy state let us every one of us say with David, and with the same ardency of affection that he did, As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God ; My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God ; O when shall I come and appear before God ; that so the life which we now live in this world may be a patient continuance in well-doing in a joyful expectation of the blessed hope and the glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ : To whom with the Father and the holy Ghost be all honour and glory, now and for ever.

Now the God of Peace who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, the great shepherd of the sheep, through the Blood of the everlasting covenant, make us perfect in every good work to do his will ; working in us always that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ ; to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XXV.

A Persuasive to frequent Communion.

I Cor. xi. 26, 27, 28.

For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come.

Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of the body and blood of the Lord

But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

MY design in this Argument is, from the consideration of the Nature of this Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and of the perpetual Use of it to the end of the world, to awaken men to a sense of their duty, and the great obligation which lies upon them to the more frequent receiving of it. And there is the greater need to make men sensible of their duty in this particular, because in this last Age by the unwary discourse of some concerning the nature of this Sacrament and the danger of receiving it unworthily, such doubts and fears have been raised in the minds of men as utterly to deter many, and in a great measure to discourage almost the generality of Christians from the use of it; to the great prejudice and danger of men's souls, and the visible abatement of Piety by the gross neglect of so excellent a means of our growth and improvement in it; and to the mighty Scandal of our Religion, by the general disuse and contempt of so plain and solemn an Institution of our blessed Lord and Saviour.

Therefore I shall take occasion as briefly and clearly as I can'to treat of these four Points.

First, Of the Perpetuity of this Institution; this the Apostle signifies when he saith, that by eating this Bread, and drinking this Cup, we do shew the Lord's Death till he come.

Secondly, Of the Obligation that lies upon all Christians to a frequent observance of this Institution; this is signified in that expression of the Apostle, as often as ye eat this Bread, and drink this Cup: which expression considered and compared together with the practice of the Primitive Church, does imply an Obligation upon Christians to the frequent receiving of this Sacrament.

Thirdly, I shall endeavour to satisfy the Objections and Scruples which have been raised in the minds of men, and particularly of many devout and sincere Christians, to their great discouragement from their receiving this Sacrament, at least so frequently as they ought: which Objections are chiefly grounded upon upon what the Apostle says, Wherefore whosoever shall eat this Bread, and drink this Cup of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord: and doth eat and drink damnation to himself.

Fourthly, What Preparation of our selves is necessary in order to our worthy receiving of this Sacrament : which will give me occasion to explain the Apostle's meaning in those Words, But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that Bread, and drink of that Cup.

I. For the Perpetuity of this Institution, implied in those Words, For as often as ye eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do shew forth the Lord's Death till he come; or the words may be read imperatively and by way of Precept, shew ye forth the Lord's Death till he come. In the three verses immediately before, the Apostle particularly declares the Institution of this Sacrament, with the manner and circumstances of it, as he had received it not only by the hands of the Apostles, but, as the words seem rather to intimate, by immediate Revelation from our Lord himself, ver. 23. For I have received of the Lord that which I also delivered unto you : that the Lord Jesus in the same night that he was betrayed took Bread, and when he had given Thanks he brake it, and said, take, eat, this is my Body which is broken for you ; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the Cup when he had supped, saying, this Cup is the New Testament in my Blood : this do as often as ye shall drink it in remembrance of me. So that the Institution is in these Words, this do in remembrance of me. In which words our Lord commands his Disciples after his Death to repeat these occasions of taking and breaking and eating the Bread, and of drinking of the Cup, by way of solemn Commemoration of him. Now whether this was to be done by them once only, or oftner ; and whether by the Disciples only, during their lives or by all Christians afterwards in all successive Ages of the Church, is not so certain meerly from the force of these Words, do this in remembrance of me : but what the Apostle adds puts the matter out of all doubt, that the Institution of this Sacrament was intended, not only for the Apostles, and for that Age, but for all Christians, and for all Ages of the Christian Church ; For as often as ye eat of this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do shew the Lord's Death till he come : that is, until the time of his second coming, which will be at the end of the world. So that this Sacrament was designed to be a standing Commemoration of the Death and Passion of our Lord till he should come to Judgment ; and consequently the Obligation that lies upon Christians to the observation of it is perpetual, and shall never cease to the end of the World.

So that it is a vain conceit and meer dream of the Enthusiasts concerning the seculum Spiritus Sancti, the age and dispensation of the Holy Ghost, when as they suppose, all human Teaching shall cease, and all external Ordinances and Institutions in Religion shall vanish, and there shall be no farther use of them. Whereas it is very plain from the New Testament that Prayer, and outward Teaching, and the Use of the two Sacraments, were intended to continue among Christians in all Ages. As for Prayer, (besides our natural Obligation to this duty, if there were no revealed Religion) we are by our Saviour particularly exhorted to watch and pray with regard to the day of Judgment, and in consideration of the uncertainty of the time when it shall be : And therefore this will always be a Duty incumbent upon Christians till the day of Judgment, because it is prescribed as one of the best ways of Preparation for it. That outward Teaching likewise and Baptism were intended to be perpetual is no less plain, because Christ hath expressly promised to be with the Teachers of his Church in the use of these Ordinances to the end of the World, Matth. 28. 19, 20. Go and disciple all Nations, baptizing them in the the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost : and so I am with you always to the end of the World. Not only to the end of that particular Age, but to the end of the Gospel-Age, and the consummation of all Ages, as the phrase clearly imports. And it is as plain from this Text, that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was intended for a perpetual Institution in the Christian Church, till the second coming of Christ, viz. his coming to Judgment : Because St. Paul tells us, that by these Sacramental Signs the Death of Christ is to be represented and commemorated till he comes. Do this in remembrance of me : For as oft as ye eat of this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come.

And if this be the End and Use of this Sacrament, to be a solemn remembrance of the Death and Sufferings of our Lord during his absence from us, that is, till his coming to Judgment, then this Sacrament will never be out of date till the second coming of our Lord. The consideration whereof should mightily strengthen and encourage our Faith in the hope of Eternal Life so often as we partake of this Sacrament : since our Lord hath left it to us as a memorial of himself till he come to translate his Church into Heaven, and as a sure pledge that he will come again at the end of the World and invest us in that Glory which he is now gone before to prepare for us. So that as often as we approach the Table of the Lord, we should comfort our selves with the thoughts of that blessed time when we shall eat and drink with him in his Kingdom, and shall be admitted to the great Feast of the Lamb, and to eternal Communion with God the Judge of all, and with our blessed and glorified Redeemer, and the holy Angels, and the Spirits of just men made perfect.

And the same consideration should likewise make us afraid to receive this Sacrament unworthily, without due Preparation for it and without worthy effects of it upon our Hearts and Lives. Because of that dreadful Sentence of condemnation which at the second coming of our Lord shall be past upon those, who by the profanation of this solemn Institution trample under foot the Son of God, and contemn the Blood of the Covenant ; that Covenant of Grace and Mercy which God hath ratified with Mankind by the Blood of his Son. The Apostle tells us that he that eateth and drinketh unworthily is guilty of the Body and Blood of the Lord, and eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. This indeed is spoken of temporal Judgment (as I shall shew in the latter part of this Discourse,) but the Apostle likewise supposeth, that if these temporal Judgments had not their effect to bring men to Repentance, but they still persisted in the Profanation of this holy Sacrament, they should at last be condemned with the World. For as he that partaketh unworthily of this Sacrament confirms his interest in the promises of the Gospel, and his Title to eternal Life ; so he that receives this Sacrament unworthily, that is without due Reverence, and without fruits meet for it ; nay, on the contrary, continues to live in sin whilst he commemorates the Death of Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, this man aggravates and seals his own Damnation, because he is guilty of the Body and Blood of Christ, not only by the contempt of it, but by renewing in some sort the cause of his sufferings, and as it were crucifying to himself afresh the Lord of life and glory, and putting him to an open shame. And when the great Judge of the world shall appear and pass final Sentence upon men, such obstinate and impenitent wretches as could not be wrought upon by the remembrance of the dearest love of their dying Lord, nor be engaged to leave their sins by all the ties and obligations of this holy Sacrament, shall have their portion with Pilate and Judas, with the chief Priests and Soldiers, who were the betrayers and murderers of the Lord of life and glory ; and shall be dealt withal as those who are in some sort guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. Which severe threatening ought not to discourage men from the Sacrament, but to deter all those from their sins who think of engaging themselves to God by so solemn and holy a Covenant. It is by no means a sufficient Reason to make men fly from the Sacrament, but certainly one of the most powerful Arguments in the world to make men forsake their sins; as I shall shew more fully under the third head of this Discourse.

II. The Obligation that lies upon all Christians to the frequent observance and practice of this Institution. For though it be not necessarily implied in these Words, as oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup; yet if we compare these Words of the Apostle, with the usage and practice of Christians at that time, which was to communicate in this holy Sacrament so often as they solemnly met together to worship God, they plainly suppose and recommend to us the frequent use of this Sacrament, or rather imply an obligation upon Christians to embrace all opportunities of receiving it. For the sense and meaning of any Law or Institution is best understood by the general practice which follows immediately upon it.

And to convince men of their obligation hereunto, and to engage them to a suitable practice, I shall now endeavour with all the plainness and force of perswasion I can: And so much the more, because the neglect of it among Christians is grown so general, and a great many persons from a superstitious awe and reverence of this Sacrament are by degrees fallen into a profane neglect and contempt of it.

I shall briefly mention a threefold Obligation lying upon all Christians to frequent Communion in this holy Sacrament; each of them sufficient of it self, but all of them together of the greatest force imaginable to engage us hereunto.

1. We are oblig'd in point of indispensable duty, and in obedience to a plain precept and most solemn institution of our blessed Saviour that great Lamgiver, who is able to save and to destroy, as St. James calls him: He hath bid us do this. And St. Paul who declares nothing in this matter but what he tells us he received from the Lord, admonisheth us to do it often. Now for any man that professeth himself a Christian to live in the open and continued contempt or neglect of a plain Law and Institution of Christ is utterly inconsistent with such a profession. To such our Lord may say as he did to the Jews, Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say? How far the Ignorance of this Institution, or the mistakes which men have been led into about it, may extenuate this neglect is another consideration. But after we know our Lord's will in this particular and have the Law plainly laid before us, there is no cloak for our sin. For nothing can excuse the wilful neglect of a plain Institution from a downright contempt of our Saviour's Authority.

2. We are likewise obliged hereunto in point of Interest. The benefits which we expect to be derived and assured to us by this Sacrament are all the blessings of the New Covenant, the forgiveness of our sins, the grace and assistance of God's holy Spirit to enable us to perform the conditions of this Covenant required on our part; and the comforts of God's holy Spirit to encourage us in well-doing, and to support us under sufferings; and the glorious reward of eternal life. So that in neglecting this Sacrament we neglect our own interest and happiness, we forsake our own mercies, and judge our selves unworthy of all the blessings of the Gospel, and deprive our selves of one of the the best means and advantages of confirming and conveying these blessings to us. So that if we had not a due sense of our duty, the consideration of our own interest should oblige us not to neglect so excellent and so effectual a means of promoting our own comfort and happiness.

3. We are likewise particularly obliged in point of gratitude to the careful observance of this Institution. This was the particular thing our Lord gave in charge when he was going to lay down his life for us, do this in remembrance of me. Men use religiously to observe the charge of a dying friend, and, unless it be very difficult and unreasonable, to do what he desires: But this is the charge of our best friend (nay of the greatest friend and benefactor of all mankind) when he was preparing himself to die in our stead and to offer up himself a Sacrifice for us; to undergo the most grievous pains and sufferings for our sakes, and to yield up himself to the worst of temporal deaths that he might deliver us from the bitter pains of eternal death. And can we deny him any thing he asks of us who was going to do all this for us? Can we deny him this? so little grievous and burthensome in it self, so infinitely beneficial to us? Had such a friend, and in such circumstances, bid us do some great thing, would we not have done it? how much more when he hath only said, do this in remembrance of me; when he hath only commended to us one of the most natural and delightful Actions, as a fit representation and memorial of his wonderful love to us, and of his cruel sufferings for our sakes; when he hath only enjoyed us, in a thankful commemoration of his goodness, to meet at his Table and to remember what he hath done for us, to look upon him whom we have pierced, and to resolve to grieve and wound him no more? Can we without the most horrible ingratitude neglect this dying charge of our Sovereign and our Saviour, the great friend and lover of souls; A command so reasonable, so easie, so full of blessings and benefits to the faithful observers of it!

One would think it were no difficult matter to convince men of their duty in this particular, and of the necessity of observing so plain an Institution of our Lord; that it were no hard thing to persuade men to their interest, and to be willing to partake of those great and manifold blessings which all Christians believe to be promised and made good to the frequent and worthy Receivers of this Sacrament. Where then lies the difficulty? what should be the cause of all this backwardness which we see in men to so plain, so necessary, and so beneficial a duty? The truth is, men have been greatly discouraged from this Sacrament by the unwary pressing and inculcating of two great truths; the danger of the unworthy receiving of this holy Sacrament, and the necessity of a due preparation for it. Which brings me to the

- III. III. Third Particular I proposed, which was to endeavour to satisfy the Objections and Scruples which have been raised in the minds of men, and particularly of many devout and sincere Christians, to their great discouragement from the receiving of this Sacrament, at least so frequently as they ought. And these Objections, I told you, are chiefly grounded upon what the Apostle says at the 27th verse. Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. And again ver. 29. He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself. Upon the mistake and misapplication of these Texts have been grounded two Objections, of great force to discourage men from this Sacrament, which I shall endeavour with all the tenderness and clearness I can to remove. First, That the danger of unworthy receiving being so very great, it seems the safest way not to receive at all. Secondly, That so much preparation and worthiness being required in order to our worthy Receiving, the more timorous sort of devout Christians can never think themselves duly enough qualified for so sacred an Action.

1. That the danger of unworthy receiving being so very great it seems obje. 1. the safest way wholly to refrain from this Sacrament, and not to receive it at all. But this Objection is evidently of no force if there be (as most certainly there is) as great or greater danger on the other hand, viz. in the neglect of this Duty: And so though the danger of unworthy receiving be avoided by not receiving, yet the danger of neglecting and contemning a plain Institution of Christ is not thereby avoided. Surely they in the Parable that refused to come to the marriage-feast of the King's Son, and made light of that gracious invitation were at least as faulty as he who came without a wedding garment. And we find in the conclusion of the Parable, that as he was severely punished for his disrespect, so they were destroyed for their disobedience. Nay of the two it is the greater sign of contempt wholly to neglect the Sacrament, than to partake of it without some due qualification. The greatest indisposition that can be for this holy Sacrament is ones being a bad man, and he may be as bad, and is more likely to continue so, who wilfully neglects this Sacrament, than he that comes to it with any degree of reverence and preparation, though much less than he ought: And surely it is very hard for men to come to so solemn an Ordinance without some kind of religious awe upon their Spirits, and without some good thoughts and resolutions, at least for the present. If a man that lives in any known wickedness of life do before he receive the Sacrament set himself seriously to be humbled for his sins, and to repent of them, and to beg God's grace and assistance against them; and after the receiving of it, does continue for some time in these good resolutions, though after a while he may possibly relapse into the same sins again; this is some kind of restraint to a wicked life; and these good moods and fits of repentance and reformation are much better than a constant and uninterrupted course of sin: even this righteousness, which is but as the morning cloud and the early dew which so soon passeth away, is better than none.

And indeed scarce any man can think of coming to the Sacrament, but he will by this consideration be excited to some good purposes, and put upon some sort of endeavour to amend and reform his life: and though he be very much under the bondage and power of evil habits, if he do with any competent degree of sincerity (and it is his own fault if he do not) make use of this excellent means and instrument for the mortifying and subduing of his lusts and for the obtaining of God's grace and assistance, it may please God by the use of these means so to abate the force and power of his lusts, and to imprint such considerations upon his mind in the receiving of this holy Sacrament and preparing himself for it, that he may at last break off his wicked course and become a good man.

But, on the other hand, as to those who neglect this Sacrament, there is hardly any thing left to restrain them from the greatest enormities of life, and to give a check to them in their evil course: nothing but the penalty of humane Laws, which men may avoid and yet be wicked enough. Heretofore men used to be restrained from great and scandalous vices by shame and fear of disgrace, and would abstain from many sins out of regard to their honour and reputation among men: But men have hardened their faces in this degenerate Age, and those gentle restraints of modesty which governed and kept men in order heretofore signify nothing nowadays: Blushing is out of fashion, and shame is ceased from among the Children of men.

But

But the Sacrament did always use to lay some kind of restraint upon the worst of men: and if it did not wholly reform them, it would at least have some good effect upon them for a time: If it did not make men good, yet it would make them resolve to be so, and leave some good thoughts and impressions upon their minds.

So that I doubt not but it hath been a thing of very bad consequence, to discourage men so much from the Sacrament, as the way hath been of late years: And that many men who were under some kind of check before, since they have been driven away from the Sacrament have quite let loose the reins, and prostituted themselves to all manner of impiety and vice. And among the many ill effects of our past confusions, this is none of the least, That in many Congregations of this Kingdom, Christians were generally refused and deterred from the Sacrament, upon a pretence that they were unfit for it: and being so, they must necessarily incur the danger of unworthy receiving; and therefore they had better wholly to abstain from it. By which it came to pass that in very many places this great and solemn Institution of the Christian Religion was almost quite forgotten, as if it had been no part of it; and the remembrance of Christ's death even lost among Christians: So that many Congregations in England might justly have taken up the complaint of the Woman at our Saviour's Sepulchre, they have taken away our Lord, and we know not where they have laid him.

But surely men did not well consider what they did, nor what the consequences of it would be, when they did so earnestly dissuade men from the Sacrament. 'Tis true indeed the danger of unworthy receiving is great; but the proper inference and conclusion from hence is not that men should upon this consideration be deterred from the Sacrament, but that they should be affrighted from their sins, and from that wicked course of life which is an habitual indisposition and unworthiness. St. Paul indeed (as I observed before) truly represents, and very much aggravates the danger of the unworthy receiving this Sacrament; but he did not deter the Corinthians from it, because they had sometimes come to it without due reverence, but exhorts them to amend what had been amiss and to come better prepared and disposed for the future. And therefore after that terrible declaration in the Text, Whoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, is guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, he does not add, therefore let Christians take heed of coming to the Sacrament, but, let them come prepared and with due reverence, not as to a common meal, but to a solemn participation of the body and blood of Christ; but let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup.

For, if this be a good reason to abstain from the Sacrament, for fear of performing so sacred an Action in an undue manner, it were best for a bad man to lay aside all Religion and to give over the exercise of all the duties of piety, of prayer, of reading and hearing the Word of God; because there is a proportionable danger in the unworthy and unprofitable use of any of these. The prayer of the wicked (that is, of one that resolves to continue so) is an abomination to the Lord. And our Saviour gives us the same caution concerning hearing the Word of God; take heed how you hear. And St. Paul tells us, that those who are not reformed by the Doctrine of the Gospel, it is the way of death, that is, deadly and damnable to such persons.

But now will any man from hence argue, that it is best for a wicked man not to pray, nor to hear or read the Word of God, lest by so doing he should endanger and aggravate his condemnation? And yet there is as much reason from this consideration to persuade men to give over praying and attending tending to God's Word, as to lay aside the use of the Sacrament. And it is every whit as true that he that prays unworthily and hears the Word of God unworthily, that is, without fruit and benefit, is guilty of a great contempt of God and of our blessed Saviour; and by his indevout prayers and unfruitful hearing of God's Word does further and aggravate his own damnation: I say, this is every whit as true, as that he that eats and drinks the Sacrament unworthily is guilty of a high contempt of Christ, and eats and drinks his own Judgment; so that the danger of the unworthy performing this so sacred an action, is no otherwise a reason to any man to abstain from the Sacrament, than it is an Argument to him to cast off all Religion. He that unworthily useth or performs any part of Religion is in an evil and dangerous condition; but he that casts off all Religion plungeth himself into a most desperate state, and does certainly damn himself to avoid the danger of damnation: Because he that casts off all Religion throws off all the means whereby he should be reclaimed and brought into a better state. I cannot more fitly illustrate this matter than by this plain Similitude: He that eats and drinks intemperately endangers his health and his life, but he that to avoid this danger will not eat at all, I need not tell you what will certainly become of him in a very short space.

There are some conscientious persons who abstain from the Sacrament upon an apprehension that the sins which they shall commit afterwards are unpardonable. But this is a great mistake; our Saviour having so plainly declared that all manner of sin shall be forgiven men except the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost; such as was that of the Pharisees, who as our Saviour tells us blasphemed the Holy Ghost in ascribing those great miracles which they saw him work, and which he really wrought by the spirit of God, to the power of the Devil. Indeed to sin deliberately after so solemn an engagement to the contrary is a great aggravation of sin, but not such as to make it unpardonable. But the neglect of the Sacrament is not the way to prevent these sins; but, on the contrary, the constant receiving of it with the best preparation we can is one of the most effectual means to prevent sin for the future, and to obtain the assistance of God's grace to that end: And if we fall into sin afterwards, we may be renewed by repentance; for we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sins; and as such, is in a very lively and affecting manner exhibited to us in this blessed Sacrament of his body broken, and his blood shed for the remission of our sins. Can we think that the primitive Christians, who so frequently received this holy Sacrament, did never after the receiving of it fall into any deliberate sin? undoubtedly, many of them did; but far be it from us to think that such sins were unpardonable, and that so many good men should because of their careful and conscientious observance of our Lord's Institution unavoidably fall into condemnation.

To draw to a conclusion of this matter: such groundless fears and jealousies as these may be a sign of a good meaning, but they are certainly a sign of an injudicious mind. For if we stand upon these Scruples, no man perhaps was ever so worthily prepared to draw near to God in any duty of Religion, but there was still some defect or other in the disposition of his heart, and the degree of his preparation. But if we prepare our selves as well as we can, this is all God expects. And for our fears of falling into sin afterwards, there is this plain answer to be given to it; that the danger of falling into sin is not prevented by neglecting the Sacrament, but increased: because a powerful and probable means of preserving men from sin is neglected. And why should not every sincere Christian, by the receiving of this Sacrament and renewing his Covenant with God, rather hope to be confirmed in goodness, and to receive farther assistances of God's grace and holy Spirit to strengthen him against sin and to enable him to subdue it; than trouble himself with fears which are either without ground, or if they are not, are no sufficient reason to keep any man from the Sacrament? We cannot surely entertain so unworthy a thought of God and our blessed Saviour, as to imagine that he did institute the Sacrament not for the furtherance of our Salvation, but as a snare, and an occasion of our ruine and damnation. This were to pervert the gracious design of God, and to turn the cup of Salvation into a cup of deadly poison to the souls of men.

All then that can reasonably be inferred from the danger of unworthy receiving is, that upon this consideration men should be quickened to come to the Sacrament with a due preparation of mind, and so much the more to fortify their resolutions of living suitably to that holy Covenant which they solemnly renew every time they receive this holy Sacrament. This consideration ought to convince us of the absolute necessity of a good life, but not to deter us from the use of any means which may contribute to make us good. Therefore (as a learned Divine says very well) this Sacrament can be neglected by none but those that do not understand it, but those who are unwilling to be tyed to their duty, and are afraid of being engaged to use their best diligence to keep the commandments of Christ: And such persons have no reason to fear being in a worse condition, since they are already in so bad a state. And thus much may suffice for answer to the first objection concerning the great danger of unworthy receiving this holy Sacrament. I proceed to the Object.

2. Second Objection, which was this; That so much preparation and worthiness being required to our worthy receiving, the more timorous sort of Christians can never think themselves duly enough qualified for so sacred an Action.

For a full Answer to this Objection, I shall endeavour briefly to clear these three things. First, That every degree of Imperfection in our preparation for this Sacrament is not a sufficient reason for men to refrain from it. Secondly, That a total want of a due preparation, not only in the degree but in the main and substance of it, though it render us unfit at present to receive this Sacrament, yet it does by no means excuse our neglect of it. Thirdly, That the proper Inference and conclusion from the total want of a due preparation is not to cast off all thoughts of receiving the Sacrament, but immediately to set upon the work of Preparation that so we may be fit to receive it. And if I can clearly make out these three things, I hope this Objection is fully answer'd.

1. That every degree of Imperfection in our preparation for this Sacrament is not a sufficient reason for men to abstain from it: For then no man should ever receive it. For who is every way worthy, and in all degrees and respects duly qualified to approach the presence of God in any of the duties of his Worship and Service? Who can wash his hands in innocency, that so he may be perfectly fit to approach God's Altar? There is not a man on earth that lives and sins not. The Graces of the best men are imperfect; and every imperfection in grace and goodness is an imperfection in the disposition and preparation of our minds for this holy Sacrament: But if we do heartily repent of our sins, and sincerely resolve to obey and perform the terms of the Gospel, and of that Covenant which we entered into by Baptism, and are going solemnly to renew and confirm by our receiving of this Sacrament, we are at least in some degree and in the main qualified to partake of this holy Sacrament; and the way for us to be more fit is to receive this Sacrament frequently, frequently, that by this spiritual food of God's appointing, by this living bread which comes down from heaven our souls may be nourished in goodness, and new strength and vertue may be continually derived to us for the purifying of our hearts and enabling us to run the ways of God's commandments with more constancy and delight. For the way to grow in grace and to be strengthened with all might in the inner man, and to abound in all the fruits of righteousness which by Christ Jesus are to the praise and glory of God, is with care and conscience to use those means which God hath appointed for this end: And if we will neglect the use of these means it is to no purpose for us to pray to God for his grace and assistance. We may tire our selves with our devotions and fill heaven with vain complaints, and yet by all this importunity obtain nothing at God's hand: Like lazy beggars that are always complaining and always asking, but will not work, will do nothing to help themselves and better their condition, and therefore are never like to move the pity and compassion of others. If we expect God's grace and assistance, we must work out our own Salvation in the careful use of all those means which God hath appointed to that end. That excellent degree of goodness which men would have to fit them for the Sacrament, is not to be had but by the use of it. And therefore it is a preposterous thing for men to insist upon having the end before they will use the means that may further them in the obtaining of it.

2. The total want of a due preparation, not only in the degree but in the main and substance of it, though it render us unfit at present to receive this Sacrament, yet does it by no means excuse our neglect of it. One fault may draw on another, but can never excuse it. It is our great fault that we are wholly unprepared, and no man can claim any benefit by his fault, or plead it in excuse or extenuation of this neglect. A total want of preparation and an absolute unworthiness is Impenitency in an evil course, a resolution to continue a bad man, not to quit his lusts and to break off that wicked course he hath lived in: But is this any excuse for the neglect of our duty that we will not fit our selves for the doing of it with benefit and advantage to our selves? A father commands his son to ask him blessing every day, and is ready to give it him; but so long as he is undutiful to him in his other actions, and lives in open disobedience, forbids him to come in his sight. He excuseth himself from asking his father blessing, because he is undutiful in other things, and resolves to continue so. This is just the case of neglecting the duty God requires, and the blessings he offers to us in the Sacrament, because we have made our selves incapable of so performing the one as to receive the other; and are resolved to continue so. We will not do our duty in other things, and then plead that we are unfit and unworthy to do it in this particular of the Sacrament.

3. The proper Inference and conclusion from a total want of due preparation for the Sacrament is not to cast off all thoughts of receiving it, but immediately to set about the work of preparation, that so we may be fit to receive it. For if this be true, that they who are absolutely unprepared ought not to receive the Sacrament, nor can do it with any benefit; nay by doing it in such a manner render their condition much worse, this is a most forcible argument to repentance and amendment of life: There is nothing reasonable in this case but immediately to resolve upon a better course, that so we may be meet partakers of those holy Mysteries, and may no longer provoke God's wrath against us by the wilful neglect of so great and necessary a duty of the Christian Religion. And we do wilfully neglect it, so long as we do wilfully refuse to fit and qualifie our selves for the due and worthy performance of it. Let us view the thing in a like case; A Pardon is graciously offered to a Rebel, he declines to accept it, and modestly excuseth himself because he is not worthy of it. And why is he not worthy? because he resolves to be a Rebel, and then his pardon will do him no good, but be an aggravation of his crime. Very true: and it will be no less an aggravation that he refuseth it for such a reason, and under a pretence of modesty does the most imprudent thing in the world. This is just the case; and in this case there is but one thing reasonable to be done, and that is, for a man to make himself capable of the benefit as soon as he can, and thankfully to accept of it: but to excuse himself from accepting of the benefit offered, because he is not worthy of it, nor fit for it, nor ever intends to be so, is as if a man should desire to be excused from being happy because he is resolved to play the fool and to be miserable. So that whether our want of preparation be total, or only to some degree, it is every way unreasonable: If it be in the degree only, it ought not to hinder us from receiving the Sacrament; if it be total, it ought to put us immediately upon removing the impediment, by making such preparation as is necessary to the due and worthy receiving of it. And this brings me to the

- IV. IV. Fourth and last thing I proposed, viz. what preparation of our selves is necessary in order to the worthy receiving of this Sacrament. Which I told you would give me occasion to explain the Apostle's meaning in the last part of the Text, But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. I think it very clear from the occasion and circumstances of the Apostle's discourse concerning the Sacrament that he does not intend the examination of our state, whether we be Christians or not, and sincerely resolved to continue so; and consequently that he does not here speak of our habitual preparation by the resolution of a good life. This he takes for granted, that they were Christians and resolved to continue and persevere in their Christian profession: But he speaks of their actual fitness and worthiness at that time when they came to receive the Lord's Supper. And for the clearing of this matter, we must consider what it was that gave occasion to this discourse. At the 20th verse of this Chapter he sharply reproves their irreverent and unfutable carriage at the Lord's Supper. They came to it very disorderly, one before another. It was the custom of Christians to meet at their Feast of Charity, in which they did communicate with great sobriety and temperance; and when that was ended they celebrated the Sacrament of the Lord's supper. Now among the Corinthians this order was broken: The rich met and excluded the poor from this common Feast. And after an irregular Feast (one before another eating his own supper as he came) they went to the Sacrament in great disorder; one was hungry having eaten nothing at all; others were drunk, having eaten intemperately; and the poor were despised and neglected. This the Apostle condemns as a great profanation of that solemn Institution of the Sacrament; at the participation whereof they behaved themselves with as little reverence as if they had been met at a common supper or feast. And this he calls not discerning the Lord's body, making no difference in their behaviour between the Sacrament and a common meal: which irreverent and contemptuous carriage of theirs he calls eating and drinking unworthily: for which he pronounceth them guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, which were represented and commemorated in their eating of that bread and drinking of that cup. By which irreverent and contemptuous usage of the Body and Blood of our Lord, he tells them that they did incur the judgment of God; which he calls eating and drinking their own judgment. For that the word velen, which our Translators render damnation, damnation, does not here signifie eternal condemnation, but a temporal judgment and chastisement in order to the prevention of eternal condemnation is evident from what follows; He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh judgment to himself: And then he says, For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep: that is, for this irreverence of theirs God hath sent among them several diseases, of which many had died. And then he adds, For if we would judge our selves, we should not be judged. If we would judge our selves; whether this be meant of the publick Censures of the Church, or our private censuring of our selves in order to our future amendment and reformation, is not certain. If of the latter, which I think most probable, then judging here is much the same with examining our selves, v. 28. And then the Apostle's meaning is, that if we would censure and examine our selves, so as to be more careful for the future, we should escape the judgment of God in these temporal punishments. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world. But when we are judged; that is, when by neglecting thus to judge our selves we provoke God to judge us; we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world; that is, he inflicts these temporal judgments upon us to prevent our eternal condemnation. Which plainly shews, that the judgment here spoken of is not eternal condemnation. And then he concludes, Wherefore, my Brethren, when ye come together to eat tarry for one another. And if any man hunger, let him eat at home, that ye come not together unto judgment: where the Apostle plainly shews both what was the crime of unworthy receiving, and the punishment of it. Their crime was, their irreverent and disorderly participation of the Sacrament; and their punishment was, those temporal judgments which God inflicted upon them for this their contempt of the Sacrament.

Now this being, I think, very plain; we are proportionably to understand the precept of examination of our selves before we eat of that bread and drink of that cup. But let a man examine himself; that is, consider well with himself what a sacred Action he is going about, and what behaviour becomes him when he is celebrating this Sacrament instituted by our Lord in memorial of his body and blood, that is, of his death and passion: And if heretofore he have been guilty of any disorder and irreverence (such as the Apostle here taxeth them withal) let him censure and judge himself for it, be sensible of and sorry for his fault, and be careful to avoid it for the future; and having thus examined himself, let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. This, I think, is the plain sense of the Apostle's Discourse; and that if we attend to the scope and circumstances of it, it cannot well have any other meaning.

But some will say, Is this all the preparation that is required to our worthy receiving of the Sacrament, that we take care not to come drunk to it, nor to be guilty of any irreverence and disorder in the celebration of it? I answer in short, this was the particular unworthiness with which the Apostle taxeth the Corinthians; and which he warns them to amend, as they desire to escape the judgments of God, such as they had already felt for this irreverent carriage of theirs, so unsuitable to the holy Sacrament: He finds no other fault with them at present in this matter, though any other sort of irreverence will proportionably expose men to the like punishment. He says nothing here of their habitual preparation, by the sincere purpose and resolution of a good life answerable to the rules of the Christian Religion: This we may suppose he took for granted. However, it concerns the Sacrament no more than it does Prayer or any other religious duty. Not but that it is very true that none but those who do heartily embrace the Christian Religion and are sincerely resolved to frame their lives according to the holy rules and and precepts of it, are fit to communicate in this solemn acknowledgment and profession of it. So that it is a practice very much to be countenanced and encouraged, because it is of great use, for Christians by way of preparation for the Sacrament to examine themselves in a larger sense than in all probability the Apostle here intended: I mean, to examine our past lives and the actions of them in order to a sincere repentance of all our errors and miscarriages, and to fix us in the steady purpose and resolution of a better life: particularly, when we expect to have the forgiveness of our sins sealed to us, we should lay aside all enmity and thoughts of revenge, and heartily forgive those that have offended us, and put in practice that universal love and charity which is represented to us by this holy Communion. And to this purpose we are earnestly exhorted in the publick Office of the Communion by way of due preparation and disposition for it, to repent us truly of our sins past, to amend our lives, and to be in perfect charity with all men, that so we may be meet partakers of those holy Mysteries.

And because this work of examining our selves concerning our state and condition, and of exercising repentance towards God and charity towards men is incumbent upon us as we are Christians, and can never be put in practice more seasonably and with greater advantage than when we are meditating of this Sacrament, therefore besides our habitual preparation by repentance and the constant endeavours of a holy life, it is a very pious and commendable custom in Christians before their coming to the Sacrament to set apart some particular time for this work of examination. But how much time every person should allot to this purpose is matter of prudence; and as it need not, so neither indeed can it be precisely determined. Some have greater reason to spend more time upon this work than others; I mean those whose accounts are heavier, because they have long run upon the score and neglected themselves: And some also have more leisure and freedom for it, by reason of their easie condition and circumstances in the world; and therefore are obliged to allow a greater portion of Time for the exercises of piety and devotion. In general, no man ought to do a work of so great moment and concernment slightly and perfunctorily. And in this, as in all other actions, the end is principally to be regarded. Now the end of examining our selves is to understand our state and condition, and to reform whatever we find amiss in our selves. And provided this end be obtained, the circumstances of the means are less considerable: whether more or less time be allowed to this work, it matters not so much, as to make sure that the work be thoroughly done.

And I do on purpose speak thus cautiously in this matter, because some pious persons do perhaps err on the stricter hand, and are a little superstitious on that side; insomuch that unless they can gain so much time to set apart for a solemn preparation, they will refrain from the Sacrament at that time; though otherwise they be habitually prepared. This I doubt not proceeds from a pious mind; but as the Apostle says in another case about the Sacrament, shall I praise them in this? I praise them not. For, provided there be no wilful neglect of due preparation, it is much better to come so prepared as we can, nay I think it is our duty so to do, rather than to abstain upon this punctilio. For when all is done, the best preparation for the Sacrament is the general care and endeavour of a good life: And he that is thus prepared may receive at any time when opportunity is offered, though he had no particular foresight of that opportunity. And I think in that case such a one shall do much better to receive than to refrain; because he is habitually prepared for the Sacrament, though he had no time to make such actual preparation as he desired. And if this were not allowable, how could Ministers communicate with sick persons at all times, or perswade others to do it many times upon very short and sudden warning?

And indeed we cannot imagine that the Primitive Christians, who received the Sacrament so frequently that for ought appears to the contrary they judged it as essential and necessary a part of their publick worship as any other part of it whatsoever, even as their Hymns and Prayers, and reading and interpreting the Word of God: I say, we cannot well conceive how they who celebrated it so constantly, could allot any more time for a solemn preparation for it, than they did for any other part of divine worship: And consequently, that the Apostle when he bids the Corinthians examine themselves could mean no more than that considering the nature and ends of this Institution they should come to it with great reverence; and reflecting upon their former miscarriages in this matter, should be careful upon his admonition to avoid them for the future and to amend what had been amiss: which to do, requires rather resolution and care than any long time of preparation.

I speak this, that devout persons may not be intangled in an apprehension of a greater necessity than really there is of a long and solemn preparation every time they receive the Sacrament. The great necessity that lies upon men is to live as becomes Christians, and then they can never be absolutely unprepared. Nay, I think this to be a very good preparation; and I see not why men should not be very well satisfied with it, unless they intend to make the same use of the Sacrament that many of the Papists do of Confession and Absolution, which is to quit with God once or twice a year, that so they may begin to sin again upon a new score.

But because the Examination of our selves is a thing so very useful, and the time which men are wont to set apart for their preparation for the Sacrament is so advantageous an opportunity for the practice of it; therefore I cannot but very much commend those who take this occasion to search and try their ways, and to call themselves to a more solemn account of their actions. Because this ought to be done sometime, and I know no fitter time for it than this. And perhaps some would never find time to recollect themselves and to take the condition of their souls into serious consideration, were it not upon this solemn occasion.

The sum of what I have said is this, that supposing a person to be habitually prepared by a religious disposition of mind and the general course of a good life, this more solemn actual preparation is not always necessary: And it is better when there is an opportunity to receive without it, than not to receive at all. But the greater our actual preparation is the better. For no man can examine himself too often, and understand the state of his soul too well, and exercise repentance, and renew the resolutions of a good life too frequently. And there is perhaps no fitter opportunity for the doing of all this, than when we approach the Lord's table, there to commemorate his death, and to renew our Covenant with him to live as becomes the Gospel.

All the Reflection I shall now make upon this Discourse, shall be from the consideration of what hath been said earnestly to excite all that profess and call themselves Christians to a due preparation of themselves for this holy Sacrament, and a frequent participation of it according to the intention of our Lord and Saviour in the institution of it, and the undoubted practice of Christians in the primitive and best Times, when men had more devotion and fewer scruples about their duty.

If we do in good earnest believe that this Sacrament was instituted by our Lord in remembrance of his dying love, we cannot but have a very high value and esteem for it upon that account. Methinks so often as we read in the institution of it those words of our dear Lord, do this in remembrance of me, and consider what he who said them did for us, this dying charge of our best friend should stick with us and make a strong impression upon our minds: Especially if we add to these, those other words of his, not long before his death, Greater love than this hath no man, that a man lay down his life for his friend; ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. It is a wonderful love which he hath expressed to us, and worthy to be had in perpetual remembrance. And all that he expects from us, by way of thankful acknowledgment, is to celebrate the remembrance of it by the frequent participation of this blessed Sacrament. And shall this charge, laid upon us by him who laid down his life for us, lay no obligation upon us to the solemn remembrance of that unparallel'd kindness which is the fountain of so many blessings and benefits to us? It is a sign we have no great sense of the benefit when we are so unmindful of our benefactor as to forget him days without number. The Obligation he hath laid upon us is so vastly great, not only beyond all requital but beyond all expression, that if he had commanded us some very grievous thing we ought with all the readiness and cheerfulness in the world to have done it; how much more when he hath imposed upon us so easie a commandment, a thing of no burthen but of immense benefit? when he hath only said to us, Eat O friends, and drink O beloved? when he only invites us to his table, to the best and most delicious Feast that we can partake of on this side heaven?

If we seriously believe the great blessings which are there exhibited to us and ready to be conferred upon us, we should be so far from neglecting them, that we should heartily thank God for every opportunity he offers to us of being made partakers of such benefits. When such a price is put into our hands, shall we want hearts to make use of it? Methinks we should long with David (who saw but a shadow of these blessings) to be satisfied with the good things of God's house, and to draw near his altar; and should cry out with him, O when shall I come and appear before thee! My soul longeth, yea even fainteth for the courts of the Lord, and my flesh cryeth out for the living God. And if we had a just esteem of things, we should account it the greatest infelicity and judgment in the world to be debarred of this privilege, which yet we do deliberately and frequently deprive our selves of.

We exclaim against the Church of Rome with great impatience, and with a very just indignation, for robbing the People of half of this blessed Sacrament, and taking from them the cup of blessing, the cup of salvation; and yet we can patiently endure for some months, nay years, to exclude our selves wholly from it. If no such great benefits and blessings belong to it, why do we complain of them for hindring us of any part of it? But if there do, why do we by our own neglect deprive our selves of the whole?

In vain do we bemoan the decay of our graces and our slow progress and improvement in Christianity, whilst we wilfully despise the best means of our growth in goodness. Well do we deserve that God should send leanness into our souls, and make them to consume and pine away in perpetual doubting and trouble, if, when God himself doth spread so bountiful a Table for us and set before us the bread of life, we will not come and feed upon it with joy and thankfulness.

S E R M O N XXVI.

A Discourse against Transubstantiation.

Concerning the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, one of the two great positive Institutions of the Christian Religion, there are two main Points of difference between Us and the Church of Rome. One, about the Doctrine of Transubstantiation; in which they think, but are not certain, that they have the Scripture and the words of our Saviour on their side: The other, about the administration of this Sacrament to the People in both kinds; in which we are sure that we have the Scripture and our Saviour's Institution on our side; and that so plainly that our Adversaries themselves do not deny it.

Of the first of these I shall now treat, and endeavour to shew against the Church of Rome, That in this Sacrament, there is no substantial change made of the Elements of Bread and Wine into the natural Body and Blood of Christ; that Body which was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the Cross; for so they explain that hard word Transubstantiation.

Before I engage in this Argument, I cannot but observe what an unreasonable task we are put upon, by the bold confidence of our Adversaries, to dispute a matter of Sense; which is one of those things about which Aristotle hath long since pronounced there ought to be no dispute.

It might well seem strange if any man should write a Book, to prove that an Egg is not an Elephant, and that a Musket-bullet is not a Pike: It is every whit as hard a case, to be put to maintain by a long Discourse, that what we see and handle and taste to be Bread, is Bread, and not the Body of a man; and what we see and taste to be Wine, is Wine, and not Blood: And if this evidence may not pass for sufficient without any farther proof, I do not see why any man, that hath confidence enough to do so, may not deny any thing to be what all the World sees it is; or affirm any thing to be what all the World sees it is not: and this without all possibility of being farther confuted. So that the business of Transubstantiation is not a controverlie of Scripture against Scripture, or of Reason against Reason, but of downright Impudence against the plain meaning of Scripture, and all the Sense and Reason of Mankind.

It is a most Self-evident Falshood; and there is no Doctrine or Proposition in the World that is of it self more evidently true, than Transubstantiation is evidently false: And yet if it were possible to be true, it would be the most ill-natured and pernicious truth in the World, because it would suffer nothing else to be true; it is like the Roman Catholick Church, which will needs be the whole Christian Church, and will allow no other Society of Christians to be any part of it: So Transubstantiation, if it be true at all, it is all truth, and nothing else is true; for it cannot be true unless our Senses, and the Senses of all mankind be deceived about their proper objects; and if this be true and certain, then nothing else can be so; for if we be not certain of what we see, we can be certain of nothing.

And yet notwithstanding all this, there are a Company of men in the world so abandon'd and given up by God to the efficacy of delusion as in good earnest to believe this gross and palpable Errour, and to impose the belief of it upon the Christian World under no less penalties than of temporal death and eternal damnation. And therefore to undeceive, if possible, these deluded Souls, it will be necessary to examine the pretended grounds of so false a Doctrine, and to lay open the monstrous absurdity of it.

And in the handling of this Argument, I shall proceed in this plain method.

I. I shall consider the pretended grounds and reasons of the Church of Rome for this Doctrine.

II. I shall produce our Objections against it. And if I can shew that there is no tolerable ground for it, and that there are invincible Objections against it, then every man is not only in reason excused from believing this Doctrine, but hath great cause to believe the contrary.

I. FIRST, I will consider the pretended grounds and reasons of the Church of Rome for this Doctrine. Which must be one or more of these five. Either 1st. The Authority of Scripture. Or 2^{ly}. The perpetual belief of this Doctrine in the Christian Church, as an evidence that they always understood and interpreted our Saviour's words, This is my body, in this sense. Or 3^{ly}. The Authority of the present Church to make and declare new Articles of Faith Or 4^{ly}. The absolute necessity of such a change as this in the Sacrament to the comfort and benefit of those who receive this Sacrament. Or 5^{ly}. To magnifie the power of the Priest in being able to work so great a Miracle.

1st. They pretend for this Doctrine the Authority of Scripture in those words of our Saviour. This is my body. Now to shew the insufficiency of this pretence, I shall endeavour to make good these two things.

1. That there is no necessity of understanding those words of our Saviour in the sense of Transubstantiation.

2. That there is a great deal of reason, nay that it is very absurd and unreasonable, to understand them otherwise.

First, that there is no necessity to understand those words of our Saviour in the sense of Transubstantiation. If there be any, it must be from one of these two reasons. Either because there are no figurative expressions in Scripture, which I think no man ever yet said : or else, because a Sacrament admits of no figures ; which would be very absurd for any man to say , since it is of the very nature of a Sacrament to represent and exhibit some invisible grace and benefit by an outward sign and figure : And especially since it cannot be denied, but that in the institution of this very Sacrament our Saviour useth figurative expressions, and several words which cannot be taken strictly and literally. When he gave the Cup he said, This Cup is the new Testament in my blood, which is shed for you and for many for the remission of Sins.

Where first, the Cup is put for the Wine contained in the Cup ; or else if the words be literally taken, so as to signifie a substantial change, it is not of the Wine, but of the Cup ; and that, not into the blood of Christ but into the new Testament or new Covenant in his blood. Besides, that his blood is said then to be shed, and his body to be broken, which was not till his Passion, which followed the Institution and first Celebration of this Sacrament.

But that there is no necessity to understand our Saviour's words in the sense of Transubstantiation, I will take the plain concession of a great number of the most learned Writers of the Church of Rome in this Controvertie. (a) Bellarmine, (b) Suarez and (c) Vasquez do acknowledge Scotus the great Schoolman to have said that this Doctrine cannot be evidently proved from Scripture : And Bellarmine grants this not to be improbable ; and Suarez and Vasquez acknowledge (d) Durandus to have said as much. cham another famous Schoolman, says expressly, that the Doctrine which holds the substance of the Bread and Wine to remain after consecration is neither repugnant to Reason nor to Scripture. (f) Petrus ab Alliaco Cardinal of Cambray says (f) in 4 Sent. Q. 6 art. 2. plainly, that the Doctrine of the Substance of Bread and Wine remaining after Consecration is more easie and free from absurdity, more rational, and no ways repugnant to the authority of Scripture; nay more, that for the other Doctrine, viz. of Transubstantiation, there is no evidence in Scripture. (g) Gabriel Biel, (g) in canon. Miss. Lect. 4. another great Schoolman and divine of their Church, freely declares, that as to any thing exprest in the Canon of the Scriptures, a man may believe that the substance of Bread and Wine doth remain after Consecration: and therefore he resolves the belief of Transubstantiation into some other Revelation, besides Scripture, which he supposeth the Church had about it. Cardinal (h) Cajetan confesseth that the Gospel doth now here exprest that the Bread is changed into the Body of Christ; that we have this from the authority of the Church: nay, he goes farther, that there is nothing in the Gospel which enforceth any man to understand these words of Christ, this is my body, in a proper and not in a metaphorical sense; but the Church having understood them in a proper sense they are to be so explained: Which words in the Roman Edition of Cajetan are expunged by order of Pope (i) Pius V. Cardinal (k) Contarenus, and (l) Melchior Canus one of the best and most judicious Writers that Church ever had, reckon this Doctrine among those which are not so expressly found in Scripture. I will add but one more of great authority in the Church, and a reputed Martyr, (m) Fisher Bishop of Rochester who ingenuously confesseth that in the words of the Institution there is not one word from whence the true presence of the flesh and blood of Christ in our Mass can be proved: So that we need not much contend that this Doctrine hath no certain foundation in Scripture, when this is so fully and frankly acknowledged by our Adversaries themselves.

Secondly, If there be no necessity of understanding our Saviour's words in the sense of Transubstantiation, I am sure there is a great deal of reason to understand them otherwise. Whether we consider the like expressions in Scripture; as where our Saviour says he is the door and the true Vine (which the Church of Rome would mightily have triumph'd in, had it been said, this is my true body.) And so likewise where the Church is said to be Christ's body; and the Rock which followed the Israelites to be Christ, 1 Cor. 10. 4. They drank of that Rock which followed them, and that Rock was Christ: All which and innumerable more like expressions in Scripture every man understands in a figurative, and not in a strictly literal and absurd sense. And it is very well known, that in the Hebrew Language things are commonly said to be that which they do signifie and represent; and there is not in that Language a more proper and usual way of expressing a thing to signifie so and so, than to say that it is so and so. Thus Joseph expounding Pharaoh's dream to him, Gen. 41. 26. says, the seven good kine are seven years, and the seven good ears of corn are seven years, that is, they signified or represented seven years of plenty; and so Pharaoh understood him, and so would any man of sense understand the like expressions; nor do I believe that any sensible man who had never heard of Transubstantiation being grounded upon these words of our Saviour, this is my body, would upon reading the Institution of the Sacrament in the Gospel ever have imagin'd any such thing to be meant by our Saviour in those words; but would have understood his meaning to have been this Bread signifies my Body, this Cup signifies my Blood; and this which you see me now do, do ye hereafter for a Memorial of me: But surely it would never have entred into any man's mind to have thought that our Saviour did literally hold himself in his hand, and give away himself from himself with his own hands. Or whether we compare these words of our Saviour with the ancient Form of the Passover used by the Jews from Ezra's time, as (n) Justin Martyr tells us, τῷ τοῦ πάχα ὁ σῶτης ἡμῶν καὶ ἡ καταφυγὴ ἡμῶν, this Passover is our Saviour and our refuge: not that they believed the Paschal Lamb to be substantially changed either into God their Saviour who delivered them out of the Land of Egypt, or into the Messias the Saviour whom they expected and who was signified by it: But this Lamb which they did eat did represent to them and put them in mind of that Salvation which God wrought for their Fathers in Egypt, when by the slaying of a Lamb and sprinkling the blood of it upon their doors their first-born were passed over and spared; and did likewise foreshew the Salvation of the Messias, the Lamb of God that was to take away the Sins of the world.

And nothing is more common in all Languages than to give the name of the thing signified to the Sign, as the delivery of a Deed or Writing under Hand and Seal is call'd a conveyance or making over of such an Estate, and it is really so; not the delivery of meer wax and parchment, but the conveyance of a real Estate, as truly and really to all effects and purposes of Law, as if the very material houses and lands themselves could be and were actually delivered into my hands: In like manner the names of the things themselves made over to us in the new Covenant of the Gospel between God and man, are given to the Signs or Seals of that Covenant. By Baptism Christians are said to be made partakers of the Holy Ghost, Heb. 6. 4. And by the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper we are said to communicate or to be made partakers of the Body of Christ which was broken, and of his Blood which was shed for us, that is, of the real benefits of his death and passion. And thus St. Paul speaks of this Sacrament, 1 Cor. 10. 16. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the Communion of the blood of Christ? the bread which we break, is it not the Communion of the body of Christ? But still it is bread, and he still calls it so; v. 17. For we being many are one bread and one body; for we are partakers of that one bread. The Church of Rome might, if they pleased, as well argue from hence that all Christians are substantially changed first into Bread, and then into the natural Body of Christ by their participation of the Sacrament, because they are said thereby to be one bread and one body. And the same Apostle in the next Chapter, after he had spoken of the consecration of the Elements still calls them the Bread and the Cup, in three verses together, As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, v. 26. Whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, v. 27. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup, v. 28. And our Saviour himself when he had said, this is my blood of the new Testament, immediately adds,  but I say unto you, I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the Vine, until I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom*, that is, not till after his resurrection, which was the first step of his exaltation into the Kingdom given him by his Father, when the Scripture tells us he did eat and drink with his Disciples. But that which I observe from our Saviour's words is, that after the consecration of the Cup, and the delivering of it to his Disciples to drink of it, he tells them that he would thenceforth drink no more of that fruit of the Vine, which he had now drank with them, till after his Resurrection. From whence it is plain that it was the fruit of the Vine, real Wine, which our Saviour drank of, and communicated to his Disciples in the Sacrament.

Belides; if we consider that he celebrated this Sacrament before his Passion, it is impossible these words should be understood literally of the natural body and blood of Christ; because it was his body broken and his blood shed which he gave to his Disciples, which if we understand literally of his natural body broken broken and his blood shed, then these words, this is my body which is broken, and this is my blood which is shed, could not be true, because his Body was then whole and unbroken, and his blood not then shed; nor could it be a propitiatory Sacrifice (as they affirm this Sacrament to be) unless they will say that propitiation was made before Christ suffer'd: And it is likewise impossible that the Disciples should understand these words literally, because they not only plainly saw that what he gave them was Bread and Wine, but they saw likewise as plainly that it was not his Body which was given, but his Body which gave that which was given; not his body broken and his blood shed, because they saw him alive at that very time and beheld his body whole and unpierc'd; and therefore they could not understand these words literally: If they did, can we imagine that the Disciples, who upon all other occasions were so full of questions and objections, should make no difficulty of this matter? nor so much as ask our Saviour, how can these things be? that they should not tell him, we see this to be Bread and that to be Wine, and we see thy Body to be distinct from both; we see thy Body not broken, and thy Blood not shed.

* Matth.

From all which it must needs be very evident, to any man that will impartially consider things, how little reason there is to understand those words of our Saviour, this is my body, and this is my blood, in the sense of Transubstantiation; nay, on the contrary, that there is very great reason and an evident necessity to understand them otherwise. I proceed to shew,

2^{ly}. That this Doctrine is not grounded upon the perpetual belief of the Christian Church, which the Church of Rome vainly pretends as an evidence that the Church did always understand and interpret our Saviour's words in this sense.

To manifest the groundlessness of this pretence, I shall, 1. shew by plain testimony of the Fathers in several Ages, that this Doctrine was not the belief of the ancient Christian Church. 2. I shall shew the time and occasion of its coming in, and by what degrees it grew up and was establish'd in the Roman Church. 3. I shall answer their great pretended Demonstration that this always was and must have been the constant belief of the Christian Church.

1. I shall shew by plain Testimonies of the Fathers in several Ages, for above five hundred years after Christ, that this Doctrine was not the belief of the ancient Christian Church. I deny not but that the Fathers do, and that with great reason, very much magnifie the wonderful mystery and efficacy of this Sacrament, and frequently speak of a great Supernatural change made by the divine benediction; which we also readily acknowledge. They say indeed, that the Elements of Bread and Wine do by the divine blessings become to us the Body and Blood of Christ: But they likewise say that the names of the things signified are given to the Signs; that the Bread and Wine do still remain in their proper nature and substance, and that they are turn'd into the substance of our Bodies; that the Body of Christ in the Sacrament is not his natural Body, but the sign and figure of it; not that Body which was crucified, nor that Blood which was shed upon the Cross; and that it is impious to understand the eating of the flesh of the Son of man and drinking his blood literally; all which are directly opposite to the Doctrine of Transubstantiation and utterly inconsistent with it. I will select but some few Testimonies of many things which I might bring to this purpose.

I begin with Justin Martyr, who says expressly, that  our Blood and Flesh* Apol. 2 p. 98 Edit. Paris. are nourished by the conversion of that food which we receive in the Eucharist: But that cannot be the natural body and blood of Christ, for no man will say that that is converted into the nourishment of our bodies. The † Lib. 4.

The Second is † Irenaus, who speaking of this Sacrament says, that the bread which is from the earth receiving the divine invocation is now no longer common bread, but the Eucharist (or Sacrament) consisting of two things, the one earthly, the other heavenly. He says it is no longer common bread, but after invocation or consecration it becomes the Sacrament, that is, bread sanctified, consisting of two things, an earthly and a heavenly; the earthly thing is bread, and the heavenly is the divine blessing which by the invocation or consecration is added to it. And * elsewhere he hath this passage, when therefore the cup that is mix'd (that is, of Wine and Water) and the bread that is broken receives the word of God, it becomes the Eucharist of the blood and body of Christ, of which the substance of our flesh is increased and consists; but if that which we receive in the Sacrament do nourish our bodies, it must be bread and wine, and not the natural body and blood of Christ. There is another remarkable Testimony of Irenaus, which though it be not now extant in those works of his which remain, yet hath been preserv'd by * Oecumenius, and it is this: when (says he) the Greeks had taken some Servants, of the Christian Catechumens (that is, such as had not been admitted to the Sacrament) and afterwards urged them by violence to tell them some of the secrets of the Christians, these Servants having nothing to say that might gratify those who offered violence to them, except only that they had heard from their Masters that the divine Communion was the blood and body of Christ, they thinking that it was really blood and flesh, declar'd as much to those that question'd them. The Greeks taking this as if it were really done by the Christians, discovered it to others of the Greeks; who hereupon put Sanctus and Blandina to the torture to make them confess it. To whom Blandina boldly answered, How could they endure to do this, who by way of exercise (or abstinence) do not eat that flesh which may lawfully be eaten? By which it appears that this which they would have charg'd upon Christians, as if they had literally eaten the flesh and blood of Christ in the Sacrament, was a false accusation which these Martyrs denied, saying they were so far from that, that they for their part did not eat any flesh at all.

* Advers.
p 571.
Edit. Rigal Paris.

The next is Tertullian, who proves against Marcion the Heretick that the Body of our Saviour was not a meer phantasm and appearance, but a real Body, because the Sacrament is a figure and image of his Body; and if there be an image of his body he must have a real body, otherwise the Sacrament would be an image of an image. His words are these, * The bread which our Saviour took and distributed to his Disciples he made his own body, saying this is my body, that is, the image or figure of my body. But it could not have been the figure of his body, if there had not been a true and real body. And arguing against the Scepticks who denied the certainty of sense he useth this Argument: That if we question our senses we may doubt whether our Blessed Saviour were not deceived in what he heard, and saw, and touched. † He might (says he) be deceived in the voice from heaven, in the smell of the ointment with which he was anointed against his burial, and in the taste of the wine which he consecrated in Remembrance of his blood. So that it seems we are to trust our senses, even in the matter of the Sacrament: and if that be true, the Doctrine of Transubstantiation is certainly false.

Origen in his * Comment on Matth. 15. speaking of the Sacrament hath this Passage, That food which is sanctified by the word of God and prayer, as to that of it which is material, goeth into the belly and is cast out into the draught, which none surely will say of the Body of Christ. And afterwards he adds by way of explication, it is not the matter of the bread, but the words which are spoken over it, which profiteth him that worthily eateth the Lord: and this (he says) he had spoken concerning the Typical and Symbolical body. So that the matter of bread remaineth remaineth in the Sacrament, and this Origen calls the Typical and Symbolical body of Christ ; and it is not the natural body of Christ which is there eaten ; for the food eaten in the Sacrament, as to that of it which is material, goeth into the belly and is cast out into the draught. This Testimony is so very plain in the Cause that Sextus Senensis suspects this place of Origen was depraved by the Hereticks. Cardinal Perron is contented to allow it to be Origen's, but rejects his Testimony because he was accused of Heresie by some of the Fathers, and says he talks like a Heretick in this place. So that with much ado this Testimony is yielded to us. The same Father in his * Homilies upon Leviticus speaks thus, There is also in the new Testament a letter which kills him who doth not Spiritually understand those things which are said ; for if we take according to the Letter that which is said, EXCEPT YE EAT MY FLESH AND DRINK MY BLOOD, this Letter kills. And this also is a killing Testimony, and not to be answered but in Cardinal Perron's way by saying he talks like a Heretick.

St. Cyprrian hath a whole Epistle * to Cecilius, against those who gave the Communion in Water only without Wine mingled with it ; and his main argument against them is this, that the blood of Christ with which we are redeemed and quickned cannot seem to be in the Cup when there is no Wine in the Cup by which the blood of Christ is represented : and afterwards he says, that contrary to the Evangelical and Apostolical Doctrine, water was in some places offer'd (or given) in the Lord's Cup, which (says he) alone cannot express (or represent) the blood of Christ. And lastly he tells us, that by Water the people is understood, by Wine the blood of Christ is shewn (or represented) but when in the Cup water is mingled with Wine the people is united to Christ. So that according to this argument Wine in the Sacramental Cup is no otherwise changed into the blood of Christ than the Water mixed with it is changed into the People which are said to be united to Christ.

I omit many others, and pass to St. Austin in the fourth Age after Christ. And I the rather insist upon his Testimony, because of his eminent esteem and authority in the Latin Church ; and he also calls the Elements of the Sacrament the figure and sign of Christ's body and blood. In his Book against Adamantus the Manichee we have this expression. * Our Lord did not doubt to say, this is my body when he gave the sign of his body. And in his explication of the third Psalm, speaking of Judas whom our Lord admitted to his last Supper, in which (says he) † he commended and delivered to his Disciples the figure of his body ; Language which would now be censured for Heresie in the Church of Rome. Indeed he was never accus'd of Heresie, as Cardinal Perron says Origen was, but he talks as like one as Origen himself.

And in his Comment on the 98. Psalm speaking of the offence which the Disciples took at that saying of our Saviour, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, &c. he brings in our Saviour speaking thus to them, † Ye must understand spiritually, what I have said unto you ; ye are not to eat this body which ye see, and to drink that blood which shall be shed by those that shall crucifie me. I have commended a certain Sacrament to you, which being spiritually understood will give you life. What more opposite to the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, than that the Disciples were not to eat that Body of Christ which they saw, nor to drink that blood which was shed upon the Cross, but that all this was to be understood spiritually and according to the nature of a Sacrament ? for that body he tells us is not here but in heaven, in his Comment upon these words, Me ye have not always. * He speaks (says he) of the presence of his body : ye shall have me according to my providence according to Majesty and invisible grace : but according to the flesh which the word assumed, according to that which was born of the Virgin Mary, ye shall not have me: therefore because he conversed with his Disciples forty days, he is ascended up into heaven, and is not here.

In his 23d Epistle; † If the Sacrament (says he) had not some resemblance of those things whereof they are Sacraments, they would not be Sacraments at all: but from this resemblance they take for the most part the names of the things which they represent. Therefore as the Sacrament of the Body of Christ is in some manner or sense Christ's body, and the Sacrament of his blood is the blood of Christ; So the Sacrament of faith (meaning Baptism) is faith. Upon which words of St. Austin there is this remarkable Gloss in their own Canon Law; * The heavenly Sacrament which truly represents the flesh of Christ is called the body of Christ; but improperly: whence it is said, that after a manner, but not according to the truth of the thing but the Mystery of the thing signified; So that the meaning is, it is called the body of Christ, that is, it signifies the body of Christ: And if this be St. Austin's meaning, I am sure no Protestant can speak more plainly against Transubstantiation. And in the ancient Canon of the Mass, before it was chang'd in compliance with this new Doctrine, it is expressly call'd a Sacrament, a Sign, an Image and a Figure of Christ's body. To which I will add that remarkable passage of St. Austin cited by * Gratian, That as we receive the similitude of his death in Baptism, so we may also receive the likeness of his flesh and blood, that so neither may truth be wanting in the Sacrament, nor Pagans have occasion to make us ridiculous for drinking the blood of one that was slain.

I will mention but one Testimony more of this Father, but so clear a one as it is impossible any man in his wits that had believed Transubstantiation could have utter'd. It is in his Treatise * de doctrina Christiana; where laying down several Rules for the right understanding of Scripture, he gives this for one. If (says he) the speech be a precept forbidding some heinous wickedness or crime, or commanding us to do good, it is not figurative; but if it seem to command any heinous wickedness or crime, or to forbid that which is profitable and beneficial to others, it is figurative. For example, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you: This seems to command a heinous wickedness and crime, therefore it is a figure; commanding us to communicate of the passion of our Lord, and with delight and advantage to lay up in our memory that his flesh was crucified and wounded for us. So that, according to St. Austin's best skill in interpreting Scripture, the literal eating of the flesh of Christ and drinking his blood would have been a great impiety; and therefore the expression is to be understood figuratively; not as Cardinal Perron would have it, only in opposition to the eating of his flesh and blood in the gross appearance of flesh and blood, but to the real eating of his natural body and blood under any appearance whatsoever: For St. Austin doth not say, this is a Figurative speech wherein we are commanded really to feed upon the natural body and blood of Christ under the species of bread and wine, as the Cardinal would understand him; for then the speech would be literal and not figurative: But he says, this is a figurative speech wherein we are commanded spiritually to feed upon the remembrance of his Passion.

To these I will add but three or four Testimonies more in the two following Ages.

* Gen. 4 The first shall be of Theodoret, who speaking of that * Prophecy of Jacob concerning our Saviour, he washed his garments in Wine, and his clothes in the blood of grapes, hath these words, † as we call the mystical fruit of the Vine (that is, the Wine in the Sacrament) after consecration the blood of the Lord, so he (viz. Jacob) calls the blood of the true Vine (viz. of Christ) the blood of of the grape: but the blood of Christ is not literally and properly but only figuratively the blood of the grape, in the same sense as he is said to be the true Vine; and therefore the Wine in the Sacrament after consecration is in like manner not literally and properly but figuratively the blood of Christ. And he explains this afterwards, saying, that our Saviour changed the names, and gave to his Body the name of the Symbol or Sign, and to the Symbol or Sign the name of his Body; thus when he had call'd himself the Vine, he call'd the Symbol or Sign his blood; so that in the same sense that he call'd himself the Vine, he call'd the Wine, which is the Symbol of his blood, his blood: For, says he, he would have those who partake of the divine mysteries not to attend to the nature of the things which are seen, but by the change of names to believe the change which is made by grace; for he who call'd that which by nature is a body wheat and bread, and again likewise call'd himself the Vine, he honour'd the Symbols with the name of his body and blood: not changing nature but adding grace to nature. Where you see he says expressly, that when he call'd the Symbols or Elements of the Sacrament, viz. Bread and Wine his Body and Blood, he made no change in the nature of the things, only added grace to nature, that is, by the divine grace and Blessing he raised them to a spiritual and supernatural virtue and efficacy.

The Second is of the same Theodoret in his second Dialogue between a Catholicus, under the name of Orthodoxus, and an Hretique under the name of Eranistes; who maintaining that the Humanity of Christ was chang'd into the substance of the Divinity (which was the Heresie of Eutyches) he illustrates the matter by this Similitude. As, says he, the Symbols of the Lord's body and blood are one thing before the invocation of the Priest, but after the invocation are changed and become another thing; So the body of our Lord after his ascension is changed into the divine substance. But what says the Catholicus Orthodoxus to this? why, he talks just like one of Cardinal Perron's Heretiques: Thou art, says he, caught in thy own net; because the mystical Symbols after consecration do not pass out of their own nature: for they remain in their former substance, figure and appearance, and may be seen and handled even as before. He does not only deny the outward figure and appearance of the Symbols to be chang'd, but the nature and substance of them, even in the proper and strictest sense of the word substance; and it was necessary so to do, otherwise he had not given a pertinent answer to the similitude urg'd against him.

The next is one of their own Popes, Gelasius, who brings the same Instance against the Eutychians; * Surely, says he, the Sacraments which we receive of the body and blood of our Lord are a divine thing, so that by them we are made partakers of a divine nature, and yet it ceaseth not to be the substance or nature of Bread and Wine; and certainly the image and resemblance of Christ's body and blood are celebrated in the action of the mysteries, that is, in the Sacrament. To make this Instance of any force against the Eutychians, who held that the body of Christ upon his ascension ceas'd and was chang'd into the substance of his Divinity, it was necessary to deny that there was any substantial change in the Sacrament of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ. So that here is an infallible authority, one of their own Popes expressly against Transubstantiation.

The last Testimony I shall produce is of Facundus an African Bishop, who lived in the 6th Century. Upon occasion of justifying an expression of one who had said that Christ also received the adoption of Sons, he reasons thus.

* Christ vouchsafed to receive the Sacrament of adoption both when he was circum-

Sacrament of his body and blood, which is in the consecrated bread and cup, is by us called his body and blood: not that the bread, says he, is properly his body and the cup his blood, but because they contain in them the mysteries of his body and blood; hence our Lord himself called the blessed bread and cup which he gave to his Disciples his body and blood. Can any Man after this, believe that it was then, and had ever been, the universal and received Doctrine of the Christian Church, that the bread and wine in the Sacrament are substantially changed into the proper and natural body and blood of Christ?

By these plain Testimonies which I have produced, and I might have brought a great many more to the same purpose, it is I think evident beyond all denial that Transubstantiation hath not been the perpetual belief of the Christian Church. And this likewise is acknowledg'd by many great and learned men of the Roman Church. (a) Scotus acknowledgeth that this Doctrine was not always thought necessary to be believed, but that the necessity of believing it was consequent to that Declaration of the Church made in the Council of Lateran under Pope Innocent the III. And (b) Durandus freely discovers his inclination to have believed the contrary, if the Church had not by that determination obliged men to believe it. (c) Tonstall Bishop of Durham also yields that before the Lateran Council men were at liberty as to the manner of Christ's presence in the Sacrament. And (d) Erasmus, who lived and died in the Communion of the Roman Church, and than whom no man was better read in the ancient Fathers, doth confess that it was late before the Church defined Transubstantiation, unknown to the Ancients both name and thing. And (e) Alphonfus a Castro says plainly, that concerning the Transubstantiation of the bread into the body of Christ, there is seldom any mention in the ancient Writers. And who can imagine that these learned men would have granted the ancient Church and Fathers to have been so much Strangers to this Doctrine, had they thought it to have been the perpetual belief of the Church? I shall now in the Second place, give an account of the particular time and occasion of the coming in of this Doctrine, and by what steps and degrees it grew up and was advanced into an Article of Faith in the Romish Church. The Doctrine of the corporeal presence of Christ was first started upon occasion of the Dispute about the Worship of Images, in opposition whereto the Synod of Constantinople about the year DCCL did argue thus, That our Lord having left us no other image of himself but the Sacrament, in which the substance of bread is the image of his body, we ought to make no other image of our Lord. In answer to this Argument the second Council of Nice, in the year DCCLXXXVII did declare, that the Sacrament after Consecration is not the image and anti-type of Christ's body and blood, but is properly his body and blood. So that the corporeal presence of the body of Christ in the Sacrament was first brought in to support the stupid Worship of Images: And indeed it could never have come in upon a more proper occasion, nor have been applied to a fitter purpose.

* De Eu-
1. c. 1.

And here I cannot but take notice how well this agrees with * Bellarmino's Observation, that none of the Ancients who wrote of Heresies, hath put this error (viz. of denying Transubstantiation) in his Catalogue; nor did any of the Ancients dispute against this error for the first 600 years. Which is very true, because there could be no occasion then to dispute against those who denied Transubstantiation, since, as I have shewn, this Doctrine was not in being, unless among the Eutychian Heretiques, for the first 600 years and more. But † Bellarmino goes on and tells us, that the first who call'd in question the truth of the body of the Lord in the Eucharist were the ICONOMACHI (the opposers of Images) after the year DCC in the Council of Constantinople; for these said there was one Image of Christ instituted by Christ himself, viz. the bread and wine in the Eucharist, which represents the body and blood of Christ: Wherefore from that time the Greek Writers often admonish us that the Eucharist is not the figure or image of the body of the Lord, but his true body, as appears from the VII. Synod; which agrees most exactly with the account which I have given of the first rise of this Doctrine, which began with the corporeal presence of Christ in the Sacrament, and afterwards proceeded to Transubstantiation.
posers

† Ibid.

And as this was the first occasion of introducing this Doctrine among the Greeks, so in the Latin or Roman Church Paschasius Radbertus, first a Monk, and afterwards Abbot of Corbey, was the first broacher of it in the year DCCCXVIII.

And for this, besides the Evidence of History, we have the acknowledgment of two very Eminent Persons in the Church of Rome, Bellarmine and Sirmondus, who do in effect confess that this Paschasius was the first who wrote to purpose upon this Argument. * Bellarmine in these words, This Author was the first who hath seriously and copiously written concerning the truth of Christ's body and blood in the Eucharist: And † Sirmondus in these, He so first explained the genuine sense of the Catholick Church, that he opened the way to the rest who afterwards in great numbers wrote upon the same Argument: But though Sirmondus is pleased to say that he only first explained the sense of the Catholick Church in this Point, yet it is very plain from the Records of that Age which are left to us, that this was the first time that this Doctrine was broached in the Latin Church; and it met with great opposition in that Age, as I shall have occasion hereafter to shew. For Rabanus Maurus, Arch-bishop of Mentz, about the year DCCCXLVII. reciting the very words of Paschasius wherein he had delivered this Doctrine, hath this remarkable passage concerning the novelty of it; * Some, says he, of late not having a right opinion concerning the Sacrament of the body and blood of our Lord, have said that this is the body and blood of our Lord, which was born of the Virgin Mary, and in which our Lord suffer'd upon the Cross and rose from the dead: which error, says he, we have opposed with all our might. From whence it is plain, by the Testimony of one of the greatest and most learned Bishops of that Age, and of eminent reputation for Piety, that what is now the very Doctrine of the Church of Rome concerning the Sacrament, was then esteemed an Error broach'd by some particular Persons, but was far from being the generally receiv'd Doctrine of that Age. Can any one think it possible that so Eminent a Person in the Church both for Piety and Learning, could have condemn'd this Doctrine as an Error and a Novelty, had it been the general Doctrine of the Christian Church, not only in that but in all former Ages: and no censure pass'd upon him for that which is now the great burning Article in the Church of Rome, and esteemed by them one of the greatest and most pernicious Heresies?

Afterwards in the year MLIX, when Berengarius in France and Germany had rais'd a fresh opposition against this Doctrine, he was compell'd to recant it by Pope Nicholas and the Council at Rome, in these words, * That the Bread and Wine which are set upon the Altar, after the Consecration are not only the Sacrament, but the true body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; and are sensibly, not only in the Sacrament, but in Truth, handled and broken by the hands of the Priest, and ground or bruised by the Teeth of the faithful. But it seems the Pope and his Council were not then skilful enough to express themselves rightly in this matter; for the Gloss upon the Canon Law says expressly, † That unless we understand these words of BERENGARIUS (that is in truth of the Pope and his Council) in a sound sense we shall fall into a greater Heresie than that of BERENGARIUS: for we do not make parts of the Body of Christ. The meaning of which Gloss I cannot imagine, unless it be this, That the Body of Christ, though it be in truth broken, yet it is not broken into parts, (for we do not make parts of the body of Christ) but into wholes: Now this new way of breaking a Body, not into parts but into wholes, (which in good earnest is the Doctrine of the Church of Rome) though to them that are able to believe Transubstantiation it may for any thing I know appear to be sound sense, yet to us that cannot believe so, it appears to be solid nonsense.

About XX years after, in the year MLXXIX Pope Gregory the VIIth began to be sensible of this absurdity; and therefore in another Council at ^{* Waldesf.} Rome made Berengarius to recant in another Form, viz. ^{Tom. i. c. 13} * That the bread and wine which are placed upon the Altar, are substantially changed into the true and proper and quickning flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and after Consecration are the true Body of Christ, which was born of the Virgin, and which being offered for the Salvation of the World did hang upon the Cross, and sits at the right hand of the Father.

So that from the first starting of this Doctrine in the second Council of Nice in the year DCCCLXXXVII, till the Council under Pope Gregory the VIIth. in the year MLXXIX. it was almost three hundred years that this Doctrine was contested, and before this misshapen Monster of Transubstantiation could be lick'd into that Form in which it is now settled and establish'd in the Church of Rome. Here then is a plain account of the first rise of this Doctrine, and of the several steps whereby it was advanced by the Church of Rome into an Article of Faith. I come now in the Third place, to answer the great pretended Demonstration of the impossibility that this Doctrine, if it had been new, should ever have come in, in any Age, and been received in the Church: and consequently it must of necessity have been the perpetual belief of the Church in all Ages: For if it had not always been the Doctrine of the Church, whenever it had attempted first to come in there would have been a great stir and bustle about it, and the whole Christian World would have rose up in opposition to it. But we can shew no such time when it first came in, and when any such opposition was made to it, and therefore it was always the Doctrine of the Church. This Demonstration Monsieur Arnauld, a very learned man in France, pretends to be unanswerable: whether it be so or not, I shall briefly examine. And,

First, We do assign a punctual and very likely time of the first rise of this Doctrine, about the beginning of the ninth Age; though it did not take firm root, nor was fully settled and establish'd till towards the end of the eleventh. And this was the most likely time of all other, from the beginning of Christianity, for so gross an Error to appear; it being, by the confession and consent of their own Historians, the most dark and dismal time that ever happened to the Christian Church, both for Ignorance, and Superstition and Vice. It came in together with Idolatry, and was made use of to support it: A fit prop and companion for it. And indeed what tares might not the Enemy have sown in so dark and long a Night; when so considerable a part of the Christian World was lull'd asleep in profound Ignorance and Superstition? And this agrees very well with the account which our Saviour himself gives in the Parable of the Tares, of the springing up of Errors and Corruptions in the Field of the Church. * While the men slept the Enemy did his work in the Night, so that when they were awake they wondered how and whence the tares came; but being sure they were

* Matth.

were there, and that they were not sown at first, they concluded the Enemy had done it.

Secondly, I have shewn likewise that there was considerable opposition made to this Errour at its first coming in. The general Ignorance and gross Superstition of that Age rendred the generality of people more quiet and secure, and disposed them to receive any thing that came under a pretence of mystery in Religion, and of greater reverence and devotion to the Sacrament, and that seemed any way to countenance the worship of Images, for which at that time they were zealously concern'd. But notwithstanding the security and passive temper of the People, the men most eminent for piety and learning in that Time made great resistance against it. I have already named Rabanus Arch-bishop of Mentz, who opposed it as an Errour lately sprung up, and which had then gain'd but upon some few Persons. To whom I may add Heribaldus Bishop of Auxerres in France, Io. Scotus, Erigena, and Ratramus, commonly known by the name of Bertram, who at the same time were employed by the Emperour Charles the Bald to oppose this growing Errour, and wrote learnedly against it. And these were the eminent men for learning in that time. And because Monsieur Arnauld will not be satisfied unless there were some stir and bustle about it, Bertram in his Preface to his Book tells us, that they who according to their several opinions talked differently about the mystery of Christ's body and blood were divided by no small Schism.

Thirdly, Though for a more clear and satisfactory answer to this pretended Demonstration I have been contented to unite this knot, yet I could without all these pains have cut it. For suppose this Doctrine had silently come in and without opposition, so that we could not assign the particular time and occasion of its first Rise; yet if it be evident from the Records of former Ages, for above D. years together, that this was not the ancient belief of the Church; and plain also, that this Doctrine was afterwards received in the Roman Church, though we could not tell how and when it came in, yet it would be the wildest and most extravagant thing in the world to set up a pretended Demonstration of Reason against plain Experience and matter of Fact. This is just Zeno's Demonstration of the impossibility of motion against Diogenes walking before his Eyes. For this is to undertake to prove that impossible to have been, which most certainly was. Just thus the Servants in the Parable might have demonstrated that the tares were wheat, because they were sure none but good seed was sown at first, and no man could give any account of the punctual time when any tares were sown, or by whom: and if an enemy had come to do it, he must needs have met with great resistance and opposition; but no such resistance was made, and therefore there could be no tares in the field, but that which they call'd tares was certainly good wheat. At the same rate a man might demonstrate that our King, his Majesty of Great Britain, is not return'd into England, nor restor'd to his Crown; because there being so great and powerful an Army possess'd of his Lands, and therefore obliged by interest to keep him out, it was impossible he should ever come in without a great deal of fighting and blood shed: but there was no such thing, therefore he is not return'd and restor'd to his Crown. And by the like kind of Demonstration one might prove that the Turk did not invade Christendom last year, and besiege Vienna; because if it had the Most Christian King, who had the greatest Army in Christendom in a readiness, would certainly have employed it against him; but Monsieur Arnauld certainly knows no such thing was done: And therefore according to his way of Demonstration, the matter of fact, so commonly reported and believed, concerning the Turk's Invasion of Christendom and besieging Vienna last year, was a perfect mistake. But a man may demonstrate till his head and heart ache, before he shall ever be able to prove that which certainly is, or was, never to have been. For of all sorts of impossibles nothing is more evidently so, than to make that which hath been not to have been. All the reason in the world is too weak to cope with so tough and obstinate a difficulty. And I have often wonder'd how a man of Monsieur Arnauld's great wit and sharp Judgment could prevail with himself to engage in so bad and baffled a Cause, or could think to defend it with so wooden a Dagger as his Demonstration of Reason against certain Experience and matter of Fact: A thing, if it be possible, of equal absurdity with what he pretends to demonstrate, Transubstantiation it self. I proceed to the Third pretended Ground of this Doctrine of Transubstantiation; and that is, The Infallible Authority of the present Church to make and declare new Articles of faith. And this in truth is the ground into which the most of the learned men of their Church did heretofore, and many do still resolve their belief of this Doctrine: And, as I have already shewn, do plainly say that they see no sufficient reason, either from Scripture or Tradition, for the belief of it: And that they should have believed the contrary had not the determination of the Church obliged them otherwise.

But if this Doctrine be obtruded upon the world merely by virtue of the Authority of the Roman Church, and the Declaration of the Council under Pope Gregory the VIIth. or of the Lateran Council under Innocent the IIIrd. then it is a plain Innovation in the Christian Doctrine, and a new Article of Faith impos'd upon the Christian World. And if any Church hath this power, the Christian Faith may be enlarged and changed as often as men please; and that which is no part of our Saviour's Doctrine, nay, any thing, though never so absurd and unreasonable, may become an Article of Faith obliging all Christians to the belief of it, whenever the Church of Rome shall think fit to stamp her Authority upon it: which would make Christianity a most uncertain and endless thing.

The Fourth pretended ground of this Doctrine is, the necessity of such a change as this in the Sacrament to the comfort and benefit of those who receive it. But there is no colour for this, if the thing be rightly consider'd: Because the comfort and benefit of the Sacrament depends upon the blessing annexed to the Institution. And as Water in Baptism, without any substantial change made in that Element, may by the Divine blessing accompanying the Institution be effectual to the washing away of Sin, and Spiritual Regeneration; So there can no reason in the world be given why the Elements of Bread and Wine in the Lord's Supper may not, by the same Divine blessing accompanying this Institution, make the worthy receivers partakers of all the Spiritual comfort and benefit designed to us thereby without any substantial change made in those Elements, since our Lord hath told us, that verily the flesh profiteth nothing. So that if we could do so odd and strange a thing as to eat the very natural flesh and drink the blood of our Lord, I do not see of what greater advantage it would be to us than what we may have by partaking of the Symbols of his Body and blood as he hath appointed in remembrance of him. For the Spiritual efficacy of the Sacrament doth not depend upon the nature of the thing received, supposing we receive what our Lord appointed, and receive it with a right preparation and disposition of mind, but upon the supernatural blessing that goes along with it, and makes it effectual to those Spiritual ends for which it was appointed.

The Fifth and last pretended ground of this Doctrine is, to magnifie the power of the Priest in being able to work so great a Miracle. And this with great Pride and Pomp is often urg'd by them as a transcendent instance of the Divine Wisdom, to find out to admirable a way to raise the power and reverence of the Priest; that he should be able every day, and as often as he pleases, by repeating a few words to work so miraculous a change, and (as they love most absurdly and blasphemously to speak) to make God himself.

But this is to pretend to a power above that of God himself, for he did not, nor cannot make himself, nor do any thing that implies a contradiction, as Transubstantiation evidently does in their pretending to make God. For to make that which already is, and make that now which always was, is not only vain and trifling if it could be done, but impossible because it implies a contradiction.

And what if after all Transubstantiation, if it were possible and actually wrought by the Priest, would yet be no Miracle; For there are two things necessary to a Miracle, that there be a supernatural effect wrought, and that this effect be evident to sense. So that tho a supernatural effect be wrought, yet if it be not evident to sense, it is to all the ends and purposes of a Miracle as if it were not; and can be no testimony or proof of any thing, because it self stands in need of another Miracle to give testimony to it, and to prove that it was wrought. And neither in Scripture, nor in profane Authors, nor in common use of speech, is any thing call'd a Miracle but what falls under the notice of our senses: A Miracle being nothing else but a supernatural effect evident to sense, the great end and design whereof is to be a sensible proof and conviction to us of something that we do not see.

And for want of this Condition, Transubstantiation, if it were true, would be no Miracle. It would indeed be very supernatural, but for all that it would not be a Sign or Miracle: For a Sign or Miracle is always a thing sensible, otherwise it could be no Sign. Now that such a change as is pretended in Transubstantiation, should really be wrought, and yet there should be no sign and appearance of it, is a thing very wonderful, but not to sense; for our senses perceive no change, the Bread and Wine in the Sacrament to all our senses remaining just as they were before: And that a thing should remain to all appearance just as it was, hath nothing at all of wonder in it; we wonder indeed when we see a strange thing done, but no man wonders when he sees nothing done. So that Transubstantiation, if they will needs have it a Miracle, is such a Miracle as any man may work that hath but the confidence to face men down that he works it, and the fortune to be believed: And though the Church of Rome may magnifie their Priests upon account of this Miracle which they say they can work every day and every hour, yet I cannot understand the reason of it; for when this great work (as they call it) is done, there is nothing more appears to be done than if there were no Miracle: Now such a Miracle as to all appearance is no Miracle, I see no reason why a Protestant Minister, as well as a Popish Priest, may not work as often as he pleases; or if he can but have the patience to let it alone, it will work it self. For surely nothing in the world is easier than to let a thing be as it is, and by speaking a few words over it to make it just what it was before. Every man, every day, may work ten thousand such Miracles.

And thus I have dispatch'd the first part of my Discourse, which was to consider the pretended Grounds and Reasons of the Church of Rome for this Doctrine, and to shew the weakness and insufficiency of them. I come in the

II. SECOND place, to produce our Objections against it. Which will be of so much the greater force, because I have already shewn this Doctrine to be destitute of all Divine warrant and authority, and of any other sort of Ground sufficient in reason to justify it. So that I do not now object against a Doctrine which hath a fair probability of Divine Revelation on its side, for that would weigh down all objections, which did not plainly overthrow the probability and credit of its Divine Revelation: But I object against a Doctrine by the meer Will and Tyranny of men impos'd upon the belief of Christians, without any evidence of Scripture, and against all the evidence of Reason and Sense.

The Objection I shall reduce to these two Heads. First, The infinite scandal of this Doctrine to the Christian Religion. And Secondly, The monstrous and insupportable absurdity of it.

First, The infinite scandal of this Doctrine to the Christian Religion. And that upon these four accounts. 1. Of the stupidity of this Doctrine. 2. The real barbarousness of this Sacrament and Rite of our Religion upon supposition of the truth of this Doctrine. 3. Of the cruel and bloody consequences of it. 4. Of the danger of Idolatry; which they are certainly guilty of, if this Doctrine be not true. 1. Upon account of the stupidity of this Doctrine. I remember that Tully, who was a man of very good sense, instancerh in the conceit of eating God as the extremity of madness, and so stupid an apprehension as he thought no man was ever guilty of. * When we call, says he, the fruits of the earth Ceres, and wine Bacchus, we use but the common language; but do you think any man so mad as to believe that which he eats to be God? It seems he could not believe that so extravagant a folly had ever entered into the mind of man. It is a very severe saying of Averroes the Arabian Philosopher (who lived after this Doctrine was entertained among Christians) and ought to make the Church of Rome blush, if she can; I have travell'd, says he *, over the World, and have found divers Sects; but so sottish a Sect or Law I never found, as is the Sect of the Christians; because with their own teeth they devour their God whom they worship. It was great stupidity in the People of Israel to say, Come let us make us Gods; but it was civilly said of them, Let us make us Gods that may go before us, in comparison of the Church of Rome, who say, Let us make a God that we may eat him. So that upon the whole matter I cannot but wonder that they should chuse thus to expose Faith to the contempt of all that are endued with Reason. And to speak the plain truth, the Christian Religion was never so horribly exposed to the scorn of Atheists and Infidels, as it hath been by this most absurd and senseless Doctrine. But thus it was foretold that † the Man of Sin should come with Power and Signs and Lying Miracles, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, with all the Legerdemain and juggling tricks of falshood and imposture; amongst which this of Transubstantiation, which they call a Miracle, and we a Cheat, is one of the chief: And in all probability those common juggling words of hocus pocus, are nothing else but a corruption of hoc est corpus, by way of ridiculous imitation of the Priests of the Church of Rome in their trick of Transubstantiation. Into such Contempt by this foolish Doctrine and pretended Miracle of theirs have they brought the most sacred and venerable Mystery of our Religion.

2. It is very scandalous likewise upon account of the real barbarousness of this Sacrament and Rite of our Religion, upon supposition of the truth of this Doctrine. Literally to eat the flesh of the Son of man and to drink his blood, St. Austin, as I have shewed before, declares to be a great Impiety. And the

* De Nat. Deorum. l. 3.

* Dionys. Carthus. in 4. d. 1. 10. art. 1.

the impiety and barbarousness of the thing is not in truth extenuated, but only the appearance of it, by its being done under the Species of Bread and Wine: For the thing they acknowledge is really done, and they believe that they verily eat and drink the natural flesh and blood of Christ. And what can any man do more unworthily towards his Friend? How can he possibly use him more barbarously, than to feast upon his living flesh and blood? It is one of the greatest wonders in the world, that it should ever enter into the minds of men to put upon our Saviour's words, so easily capable of a more convenient sense, and so necessarily requiring it, a meaning so plainly contrary to Reason, and Sense, and even to Humanity it self. Had the ancient Christians owned any such Doctrine, we should have heard it from the Adversaries of our Religion in every page of their Writings; and they would have desired no greater advantage against the Christians than to have been able to hit them in the teeth with their feasting upon the natural flesh and blood of their Lord, and their God, and their best Friend. What endless triumphs would they have made upon this Subject? And with what confidence would they have set the cruelty used by Christians in their Sacrament, against their God Saturn's eating his own Children, and all the cruel and bloody Rites of their Idolatry? But that no such thing was then objected by the Heathens to the Christians, is to a wise man instead of a thousand Demonstrations that no such Doctrine was then believed.

3. It is scandalous also upon account of the cruel and bloody consequences of this Doctrine; so contrary to the plain Laws of Christianity, and to one great end and design of this Sacrament, which is to unite Christians in the most perfect love and charity to one another: Whereas this Doctrine hath been the occasion of the most barbarous and bloody Tragedies that ever were acted in the World. For this hath been in the Church of Rome the great burning Article: and as absurd and unreasonable as it is, more Christians have been murdered for the denial of it than perhaps for all the other Articles of their Religion. And I think it may generally pass for a true observation, That all Sects are commonly most hot and furious for those things for which there is least reason; for what men want of Reason for their opinions, they usually supply and make up in Rage. And it was no more than needed to use this severity upon this occasion; for nothing but the cruel fear of death could in probability have driven so great a part of mankind into the acknowledgment of so unreasonable and senseless a Doctrine.

O Blessed Saviour! thou best Friend and greatest Lover of mankind, who can imagine thou didst ever intend that men should kill one another for not being able to believe contrary to their senses; for being unwilling to think, that thou shouldst make one of the most horrid and barbarous things that can be imagin'd a main Duty and principal Mystery of thy Religion; for not flattering the pride and presumption of the Priest who says he can make God, and for not complying with the folly and stupidity of the People who are made to believe that they can eat him?

4. Upon account of the danger of Idolatry; which they are certainly guilty of if this Doctrine be not true, and such a change as they pretend be not made in the Sacrament; for if it be not, then they worship a Creature instead of the Creator God blessed for ever. But such a change I have shewn to be impossible; or if it could be, yet they can never be certain that it is, and consequently are always in danger of Idolatry; and that they can never be certain that such a change is made, is evident; because according to the express determination of the Council of Trent, that depend upon the mind and intention of the Priest, which cannot certainly be known but by Revelation, which is not pretended in this case. And if they be mistaken in this change, through the knavery or crossness of the Priest who will not make God but when he thinks fit, they mu^t not think to excuse themselves from Idolatry because they intended to worship God and not a Creature; for so the Persians might be excus'd from Idolatry in worshipping the Sun, because they intend to worship God and not a Creature; and so indeed we may excuse all the Idolatry that ever was in the World, which is nothing else but a mistake of the Deity, and upon that mistake a worshipping of something as God which is not God.

II. Besides the infinite scandal of this Doctrine upon the accounts I have mentioned, the monstrous absurdities of it make it insupportable to any Religion. I am very well assur'd of the grounds of Religion in general, and of the Christian Religion in particular; and yet I cannot see that the foundations of any revealed Religion, are strong enough to bear the weight of so many and so great absurdities as this Doctrine of Transubstantiation would load it withal. And to make this evident, I shall not insist upon those gross contradictions, of the same Body being in so many several places at once; of our Saviour's giving away himself with his own hands to every one of his Disciples, and yet still keeping himself to himself; and a thousand more of the like nature: but to shew the absurdity of this Doctrine, I shall only ask these few Questions.

1. Whether any man have, or ever had greater evidence of the truth of any divine Revelation than every man hath of the fallhood of Transubstantiation? Infidelity were hardly possible to men, if all men had the same evidence for the Christian Religion which they have against Transubstantiation, that is, the clear and irresistible evidence of sense. He that can once be brought to contradict or deny his senses, is at an end of certainty; for what can a man be certain of if he be not certain of what he sees? In some circumstances our senses may deceive us, but no Faculty deceives us so little and so seldom: And when our senses do deceive us, even that error is not to be corrected without the help of our senses.

2. Supposing this Doctrine had been delivered in Scripture in the very same words that it is decreed in the Council of Trent, by what clearer evidence or stronger Argument could any man prove to me that such words were in the Bible, than I can prove to him that bread and wine after consecration are bread and wine still? He could but appeal to my eyes to prove such words to be in the Bible, and with the same reason and justice might I appeal to several of his senses to prove to him that the bread and wine after consecration are bread and wine still.

3. Whether it be reasonable to imagine that God should make that a part of the Christian Religion which shakes the main external evidence and confirmation of the whole? I mean the Miracles which were wrought by our Saviour and his Apostles, the assurance whereof did at first depend upon the certainty of sense. For if the senses of those who say they saw them were deceived, then there might be no Miracles wrought; and consequently it may justly be doubted whether that kind of confirmation which God hath given to the Christian Religion would be strong enough to prove it, supposing Transubstantiation to be a part of it: Because every man hath as great evidence that Transubstantiation is false, as he hath that the Christian Religion is true. Suppose then Transubstantiation to be part of the Christian Doctrine, it must have the same confirmation with the whole, and that is Miracles : But of all Doctrines in the world it is peculiarly incapable of being proved by a Miracle. For if a Miracle were wrought for the proof of it, the very same assurance which any man hath of the truth of the Miracle he hath of the falshood of the Doctrine, that is, the clear evidence of his Senses. For that there is a Miracle wrought to prove that what he sees in the Sacrament is not bread but the body of Christ, there is only the evidence of sense; and there is the very same evidence to prove that what he sees in the Sacrament is not the body of Christ but bread. So that here would arise a new Controversie, whether a man should rather believe his Senses giving testimony against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, or bearing witness to a Miracle wrought to confirm that Doctrine; there being the very same evidence against the truth of the Doctrine, which there is for the truth of the Miracle : And then the Argument for Transubstantiation and the Objection against it would just balance one another; and consequently Transubstantiation is not to be proved by a Miracle, because that would be, to prove to a man by something that he sees, that he doth not see what he sees. And if there were no other evidence that Transubstantiation is no part of the Christian Doctrine, this would be sufficient, that what proves the one, doth as much overthrow the other; and that Miracles which are certainly the best and highest external proof of Christianity are the worst proof in the world of Transubstantiation, unless a man can renounce his senses at the same time that he relies upon them. For a man cannot believe a Miracle without relying upon sense, nor Transubstantiation without renouncing it. So that never were any two things so ill coupled together as the Doctrine of Christianity and that of Transubstantiation, because they draw several ways, and are ready to strangle one another : For the main evidence of the Christian Doctrine, which is Miracles, is resolved into the certainty of sense, but this evidence is clear and point-black against Transubstantiation.

4. And Lastly, I would ask what we are to think of the Argument which our Saviour used to convince his Disciples after his Resurrection that his Body was really risen, and that they were not deluded by a Ghost or Apparition? Is it a necessary and conclusive Argument or not? † And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my self; for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see me have. But now if we suppose with the Church of Rome the Doctrine of Transubstantiation to be true, and that he had instructed his Disciples in it just before his death, strange thoughts might justly have risen in their hearts, and they might have said to him; Lord, it is but a few days ago since thou didst teach us not to believe our senses, but directly contrary to what we saw, viz. that the bread which thou gavest us in the Sacrament, though we saw it and handled it and tasted it to be bread, yet was not bread, but thine own natural body; and now thou appealest to our senses to prove that this is thy body which we now see. If seeing and handling be an unquestionable evidence that things are what they appear to our senses, then we were deceived before in the Sacrament; and if they be not, then we are not sure now that this is thy body which we now see and handle, but it may be perhaps bread under the appearance of flesh and bones; just as in the Sacrament, that which we saw and handled and tasted to be bread was thy flesh and bones under the form and appearance of bread. Now upon this supposition it would have been a hard matter to have quieted the thoughts of his Disciples: For if the Argument which our Saviour used did certainly prove to them that what they saw and handled was his body, his very natural flesh and bones, because they saw and handled them, (which it were impious to deny) it would as strongly prove that what they saw and received before in the Sacrament was not the natural body and blood of Christ, but real bread and wine: And consequently, that according to our Saviour's arguing after his Resurrection they had no reason to believe Transubstantiation before. For that very Argument by which our Saviour proves the reality of his body after his Resurrection doth as strongly prove the reality of bread and wine after Consecration. But our Saviour's Argument was most infallibly good and true, and therefore the Doctrine of Transubstantiation is undoubtedly false.

Upon the whole matter I shall only say this, that some other Points between us and the Church of Rome are managed with some kind of wit and subtilty, but this of Transubstantiation is carried out by meer dint of impudence and facing down of Mankind.

And of this the more discerning persons of that Church are of late grown so sensible that they would now be glad to be rid of this odious and ridiculous Doctrine. But the Council of Trent hath rivetted it so fast into their Religion, and made it so necessary and essential a Point of their belief, that they cannot now part with it if they would; it is like a Mill-stone hung about the neck of Popery, which will sink it at the last.

And though some of their greatest Wits, as Cardinal Perron, and of late Monsieur Arnauld, have undertaken the defence of it in great Volumes; yet it is an absurdity of that monstrous and massy weight, that no humane authority or wit are able to support it: It will make the very Pillars of St. Peter's crack, and requires more Volumes to make it good than would fill the Vatican.

And now I would apply my self to the poor deluded People of that Church, if they were either permitted by their Priests, or durst venture without their leave, to look into their Religion and to examine the Doctrines of it. Consider, and shew your selves men. Do not suffer your selves any longer to be led blindfold, and by an implicit Faith in your Priests, into the belief of nonsense and contradiction. Think it enough and too much to let them rook you out of your money for pretended Pardons and counterfeit Reliques, but let not the Authority of any Priest or Church persuade you out of your Senses. Credulity is certainly a fault as well as Infidelity: and he who said, Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed; hath no where said, Blessed are they that have seen and yet have not believed; much less, Blessed are they that believe directly contrary to what they see.

To conclude this Discourse. By what hath been said upon this Argument it will appear, with how little truth, and reason, and regard to the interest of our common Christianity, it is so often said by our Adversaries, that there are as good Arguments for the belief of Transubstantiation as of the Doctrine of the Trinity: When they themselves do acknowledge with us that the Doctrine of the Trinity is grounded upon the Scriptures, and that according to the interpretation of them by the consent of the ancient Fathers: But their Doctrine of Transubstantiation I have plainly shewn to have no such Ground, and that this is acknowledged by very many learned men of their own Church. And this Doctrine of theirs being first plainly proved by us to be destitute of all Divine Warrant and Authority, our Objections against it from the manifold contradictions of it to Reason and Sense are so many Demonstrations of the falshood of it. Against all which they have nothing to put in the opposite Scale but the Infallibility of their Church, for for which there is even less colour of proof from Scripture than for Transubstantiation it self. But so fond are they of their own Innovations and Errours, that rather than the Dictates of their Church, how groundless and absurd soever, should be call'd in question; rather than not have their will of us in imposing upon us what they please, they will overthrow any Article of the Christian Faith, and shake the very foundations of our common Religion: A clear evidence that the Church of Rome is not the true Mother, since she can be so well contented that Christianity should be destroyed rather than the Point in question should be decided against her.

S E R M O N XXVII.

The Protestant Religion Vindicated, from the Charge of Singularity and Novelty.

Preached before the King at Whitehall, April 2. 1680.

Joshua xxiv. 15.

If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom you will serve.

These are the words of Joshua; who after he had brought the People of Israel through many difficulties and hazards into the quiet possession of the promised land, like a good Prince and Father of his Country was very solicitous, before his death, to lay the firmest foundation he could devise of the future happiness and prosperity of that People in whose present settlement he had, by the blessing of God, been so successful an instrument.

And because he knew no means so effectual to this end, as to confirm them in the Religion and Worship of the true God, who had by so remarkable and miraculous a Providence planted them in that good Land; he summons the people together, and represents to them all those considerations that might engage them and their posterity for ever, to continue in the true Religion. He tells them what God had already done for them, and what he had promised to do more, if they would be faithful to him: And on the other hand, what fearful Calamities he had threatned, and would certainly bring upon them, in case they should transgress his Covenant, and go and serve other Gods. And after many Arguments to this purpose, he concludes with this earnest Exhortation at the 14th. verse, Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and in truth, and put away the Gods which your Fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve ye the Lord.

And to give the greater weight and force to this Exhortation, he does by a very eloquent kind of insinuation as it were once more set them at liberty, and leave them to their own election: It being the nature of man to stick more stedfastly to that which is not violently imposed, but is our own free and deliberate choice: And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord; chuse you this day whom you will serve.

Which words offer to our consideration these following observations.

1. It is here supposed that a Nation must be of some Religion or other. Joshua does not put this to their choice, but takes it for granted.

2. That though Religion be a matter of choice, yet it is neither a thing indifferent in it self nor to a good Governour, what Religion his people are of. Joshua does not put it to them as if it were an indifferent matter whether they served God

God or Idols ; he had sufficiently declared before which of these was to be preferred.

3. The true Religion may have several prejudices and objections against it : If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, intimating that upon some accounts, and to some persons it may appear so.

4. That the true Religion hath those real advantages on its side, that it may safely be referr'd to any considerate man's choice. And this seems to be the true Reason why Joshua refers it to them : Not that he thought the thing indifferent, but because he was fully satisfied that the truth and goodness of the one above the other was so evident, that there was no danger that any prudent man should make a wrong choice, If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom you will serve ; intimating that the plain difference of the things in competition would direct them what to chuse.

5. The Example of Princes and Governours hath a very great influence upon the people in matters of Religion. This I collect from the Context : And Joshua was sensible of it ; and therefore though he firmly believed the true Religion to have those advantages that would certainly recommend it to every impartial man's judgment, yet knowing that the multitude are easily impos'd upon and led into error, he thought fit to encline and determine them by his own example, and by declaring his own peremptory resolution in the case, Chuse you this day whom you will serve ; as for me, I and my house will serve the Lord. Laws are a good security to Religion ; but the Example of Governours is a living Law, which secretly over-rules the minds of men, and bends them to a compliance with it.

-----*Non sic inflectere sensus

The Lives and Actions of Princes have usually a greater sway upon the minds of the People than their Laws.

All these Observations are I think very natural, and very considerable. I shall not be able to speak to them all ; but shall proceed so far as the time and your patience will give me leave.

First, It is here supposed that a Nation must be of some Religion or other. Joshua does not put it to their choice whether they would worship any Deity at all. That had been too wild and extravagant a supposition, and which it is likely in those days had never entred into any man's mind. But he takes it for granted that all people will be of some Religion ; and then offers it to their consideration which they would pitch upon, Chuse you this day whom you will serve, whether the Gods which your fathers served, &c.

Religion is a thing to which men are not only formed by education and custom, but, as Tully says, Quo omnes duce natura vehimur, It is that to which we are all carried by a natural inclination ; which is the true Reason why some Religion or other hath so universally prevailed in all Ages and places of the world.

The temporal felicity of men, and the ends of Government can very hardly, if at all, be attained without Religion. Take away this, and all Obligations of Conscience cease : and where there is no obligation of Conscience, all security of Truth and Justice and mutual confidence among men is at an end. For why should I repose confidence in that man, why should I take his word, or believe his promise, or put any of my Interests and Concernments into his power, who hath no other restraint upon him but that of humane Laws, and is at Liberty in his own mind and principles to do whatever he judgeth judgeth to be expedient for his Interest, provided he can but do it without danger to himself? So that declared Atheism and Infidelity doth justly bring men under a jealousy and suspicion with all mankind; and every wise man hath reason to be upon his guard against those, from whom he hath no cause to expect more justice and truth and equity in their dealings than he can compell them to by the meer dint and force of Laws. For by declaring themselves free from all other obligations they give us fair warning what we are to expect at their hands, and how far we may trust them. Religion is the strongest band of humane Society; and God so necessary to the welfare and happiness of mankind, as it could not have been more, if we could suppose the Being of God himself to have been purposely designed and contrived for the benefit and advantage of men: So that very well may it be taken for granted, that a Nation must be of some Religion or other.

Secondly, Though Religion be a matter of our choice, yet it is neither a thing indifferent in it self, nor to a good Governour, what Religion his people are of. Notwithstanding the supposition of the Text, Josbua doth not leave them at liberty whether they will serve God or Idols: But by a very Rhetorical Scheme of Speech endeavours to engage them more firmly to the worship of the true God.

To countenance and support the true Religion, and to take care that the people be instructed in it, and that none be permitted to debauch and seduce men from it, properly belongs to the Civil Magistrate. This power the Kings of Israel always exercised, not only with allowance, but with great approbation and commendation from God himself. And the case is not altered since Christianity: The better the Religion is, the better it deserves the countenance and support of the Civil Authority. And this Power of the Civil Magistrate in matters of Religion was never called in question, but by the Enthusiasts of these latter times: And yet among these, every Father and Master of a Family claims this Power over his Children and servants, at the same time that they deny it to the Magistrate over his Subjects. But I would fain know where the difference lyes. Hath a Master of a Family more power over those under his Government than the Magistrate hath? No man ever pretended it: Nay, so far is it from that, that the natural Authority of a Father may be, and often is, limited and restrained by the Laws of the Civil Magistrate. And why then may not a Magistrate exercise the same power over his Subjects in matters of Religion, which every Master challengeth to himself in his own Family, that is, to establish the true worship of God in such manner and with such circumstances as he thinks best, and to permit none to affront it, or to seduce from it those that are under his care? And to prevent all misunderstandings in this matter, I do not hereby ascribe any thing to the Magistrate that can possibly give him any pretence of right to reject God's true Religion, or to declare what he pleases to be so, and what Books he pleases to be Canonical and the Word of God; and consequently to make a false Religion so currant by the stamp of his Authority, as to oblige his Subjects to the profession of it: Because he who acknowledgeth himself to derive all his Authority from God, can pretend to none against Him. But if a false Religion be established by Law, the case here is the same as in all other Laws that are sinful in the matter of them, but yet made by a lawful Authority; in this case the Subject is not bound to profess a false Religion, but patiently to suffer for the constant profession of the true.

And to speak freely in this matter, I cannot think (till I be better inform'd, which I am always ready to be) that any pretence of Conscience warrants any man, that is not extraordinarily commission'd, as the Apostles and first Publishers of the Gospel were, and cannot justify that Commission by Miracles as they did, to affront the establish'd Religion of a Nation (though it be false) and openly to draw men off from the profession of it in contempt of the Magistrate and the Law: All that persons of a different Religion can in such a case reasonably pretend to, is to enjoy the private liberty and exercise of their own Conscience and Religion; For which they ought to be very thankful, and to forbear the open making of Profelytes to their own Religion, (though they be never so sure that they are in the right) till they have either an extraordinary Commission from God to that purpose, or the Providence of God make way for it by the permission or connivance of the Magistrate. Not but that every man hath a Right to publish and propagate the true Religion, and to declare it against a false one; but there is no Obligation upon any man to attempt this to no purpose, and when without a miracle it can have no other effect but the loss of his own life: unless he have an immediate Command and Commission from God to this purpose, and be endued with a power of Miracles, as a publick Seal and Testimony of that Commission, which was the case of the Apostles, who after they had received an immediate Commission were not to enter upon the execution of it, but to stay at Jerusalem, till they were endued with power from on high. In this case a man is to abide all hazards, and may reasonably expect both extraordinary assistance and success, as the Apostles had; and even a miraculous protection till his work be done; and after that, if he be call'd to suffer Martyrdom, a supernatural support under those sufferings.

And that they are guilty however of gross Hypocrisy who pretend a further obligation of Conscience in this matter, I shall give this plain Demonstration, which relies upon Concessions generally made on all hands, and by all Parties. No Protestant (that I know of) holds himself obliged to go and Preach up his Religion and make Converts in Spain or Italy: Nor do either the Protestant Ministers or Papish Priests think themselves bound in Conscience to preach the Gospel in Turky, and to confute the Alchoran, to convert the Mahometans. And what is the Reason? because of the severity of the Inquisition in Papish Countrys, and of the Laws in Turky. But doth the danger then alter the obligation of Conscience? No certainly; but it makes men throw off the false pretence and disguise of it: But where there is a real obligation of Conscience, danger should not deter men from their Duty, as it did not the Apostles: which shews their case to be different from ours, and that probably this matter was stated right at first. So that whatever is pretended this is certain, that the Priests and Jesuites of the Church of Rome have in truth no more obligation of Conscience to make Converts here in England than in Sueden or Turky; where it seems the evident danger of the attempt hath for these many years given them a perfect discharge from their duty in this particular. I shall join the Third and Fourth Observations together. That though the true Religion may have several prejudices and objections against it, yet upon examination there will be found those real advantages on its side, that it may safely be referred to any considerate man's choice: If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom you will serve. If it seem evil unto you; Intimating, that to some persons and upon some accounts it may appear so. But when the matter is truly represented, the choice is not difficult, nor requires any long deliberation, Chuse you this day whom you will serve. Let but the Cause be fully and impartially heard, and a wise man may determine himself upon the spot, and give his Verdict without ever going from the Bar.

The true Religion hath always lain under some prejudices with partial and inconsiderate men; which commonly spring from one of these two Causes, either the Prepossessions of a contrary Religion, or the contrariety of the true Religion to the vicious inclinations and practices of men, which usually lies at the bottom of all prejudice against Religion. Religion is an enemy to mens beloved lusts, and therefore they are enemies to Religion. I begin with the first, which is as much as I shall be able to compass at this time.

I. The Prepossessions of a false Religion; which commonly pretends two advantages on its side, Antiquity and Universality; and is wont to object to the true Religion Novelty and Singularity. And both these are intimated both before and after the Text: Put away the gods which your Fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt: And chuse you this day whom you will serve, whether the gods which your Fathers served on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites in whose Land ye dwell. Idolatry was the Religion of their Fathers, and had spread it self over the greatest and most ancient Nations of the World and the most famous for Learning and Arts, the Chaldeans and Egyptians; and was the Religion of the Amorites and the Nations round about them. So that Joshua represents the Heathen Religion with all its strength and advantage, and does not dissemble its confident pretence to Antiquity and Universality, whereby they would also insinuate the Novelty and Singularity of the worship of the God of Israel. And it is very well worthy our observation, that one or both of these have always been the Exceptions of false Religions (especially of Idolatry and Superstition) against the true Religion. The ancient Idolaters of the world pretended their Religion to be ancient and universal, that their Fathers served these Gods, and that the worship of the God of Israel was a plain Innovation upon the Ancient and Catholick Religion of the World, and that the very first rise and original of it was within the memory of their Fathers; and no doubt they were almost perpetually upon the Jews with that pert question, Where was your Religion before Abraham? and telling them, that it was the Religion of a very small part and corner of the World, confined within a little Territory: But the great Nations of the world, the Egyptians and Chaldeans, famous for all kind of knowledge and wisdom, and indeed all the Nations round about them, worshipped other Gods: And therefore it was an intolerable arrogance and singularity in them, to condemn their Fathers and all the world, to be of a Religion different from all other Nations, and hereby to separate themselves and make a Schism from the rest of mankind.

And when the Gospel appeared in the world, which the Apostle to the Hebrews (to prevent the scandal of that word) calls the time of Reformation, the Jews and Heathen still renewed the same Objections against Christianity. The Jews urged against it, not the ancient Scriptures and the true word of God, but that which they pretended to be of much greater Authority, the unwritten Word, the ancient and constant Traditions of their Church; and branded this new Religion with the name of Herésie, After the way, (saith St. Paul) that you call Herésie, so worship I the God of my Fathers; believing all things that are written in the Law, and in the Prophets: By which we see, that they of the Church of Rome were not the first who called it Herésie to reject humane Traditions, and to make the Scriptures the Rule of Faith: This was done long before by their Reverend Predecessors, the Scribes and Pharisees.

And the Gentiles, they pretended against it both Antiquity and Universality, the constant belief and practice of all Ages, and almost all Places of the World; Sequitur majores nostros qui feliciter secuti sunt suos, says Symmachus, We follow our Forefathers, who happily followed theirs; But you bring in a new Religion, never known nor heard of in the World before.

And when the Christian Religion was most miserably depraved and corrupted, in that dismal night of Ignorance which over-spread these Western Parts of the World about the Ninth and Tenth Centuries; and many pernicious Doctrines and Superstitious Practices were introduced, to the woful defacing of the Christian Religion, and making it quite another thing from what our Saviour had left it; and these Corruptions and Abuses had continued for several Ages: No sooner was a Reformation attempted but the Church of Rome make the same out-cry of Novelty and Singularity: And though we have substantially answered it a thousand times, yet we cannot obtain of them to forbear that thread-bare Question, Where was your Religion before Luther?

I shall therefore apply my self to answer these two Exceptions with all the brevity and clearness I can: And I doubt not to make it appear, that as to the point of Universality (though that be no-wise necessary to justify the truth of any Religion) ours is not inferior to theirs; if we take in the Christians of all Ages, and of all parts of the World: And as to the point of Antiquity, that our Faith and the Doctrines of our Religion have clearly the advantage of theirs; all our Faith being unquestionably ancient, theirs not so.

1. As to the Point of Universality. Which they of the Church of Rome, I know not for what reason, will needs make an inseparable property and mark of the true Church. And they never flout at the Protestant Religion with so good a grace among the ignorant People, as when they are bragging of their Numbers, and despising poor Protestantism because embraced by so few. This pestilent Northern Heresie (as of late they scornfully call it) entertained it seems only in this cold and cloudy Corner of the World, by a company of dull stupid People, that can neither penetrate into the proofs nor the Possibility of Transubstantiation; whereas to the more refined Southern Wits all these difficult and obscure Points are as clear as their Sun at Noon day.

But to speak to the thing it self. If Number be necessary to prove the truth and goodness of any Religion, ours upon enquiry will be found not so inconsiderable as our Adversaries would make it. Those of the Reformed Religion, according to the most exact calculations that have been made by learned men, being esteemed not much unequal in number to those of the Romish persuasion. But then if we take in the ancient Christian Church, whose Faith was the same with ours; and other Christian Churches at this day, which altogether are vastly greater and more numerous than the Roman Church, and which agree with us, several of them in very considerable Doctrines and Practices in dispute between us and the Church of Rome, and all of them in disclaiming that fundamental point of the Roman Religion, and Summ of Christianity (as Bellarmino calls it) I mean the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome over all Christians and Churches in the World, then the Number on our side will be much greater than on theirs.

But we will not stand upon this advantage with them. Suppose we were by much the fewer. So hath the true Church of God often been, without any the least prejudice to the truth of their Religion. What think we of the Church in Abraham's time, which for ought we know was confin'd to one Family ; and one small Kingdom, that of Melchisedec King of Salem? What think we of it in Moses his time, when it was confin'd to one People wandring in a Wilderness? What of it in Elijah's time, when besides the two Tribes that worshipp'd at Jerusalem, there were in the other ten but seven thousand that had not bow'd their knee to Baal? What in our Saviour's time, when the whole Christian Church consisted of twelve Apostles, and seventy Disciples, and some few Followers beside? How would Bellarmino have despis'd this little Flock, because it wanted one or two of his goodliest marks of the true Church, Universality and Splendor? And what think we of the Christian Church in the height of Arianism and Pelagianism, when a great part of Christendom was over-run with these Errors, and the number of the Orthodox was inconsiderable in comparison of the Hereticks.

But what need I to urge these Instances? As if the Truth of a Religion were to be estimat'd and carried by the major Vote; which as it can be an Argument to none but Fools, so I dare say no honest and wise man ever made use of it for a solid proof of the truth and goodness of any Church or Religion. If multitude be an Argument that men are in the right, in vain then hath the Scripture said, thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil: For if this Argument be of any force, the greater Number never go wrong.

2. As to the Point of Antiquity. This is not always a certain Mark of the true Religion. For surely there was a time when Christianity began and was a new Profession, and then both Judaism and Paganism had certainly the advantage of it in Point of Antiquity. But the proper Question in this Case is, Which is the true Ancient Christian Faith, that of the Church of Rome or Ours? And to make this matter plain, it is to be consider'd, that a great part of the Roman Faith is the same with Ours; as, namely, the Articles of the Apostles Creed, as explain'd by the first four General Councils. And these make up our whole Faith, so far as concerns matters of meer and simple Belief, that are of absolute necessity to Salvation. And in this Faith of Ours, there is nothing wanting that can be shewn in any ancient Creed of the Christian Church. And thus far Our Faith, and theirs of the Roman Church, are undoubtedly of equal Antiquity, that is, as ancient as Christianity it self.

All the Question is, as to the matters in difference between us. The principal whereof are the twelve new Articles of the Creed of Pope Pius the IV, concerning the Sacrifice of the Mass, Transubstantiation, the Communion in one kind only, Purgatory, &c. not one of which is to be found in any ancient Creed or Confession of Faith generally allowed in the Christian Church. The Antiquity of these we deny, and affirm them to be Innovations: and have particularly prov'd them to be so, not only to the answering, but almost to the silencing of our Adversaries.

And as for the negative Articles of the Protestant Religion, in opposition to the Errors and Corruptions of the Romish Faith, these are by accident become a part of our Faith and Religion, occasioned by their Errors; as the renouncing of the Doctrines of Arianism became part of the Catholick Religion, after the rise of that Heresie.

So that the Case is plainly this; We believe and teach all that is contained in the Creeeds of the ancient Christian Church, and was by them esteem'd necessary to Salvation: and this is Our Religion. But now the Church of Rome hath innovated in the Christian Religion, and made several Additions to it; and greatly corrupted it both in the Doctrines and Practices of it: And these Additions and Corruptions are their Religion, as it is distinct from ours ; and both because they are Corruptions and Novelties we have rejected them : And our rejection of these is our Reformation : And our Reformation we grant (if this will do them any good) not to be so ancient as their Corruptions : All Reformation necessarily supposing Corruptions and Errors to have been before it.

And now we are at a little better leisure to answer that captious Question of theirs, Where was your Religion before Luther ? Where-ever Christianity was ; in some places more pure, in others more corrupted : but especially in these Western parts of Christendom over-grown for several Ages with manifold Errors and Corruptions, which the Reformation hath happily cut off, and cast away. So that though our Reformation was as late as Luther, our Religion is as ancient as Christianity it self. For when the Additions which the Church of Rome hath made to the ancient Christian Faith, and their Innovations in Practice are pared off, that which remains of their Religion is ours ; and this they cannot deny to be every tittle of it the ancient Christianity.

And what other Answer than this could the Jews have given to the like Question, if it had been put to them by the ancient Idolaters of the World, Where was your Religion before Abraham ? but the very same in substance which we now give to the Church of Rome ? That for many Ages the Worship of the one true God had been corrupted, and the Worship of Idols had prevailed in a great part of the World : that Abraham was raised up by God to reform Religion, and to reduce the Worship of God to its first Institution ; in the doing whereof he necessarily separated Himself and his Family from the Communion of those Idolaters. So that though the Reformation which Abraham began was new, yet his Religion was truly ancient ; as old as that of Noah, and Enoch, and Adam. Which is the same in substance that we say, and with the same and equal reason.

And if they will still complain of the Newness of our Reformation, so do we too, and are heartily sorry it began no sooner ; but however better late than never. Besides, it ought to be considered, that this Objection of Novelty lies against all Reformation whatsoever, though never so necessary, and though things be never so much amiss : And it is in effect to say, that if things be once bad, they must never be better, but must always remain as they are ; for they cannot be better, without being reformed, and a Reformation must begin some time, and whenever it begins it is certainly new. So that if a real Reformation be made, the thing justifies it self ; and no Objection of Novelty ought to take place against that which upon all accounts was so fit and necessary to be done. And if they of the Church of Rome would but speak their mind out in this matter, they are not so much displeased at the Reformation which we have made because it is new, as because it is a Reformation. It was the humour of Babylon of old (as the Prophet tells us) that she would not be healed ; and this is still the temper of the Church of Rome, they hate to be reformed ; and rather than acknowledge themselves to have been once in an Error, they will continue in it for ever. And this is that which at first made, and still continues the breach and Separation between us ; of which we are no-wise guilty who have only reformed what was amiss, but they who obstinately persist in their Errors ; and will needs impose them upon us and will not let us be of their Communion unless we will say they are no Errors.

II. The other Prejudice against the true Religion is, the contrariety of it to the vicious inclinations and practices of Men. II.

It is too heavy a yoke, and lays too great a restraint upon humane Nature. And this is that which in truth lies at the bottom of all Objections against Religion, Men love darkness rather than light, because their Deeds are evil.

But this Argument will require a Discourse by it self, and therefore I shall not now enter upon it ; only crave your patience a little longer, whilst I make some Reflections upon what hath been already delivered.

You see what are the Exceptions which Idolatry and Superstition have always made, and do at this day still make, against the true Religion ; and how slight and insignificant they are.

But do we then charge the Church of Rome with Idolatry ? Our Church most certainly does so, and hath always done it from the beginning of the Reformation ; in her Homilies, and Liturgy, and Canons, and in the Writings of her best and ablest Champions. And though I have, as impartially as I could, considered what hath been said on both sides in this Controversie ; yet I must confess I could never yet see any tolerable defence made by them against this heavy charge. And they themselves acknowledge themselves to be greatly under the suspicion of it, by saying (as Cardinal Perron and others do) that the *Pōnitiv*e Christians for some Ages did neither worship Images, nor pray to Saints, for fear of being thought to approach too near the Heathen Idolatry : And which is yet more ; divers of their most learned men do confess, that if Transubstantiation be not true, they are gross Idolaters as any in the World. And I hope they do not expect it from us, that in complement to them, and to acquit them from the charge of Idolatry, we should presently deny our senses, and believe Transubstantiation ; and if we do not believe this, they grant we have Reason to charge them with Idolatry.

But we own them to be a true Church ; which they cannot be, if they be guilty of Idolatry : This they often urge us withal, and there seems at first sight to be something in it : And for that reason I shall endeavour to give so clear and satisfactory an answer to it, as that we may never more be troubled with it.

The truth is, we would fain hope, because they still retain the Essentials of Christianity, and profess to believe all the Articles of the Christian Faith, that notwithstanding their Corruptions they may still retain the true Essence of a Church : as a man may be truly and really a man, though he have the Plague upon him ; and for that reason be fit to be avoided by all that wish well to themselves : But if this will not do, we cannot help it. Therefore to push the matter home ; Are they sure that this is a firm and good consequence, That if they be Idolaters, they cannot be a true Church ? Then let them look to it. It is they, I take it, that are concerned to prove themselves a true Church, and not we to prove it for them. And if they will not understand it of themselves, it is fit they should be told that there is a great difference between Concessions of Charity and of Necessity, and that a very different use ought to be made of them. We are willing to think the best of them ; but if they dislike our Charity in this point, nothing against the hair : If they will forgive us this Injury, we will not offend them any more : But rather than have any farther difference with them about this matter, we will for quietness sake compound it thus ; That till they can clearly acquit themselves from being Idolaters, they shall never more against their wills be esteemed a true Church.

And now to draw to a Conclusion.

If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, and to worship him only ; to pray to him alone, and that only in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, as he hath given us Commandment ; because there is but one God, and one Mediator between God and Man, The Man Christ Jesus. If it seem evil unto you, to have the liberty to serve God in a Language you can understand ; and to have the free use of the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make men wise unto Salvation ; and to have the Sacraments of our Religion entirely administered to us, as our Lord did institute and appoint.

And on the other hand, if it seem good to us, to put our necks once more under that yoke, which our Fathers were not able to bear : If it be really a Preferment to a Prince to hold the Pope's Stirrup, and a Privilege to be deposed by him at his pleasure, and a courtesie to be kill'd at his command : If to pray without Understanding, and to obey without Reason, and to believe gainst Sense ; if Ignorance, and implicit Faith, and an Inquisition, be in good earnest such charming and desirable things : Then welcome Popery ; which, where-ever thou comest, dost infallibly bring all these wonderful Privileges and Blessings along with thee.

But, the Question is not now about the choice, but the change of our Religion, after we have been so long settled in the quiet possession and enjoyment of it. Men are very loth to change even a false Religion. Hath a Nation changed their Gods, which yet are no Gods ? And surely there is much more reason why we should be tenacious of the Truth, and hold fast that which is good.

We have the best Religion in the World, the very same which the Son of God revealed, which the Apostles planted and confirmed by Miracles, and which the noble Army of Martyrs sealed with their Blood : And we have retrench'd from it all false Doctrines and superstitious Practices which have been added since. And I think we may without immodesty say, That upon the plain square of Scripture and Reason, of the Tradition and Practice of the first and best Ages of the Christian Church, we have fully justified Our Religion ; and made it evident to the World, that our Adversaries are put to very hard shifts, and upon a perpetual disadvantage in the defence of Theirs.

I wish it were as easie for us to justifie our Lives as our Religion. I do not mean in comparison of our Adversaries (for that, as bad as we are, I hope we are yet able to do) but in comparison of the Rules of our holy Religion, from which we are infinitely swerv'd ; which I would to God we all did seriously consider and lay to heart : I say, in comparison of the Rules of our Holy Religion, which teach us to deny ungodliness and Worldly lusts, and to live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present World, in expectation of the blessed hope, and the glorious appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ ; To whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, &c.

S E R M O N XXVIII.

Objections against the true Religion answer'd.

Joshua xxiv. 15.

And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom you will serve.

These words, as I have already declared in the former Discourse, are the last counsel and advice which Joshua gave to the People of Israel, after he had safely conducted them into the Land of Canaan. And that he might the more effectually perswade them to continue stedfast in the worship of the true God, by an eloquent kind of insinuation he doth as it were once more set them at liberty and leave them to their own choice; If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, chuse you this day whom you will serve.

The plain sense of which Words may be resolved into this Proposition, That notwithstanding all the prejudices and objections against the true Religion, yet it hath those real advantages on its side that it may safely be referred to any impartial and considerate man's choice; If it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord; intimating that to some persons, and upon some accounts, it may seem so; but when the matter is thoroughly examined, the resolution and choice cannot be difficult, nor require any long deliberation, Chuse you this day whom you will serve.

The true Religion hath always layn under some prejudices with partial and inconsiderate men arising chiefly from these two Causes; the prepossessions of a false Religion; and the contrariety of the true Religion to the inclinations of men, and the uneasiness of it in point of Practice.

First, from the prepossessions of a false Religion; which hath always been wont to lay claim to antiquity and Universality, and to charge the true Religion with Novelty and Singularity. And both these are intimated before the Text; put away the Gods whom your Fathers served on the other side of the Flood and in Egypt, and chuse you this day whom you will serve. It was pretended that the worship of Idols was the ancient Religion of the World, of those great Nations, the Egyptians and Chaldeans, and of all the Nations round about them. But this hath already been considered at large.

Secondly, There are another sort of Prejudices against Religion, more apt to stick with men of better sense and reason; and these arise principally from the contrariety of the true Religion to the inclinations of men, and the uneasiness of it in point of practice. It is pretended that Religion is a heavy yoke, and lays too great a restraint upon humane Nature, and that the Laws of it bear too hard upon the general inclinations of mankind.

I shall not at present meddle with the speculative Objections against Religion, upon account of the pretended unreasonableness of many things in point of belief: because the contrariety of the true Religion to the inclinations tions of men, and the uneasiness of it in point of practice, is that which in truth lies at the bottom of Atheism and Infidelity, and raises all that animosity which is in the minds of bad men against Religion, and exasperates them to oppose it with all their wit and malice: Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. And if this prejudice were but once removed, and men were in some measure reconciled to the practice of Religion, the speculative Objections against it would almost vanish of themselves: for there wants little else to enable a man to answer them, but a willingness of mind to have them answered, and that we have no interest and inclination to the contrary. And therefore I shall at present wholly apply my self to remove this prejudice against Religion, from the contrariety of it to the inclinations of men, and the uneasiness of it in point of practice.

And there are two parts of this Objection.

1st. That a great part of the Laws of Religion do thwart the natural inclinations of men, which may reasonably be supposed to be from God. And,

2^{ly}. That all of them together are a heavy yoke, and do lay too great a restraint upon humane Nature, intrenching too much upon the pleasures and liberty of it.

I. That a great part of the Laws of Religion do thwart the natural inclinations of men, which may reasonably be supposed to be from God. So that God seems to have set our nature and our duty at variance, to have given us appetites and inclinations one way, and Laws another: Which if it were true, must needs render the practice of Religion very grievous and uneasy.

The force of this Objection is very smartly expressed in those celebrated Verses of a Noble Poet of our own, which are so frequently in the mouths of many who are thought to bear no good will to Religion.

*O wearisome condition of Humanity,
Born under one Law, to another bound;
Vainly begot, and yet forbidden Vanity;
Created sick, commanded to be sound.
If Nature did not take delight in blood,
She would have made more easie ways to good.*

So that this Objection would fain charge the sins of men upon God; first upon account of the evil inclinations of our Nature; and then of the contrariety of our duty to those inclinations. And from the beginning man hath always been apt to lay the blame of his faults where it can least lie, upon goodness and perfection it self. The very first sin that ever man was guilty of he endeavoured to throw upon God: The woman whom thou gavest me (saith Adam) she gave me of the Tree, and I did eat. And his posterity are still apt to excuse themselves the same way. But to return a particular answer to this Objection.

I. We will acknowledge so much of it as is true; That there is a great degeneracy and corruption of humane Nature, from what it was originally framed when it came out of God's hands: of which the Scripture gives us this account, that it was occasioned by the voluntary transgression of a plain and easie Command given by God to our first Parents. And this weakness contracted by the fall of our first Parents naturally descends upon us their Posterity and visibly discovers it self in our inclinations to evil, and impotence to that which is good.

And of this the Heathen Philosophers, from the light of nature, and their own experience and observation of themselves and others, were very sensible ; that humane Nature was very much declined from its primitive rectitude, and sunk into a weak and drooping and sickly State which they called a μετεσώφισις, the moulting of the wings of the soul : But yet they were so just and reasonable as not to charge this upon God, but upon some corruption and impurity contracted by the Soul in a former State, before its union with the Body. For the descent of the Soul into these gross earthly Bodies they looked upon as partly the punishment of faults committed in a former State, and partly as the opportunity of a new trial in order to its purgation and recovery. And this was the best account they were able to give of this matter, without the Light of Divine Revelation.

So that the degeneracy of humane Nature is universally acknowledged, and God acquitted from being the cause of it : But however, the posterity of Adam do all partake of the weakness contracted by his fall, and do still labour under the miseries and inconveniencies of it. But then this degeneracy is not total. For though our faculties be much weakened and disordered, yet they are not destroyed nor wholly perverted. Our natural Judgment and Conscience doth still dictate to us what is good, and what we ought to do ; and the impressions of the natural Law, as to the great lines of our duty, are still legible upon our hearts. So that the Law written in God's Word is not contrary to the Law written upon our hearts. And therefore it is not truly said, that we are born under one Law and bound to another. But the great disorder is, that our inferiour faculties, our sensitive appetite and passions, are broke loose and have got head of our Reason, and are upon all occasions apt to rebell against it : but our Judgment still dictates the very same things which the Law of God doth enjoin.

It is likewise very visible, that the sad effects of this degeneracy do not appear equally and alike in all ; whether from the better or worse temper of our Bodies or from some other more secret cause, I shall not determine, because I know not : But that there is a difference is evident. For though a proneness to evil, and some seeds of it be in all, yet we may plainly discover in many very early and forward inclinations to some kinds of vertue and goodness : which being cultivated by Education, may under the ordinary influence of God's grace be carried on with great ease to great perfection.

And there are others who are not so strongly bent to that which is evil, but that by good instruction and example in their tender years they may be swayed the other way, and without great difficulty formed to goodness.

There are some indeed (which is the hardest case) in whom there do very early appear strong propensions and inclinations to evil, especially to some particular kinds of vice : But the case of these is not desperate ; though greater attention and care, and a much more prudent management is required in the education of such persons to correct their evil tempers, and by degrees to bend their inclinations the right way : and if the seeds of piety and vertue be but carefully sown at first, very much may be done by this means, even in the most depraved Natures, towards the altering and changing of them ; however, to the checking and controuling of their vicious inclinations. And if these persons, when they come to riper years, would pursue these advantages of education, and take some pains with them-themselves, and earnestly seek the assistance of God's grace, I doubt not but even these persons by degrees might at last get the mastery of their unhappy tempers.

For next to the Being and perfections of God, and the immortality of our own Souls, there is no Principle of Religion that I do more firmly believe than this, that God hath that love for men that if we do heartily beg his assistance, and be not wanting to our selves, he will afford it to every one of us in proportion to our need of it; that he is always beforehand with us, and prevents every man with the gracious offers of his help. And I doubt not but many very perverse Natures have thus been reclaimed. For God, who is the Lover of Souls (as the Son of Sirach calls him) though he may put some men under more difficult circumstances of becoming good than others, yet he leaves no man under a fatal necessity of being wicked and perishing everlastingly. He tenderly considers every man's case and circumstances, and it is we that pull destruction upon our selves, with the works of our own hands: But as sure as God is good and just, no man in the World is ruined for want of having sufficient help and aid afforded to him by God for his recovery.

2. It is likewise to be considered that God did not design to create man in the full Possession of happiness at first, but to train him up to it by the tryal of his obedience. But there could be no tryal of our Obedience without some difficulty in our duty: Either by reason of powerful temptations from without, or of cross and perverse inclinations from within.

Our first Parents, in their state of innocency, had only the tryal of temptation without; to which they yielded, and were overcome; having only a natural power to have resisted the temptation, without any aid of supernatural grace: And that weakness to good, and proneness to evil, which they by wilful transgression contracted, is naturally derived to us; and we necessarily partake of the bitterness and impurity of the Fountain from whence we spring. So that we now labour under a double difficulty; being assaulted by temptations from without, and incited by evil inclinations from within: But then, to balance these, we have a double advantage; that a greater reward is proposed to us, than for ought we know would have been conferred on our first Parents had they continued innocent; and that we are endued with a supernatural power to conflict with these difficulties. So that, according to the merciful dispensation of God, all this conflict between our inclination and our duty does only serve to give a fairer opportunity for the fitting tryal of our obedience, and for the more glorious reward of it.

3. God hath provided an universal remedy for this degeneracy and weakness of humane Nature: So that what we lost by the first Adam is abundantly repaired to us by the second. This St. Paul tells us at large, Rom. 5. That as by one man sin entred into the World, and death by sin; so the grace of God hath abounded to all men by Jesus Christ; And that to such a degree, as effectually to countervail the ill effects of original sin, and really to enable men, if they be not wanting to themselves, to master and subdue all the bad inclinations of nature, even in those who seem to be naturally most corrupt and depraved.

And if this be true, we may without any reflection upon God acknowledge, that though he did not at first create man sick and weak, yet he having made himself so, his posterity are born so. But then God hath not left us helpless in this weak and miserable State, into which by wilful transgression mankind is fallen: But as he commands us to be found, so he affords us sufficient aids of his grace by Jesus Christ for our recovery.

And though there is a Law in our Members warring against the Law of our Minds, and captivating us to the Law of Sin and Death; i. e. though our sensitive appetite and passions are apt to rebell against the reason of our minds and the dictates of our natural Conscience, yet every Christian may say with St. Paul, Thanks be to God, who hath given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, i. e. hath not left us destitute of a sufficient aid and strength to enable us to conquer the rebellious motions of sin, by the powerful assistance of that grace which is so plentifully offered to us in the Gospel. And this is the case of all those who live under the Gospel: As for others, as their case is best known to God, so we have no reason to doubt but that his infinite goodness and mercy takes that care of them which becomes a merciful Creator: Though both the measures, and the methods of his mercy towards them are secret and unknown to us.

4. The hardest contest between man's inclination and duty, is in those who have wilfully contracted vicious habits, and by that means, rendered their duty much more difficult to themselves: having greatly improved the evil inclinations of nature by wicked practice and custom. For the Scripture plainly supposeth, that men may debauch even corrupt nature, and make themselves ten-fold more the Children of Wrath and of the Devil than they were by nature.

This is a case sadly to be deplored, but yet not utterly to be despaired of. And therefore those who by a long progress in an evil course, are plunged into this sad condition, ought to consider that they are not to be rescued out of it by an ordinary resolution, and a common grace of God. Their case plainly requires an extraordinary remedy. For he that is deeply engaged in vice is like a man laid fast in a bog, who by a faint and lazy struggling to get out, does but spend his strength to no purpose, and sinks himself the deeper into it: The only way is, by a resolute and vigorous effort to spring out, if possible, at once. And therefore in this case, to a vigorous resolution there must be joyned an earnest application to God for his powerful grace and assistance, to help us out of this miserable State. And if we be truly sensible of the desperate danger of our condition, the pressing necessity of our case will be apt to inspire us with a mighty resolution. For power and necessity are neighbours, and never dwell far asunder. When men are sorely urged and pressed, they find a power in themselves which they thought they had not. Like a coward driven up to a wall, who in the extremity of distress and despair will fight terribly and perform wonders: or like a man lame of the Gout, who being assaulted by a present and terrible danger forgets his Disease, and will find his legs rather than lose his life.

And in this, I do not speak above the rate of humane Nature, and what men thoroughly roused and awakened to a sense of their danger, by a mighty resolution may morally do, through that Divine grace and assistance which is ever ready to be afforded to well resolved minds, and such as are sincerely bent to return to God and their Duty. More than this I cannot say for the encouragement of those who have proceeded far in an evil course: And they who have made their case so very desperate, ought to be very thankful to God that there is any remedy left for them.

5. From all that hath been said, it evidently appears, how malicious a suggestion it is, that God seeks the destruction of men, and hath made his Laws on purpose so difficult and cross to our inclinations that he might have an advantage to ruin us for our disobedience to them. Alas, we are so absolutely under the Power of God, and so unable to withstand it, that he may destroy us when he pleaseth, without seeking pretences for it : For who hath resisted his will ? If goodness were not his nature, he hath power enough to bear out whatever he hath a mind to do to us. But our destruction is plainly of our selves, and God is free from the blood of all men. And he hath not made the way to Eternal Life so difficult to any of us, with a design to make us miserable, but that we by a vigorous resolution, and unwearied diligence, and a patient continuance in well-doing, might win and wear a more glorious Crown, and be fit to receive a more ample reward from his bounty and goodness : yea, in some sense, I may say, from his Justice ; For God is not unrighteous, to forget our work and labour and love. He will fully consider all the pains that any of us take in his service, and all the difficulties that we struggle with out of love to God and goodness. So that this Objection, from the clashing of our duty with our inclination, is I hope fully answered : Since God hath provided so powerful and effectual a remedy against our natural impotency and infirmity, by the Grace of the Gospel.

And though to those who have wilfully contracted vicious habits a religious and vertuous course of life be very difficult, yet the main difficulty lies in our first entrance upon it ; and when that is over, the ways of goodness are as easie as it is fit any thing should be that is so excellent, and that hath the encouragement of so glorious a reward. Custom will reconcile Men almost to any thing ; but there are those charms in the ways of wisdom and vertue, that a little acquaintance and conversation with them will soon make them more delightful than any other course. And who will grudge any pains and trouble to bring himself into so safe and happy a condition ? After we have tryed both courses, of Religion and Profaneness, of Virtue and Vice, we shall certainly find, that nothing is so wise, so easie and so comfortable as to be virtuous and good, and always to do that which we are inwardly convinced we ought to do. Nor would I desire more of any Man in this matter, than to follow the soberest convictions of his own mind, and to do that which upon the most serious consideration at all times, in prosperity and affliction, in sickness and health, in the time of life, and at the hour of death, he judgeth wisest and safest for him to do. I proceed to the

II. Branch of the Objection, That the Laws of Religion (and particularly, of the Christian Religion) are a heavy yoke, laying too great a restraint upon humane nature, and entrenching too much upon the pleasures and liberty of it.

There was, I confess, some pretence for this Objection against the Jewish Religion : which by the multitude of its positive Institutions and external Observances must needs have been very burthensome. And the same Objection lies against the Church of Rome, who (as they have handled Christianity) by the unreasonable number of their needless and senseless Ceremonies, have made the Yoke of Christ heavier than that of Moses, and the Gospel a more carnal Commandment than the Law. So that Christianity is lost among them in the trappings and accouterments of it ; with which instead of adorning Religion they have strangely disguised disguised it, and quite stifled it in the crowd of external Rites and Ceremonies.

But the pure Christian Religion, as it was delivered by our Saviour, hath hardly any thing in it that is positive ; except the two Sacraments, which are not very troublesome neither, but very much for our comfort and advantage, because they convey and confirm to us the great blessings and privileges of our Religion. In other things, Christianity hath hardly imposed any other Laws upon us but what are enacted in our Natures, or are agreeable to the prime and fundamental Laws of it ; nothing but what every man's reason either dictates to him to be necessary, or approves as highly fit and reasonable.

But we do most grossly mistake the nature of-pleasure and liberty, if we promise them to our selves in any evil and wicked course. For, upon due search and tryal it will be found , that true pleasure, and perfect freedom, are no-where to be found but in the practice of vertue, and in the service of God. The Laws of Religion do not abridge us of any pleasure that a wise man can desire, and safely enjoy, I mean without a greater evil and trouble consequent upon it. The pleasure of commanding our appetites, and governing our passions, by the rules of Reason (which are the Laws of God) is infinitely to be preferred before any sensual pleasure whatsoever: Because it is the pleasure of wisdom and discretion ; and gives us the satisfaction of having done that which is best and fittest for reasonable Creatures to do. Who would not rather chuse to govern himself as Scipio did, amidst all the temptations and opportunities of sensual pleasure which his power and victories presented to him, than to wallow in all the delights of sense?

Nothing is more certain in reason and experience, than that every inordinate appetite and affection is a punishment to it self; and is perpetually crossing its own pleasure, and defeating its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. For instance, Intemperance in eating and drinking, instead of delighting and satisfying nature, doth but load and cloy it ; and instead of quenching a natural thirst, which it is extremely pleasant to do, creates an unnatural one, which is troublesome and endless. The pleasure of Revenge, as soon as it is executed turns into grief and pity, guilt and remorse, and a thousand melancholy wishes that we had restrained our selves from so unreasonable an Act. And the same is as evident in other sensual excesses, not so fit to be described. We may trust Epicurus for this, that there can be no true pleasure without temperance in the use of pleasure. And God and Reason have set us no other bounds concerning the use of sensual pleasures, but that we take care not to be injurious to our selves, or others, in the kind, or degree of them. And it is very visible, that all sensual excess is naturally attended with a double inconvenience: As it goes beyond the limits of nature, it begets bodily pains and diseases: As it transgresseth the Rules of Reason and Religion, it breeds guilt and remorse in the mind. And these are, beyond comparison, the two greatest evils in this world ; a diseased body, and a discontented mind ; And in this I am sure I speak to the inward feeling and experience of men ; and say nothing but what every vicious man finds, and hath a more lively sense of, than is to be expressed by words.

When all is done, there is no pleasure comparable to that of Innocency, and freedom from the stings of a guilty conscience ; This is a pure and spiritual pleasure, much above any sensual delight. And yet among all the delights of sense, that of health (which is the natural consequent of a sober, and and chaste, and regular life) is a sensual pleasure far beyond that of any Vice: For it is the life of life; and that which gives a grateful relish to all our other enjoyments. It is not indeed so violent and transporting a pleasure, but it is pure and even, and lasting, and hath no guilt and regret, no sorrow and trouble in it, or after it: which is a worm that infallibly breeds in all vicious and unlawful pleasures, and makes them to be bitterness in the end.

All the ways of sin are so beset with thorns and difficulties on every side, there are so many unanswerable objections against Vice, from the unreasonableness and ugliness of it, from the remorse that attends it, from the endless misery that follows it, that none but the rash and inconsiderate can obtain leave of themselves to commit it. It is the Daughter of inadvertency, and blindness and folly; and the Mother of guilt, and repentance, and woe. There is no pleasure that will hold out and abide with us to the last, but that of Innocency and well-doing. All sin is folly; and as Seneca truly says, omnis stultitia laborat fastidio sui; All folly soon grows sick and weary of it self. The pleasure of it is slight and superficial, but the trouble and remorse of it pierceth our very hearts.

And then as to the other part of the Objection, That Religion restrains us of our liberty: The contrary is evidently true, that sin and vice are the greatest slavery. For he is truly a slave, who is not at liberty to follow his own judgment, and to do those things which he is inwardly convinced it is best for him to do; but is subject to the unreasonable commands, and the tyrannical power and violence of his lusts and passions: So that he is not master of himself, but other Lords have got dominion over him, and he is perfectly at their beck and command. One vice or passion bids him go, and he goes; another come, and he comes; and a third do this, and he doth it. The man is at perpetual variance with his own mind, and continually committing the things which he condemns in himself. And it is all one, whether a man be subject to the will and humour of another person, or to his own lusts and passions. Only this of the two is the worse; because the Tyrant is at home, and always ready at hand to domineer over him; he is got within him, and so much the harder to be vanquish'd and overcome.

But the service of God, and obedience to his Laws is perfect liberty. Because the Law of God requires nothing of us, but what is recommended to us by our own reason, and from the benefit and advantage of doing it: nothing but what is much more for our own interest to do it, than it can be for God's to command it. And if in some things God exacts obedience of us more indispensably, and under severer penalties, it is because those things are in their Nature more necessary to our felicity. And how could God possibly have dealt more graciously and kindly with us, than to oblige us most strictly to that which is most evidently for our good; and to make such Laws for us, as if we live in obedience to them will infallibly make us happy? So that taking all things into consideration, the interest of our bodies and our souls, of the present and the future, of this world and the other; Religion is the most reasonable and wise, the most comfortable and commendous course that any man can take in order to his own happiness.

The consideration whereof ought to be a mighty endearment of our duty to us, and a most prevalent argument with us to yield a ready and chearful obedience to the Laws of God; which are in truth so many acts of grace and favour to mankind, the real privileges of our nature, and the proper means and causes of our happiness: And do restrain us from nothing but from doing mischief to our selves, from playing the fools and making our selves miserable.

And therefore instead of opposing Religion, upon pretence of the unreasonable restraints of it, we ought to thank God heartily, that he hath laid so strict an obligation upon us to regard and pursue our true interest; and hath been pleased to take that care of us, as to set bounds to our loose and wild appetites by our duty; and in giving us rules to live by, hath no ways complied with our inconsiderate and foolish inclinations, to our real harm and prejudice: But hath made those things necessary for us to do, which in all respects are best for us; and which, if we were perfectly left to our own liberty, ought in all reason to be our free and first choice: And hath made the folly and inconvenience of sin so grossly palpable, that every man may see it before-hand that will but consider, and at the beginning of a bad course look to the end of it; and they that will not consider, shall be forced from woful experience at last to acknowledge it, when they find the dismal effects and mischievous consequences of their vices still meeting them at one turn or other.

And now, by all that hath been said upon this Argument, I hope we are satisfied that Religion is no such intolerable yoke; and that upon a due and full consideration of things it cannot seem evil unto any of us to serve the Lord: nay, on the contrary, that it is absolutely necessary, both to our present peace and our future felicity: And that a religious and vertuous life is not only upon all accounts the most prudent, but after we are entred upon it, and accustomed to it, the most pleasant course that any man can take: and however inconsiderate men may complain of the restraints of Religion that it is not one jot more our duty, than it is our privilege and our happiness.

And I cannot think that upon sober consideration any man could see reason to thank God to be released from any of his Laws, or to have had the contrary to them enjoyed. Let us suppose, that the Laws of God had been just the Reverse of what they now are; that he had commanded us, under severe penalties, to deal falsely and fraudulently with our neighbour; to demean our selves ungratefully to our best friends and benefactors; to be drunk every day, and to pursue sensual pleasures to the endangering of our health and life: How should we have complained of the unreasonableness of these Laws, and have murmured at the slavery of such intolerable impositions? And yet now that God hath commanded us the contrary, things every way agreeable to our reason and interest, we are not pleased neither. What will content us? As our Saviour expostulates in a like case, Whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto Children playing in the Market-place, and calling unto their Companions, we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned, and ye have not lamented. This is perfectly childish, to be pleased with nothing; neither to like this, nor the contrary. We are not contented with the Laws of God as they are, and yet the contrary to them we should have esteemed the greatest grievance in the World.

And if this be true that the Laws of God, how contrary soever to our vicious inclinations, are really calculated for our benefit and advantage, it would almost be an affront to wise and considerate men to importune them to their interest; and with great earnestness to persuade them to that which in all respects is so visibly for their advantage, Chuse you therefore this day whom you will serve; God, or your lusts. And take up a speedy

Where there is great hazard in the doing of a thing, it is good to deliberate long before we undertake it : but where the thing is not only safe but beneficial, and not only hugely beneficial but highly necessary ; when our life and our happiness depends upon it, and all the danger lies in the delay of it ; there we cannot be too sudden in our resolution, nor too speedy in the execution of it. That which is evidently safe, needs no deliberation ; and that which is absolutely necessary will admit of none.

Therefore resolve upon it out of hand ; To day, whilst it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. In the days of your youth and health ; for that is the acceptable time, that is the day of salvation : Before the evil day comes, and you be driven to it by the terrible apprehension and approach of death, when men fly to God only for fear of his wrath. For the greatest Atheists and Infidels, (when they come to dye, if they have any of that reason left, which they have used so ill) have commonly right opinions about God and Religion. For then the confidence as well as the comfort of Atheism leaves them, as the Devil uses to do Witches when they are in distress. Then with Nebuchadnezzar, when they are recovered from being beasts, they look up to heaven and their understanding returns to them : Then they believe a God, and cannot help it ; they believe, and tremble at the thoughts of him. Thus Lucretius, one of their great Authors observes, that when men are in distress, Acrius advertunt animos ad Religionem.

*Nam vera voces tum demum pectore ab imo
Eliciuntur, & eripitur persona, manet res.*

Mens words then come from the bottom of their hearts ; the mask is taken off, and things then appear as in truth they are.

But then perhaps it may be too late to make this choice : Nay, then it can hardly be choice, but necessity. Men do not then chuse to serve the Lord but they are urged and forced to it by their fears. They have served their lusts all their life long, and now they would fain serve themselves of God at the hour of death. They have done what they can, by their insolent contempt and defiance of the Almighty, to make themselves miserable ; and now that they can stand out no longer against him, they are contented at last to be beholding to him to make them happy. The mercies of God are vast and boundless, but yet methinks it is too great a presumption in all reason, for men to design before-hand to make the mercy of God the sanctuary and retreat of a sinful life.

To draw then to a Conclusion of this Discourse. If safety, or pleasure, or liberty, or wisdom, or virtue, or even happiness it self have any temptation in them, Religion hath all these baits and allurements. What Tully says of Philosophy is much more true of the Christian Religion, the Wisdom and Philosophy which is from above ; Nunquam satis laudari poterit, cui qui pareat, omne tempus ætatis sine molestia degere possit. We can never praise it enough, since whoever lives according to the rules of it, may pass the whole age of his life (I may add, his whole duration, this life and the other) without trouble.

Philosophy hath given us several plausible rules for the attaining of peace and tranquility of mind, but they fall very much short of bringing men to it. The very best of them fail us upon the greatest occasions. But the Christian Religion hath effectually done all that which Philosophy pretended to, and aimed at. The Precepts and Promises of the Holy Scriptures are every way sufficient for our comfort, and for our instruction in righteousness: to correct all the errors, and to bear us up under all the evils and adversities of humane life; especially that holy and heavenly Doctrine which is contained in the admirable Sermons of our Saviour, Quem cum legimus, quem Philosophum non contemnimus? whose excellent Discourses when we read, what Philosopher do we not despise? None of the Philosophers could, upon sure grounds, give that encouragement to their Scholars which our Saviour does to his Disciples; Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, and ye shall find rest to your souls. For my yoke is easie, and my burthen is light.

This is the advantage of the Christian Religion sincerely believed and practised, that it gives perfect rest and tranquility to the mind of man: It frees us from the guilt of an evil conscience, and from the power of our lusts, and from the slavish fear of death, and of the vengeance of another world. It builds our comfort upon a rock, which will abide all storms, and remain unshaken in every condition, and will last and hold out for ever: He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doth them (saith our Lord) I will liken him to a wise man, who built his house upon a rock.

In short, Religion makes the life of man a wise design, regular and constant to its self; because it unites all our resolutions and actions in one great end: Whereas without Religion the life of man is a wild, and fluttering and inconsistent thing, without any certain scope and design. The vicious man lives at random, and acts by chance: For he that walks by no rule can carry on no settled and steady design. It would pity a man's heart to see, how hard such men are put to it for diversion, and what a burden time is to them; and how solicitous they are to devise ways, not to spend it but to squander it away. For their great grievance is consideration, and to be obliged to be intent upon any thing that is serious. They hurry from one vanity and folly to another; and plunge themselves into drink, not to quench their thirst, but their guilt: and are beholding to every vain man, and to every trifling occasion, that can but help to take time off their hands. Wretched and inconsiderate men! who have so vast a work before them, the happiness of all eternity to take care of, and provide for, and yet are at a loss how to employ their time! So that Irreligion and Vice makes life an extravagant and unnatural thing, because it perverts and overthrows the natural course and order of things. For instance; according to nature men labour to get an Estate, to free themselves from temptations to rapine and injury; and that they may have wherewithal to supply their own wants, and to relieve the needs of others. But now the covetous man heaps up Riches, not to enjoy them, but to have them; and starves himself in the midst of plenty, and most unnaturally cheats and robs himself of that which is his own; and makes a hard shift to be as poor and miserable with a great Estate, as any man can be without it. According to the design of nature, men should eat and drink that they may live; but the voluptuous man only lives that he may eat and drink. Nature in all sensual enjoyments designs pleasure, which may certainly be had within the limits of virtue: But vice rashly rashly pursues pleasure into the enemies quarters ; and never stops, till the sinner be surrounded and seized upon by pain and torment.

So that take away God and Religion, and men live to no purpose ; without proposing any worthy and considerable end of life to themselves. Whereas the fear of God, and the care of our immortal Souls, fixeth us upon one great design, to which our whole life, and all the actions of it are ultimately referr'd, Ubi unus Deus colitur (saith Lactantius) ibi vita, & omnis actus, ad unum caput, & ad unam summam refertur ; When we acknowledge God as the Author of our Being, as our Sovereign, and our Judge, our end and our happiness is then fixed ; and we can have but one reasonable design, and that is, by endeavouring to please God to gain his favour and protection in this World, and to arrive at the blissful enjoyment of him in the other : In whose presence is fulness of joy ; and at whose right hand are pleasures for evermore. To Him, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory, dominion and power, now and for ever. Amen.

S E R M O N XXIX.

Of the Difficulty of reforming Vicious Habits.

Jeremiah xiii. 23.

Can the Æthiopian change his Skin or the Leopard his spots? then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil.

Considering the great difficulty of reclaiming those who are far gone in an evil course, it is no more than needs to use all sorts of Arguments to this purpose: From the consideration of the evil of sin, and of the goodness of God and his wonderful patience and long-suffering towards us in the midst of our infinite Provocations: From his great mercy and pity declared to us in all those gracious means and methods which he useth for our recovery: And from his readiness and forwardness after all our Rebellions to receive us upon our Repentance, and to be perfectly reconciled to us as if we had never offended him: And from the final issue and event of a wicked life, the dismal and endless miseries of another World, into which we shall inevitably fall, except we repent in time and return to a better mind: And lastly, from the danger of being hardened in an evil course, past all remedy and hopes of Repentance.

And yet I am very sensible that to discourse to Men of the impossibility, or at least the extream difficulty of rescuing themselves out of this miserable state seems to be an odd and cross kind of Argument, and more apt to drive people to despair than to gain them to repentance.

But since the Spirit of God is pleased to make use of it to this purpose, we may safely rely upon infinite Wisdom for the fitness of it to awaken sinners to a sense of their Condition, in order to their recovery. For here in the Text, after terrible Threatnings of Captivity and Desolation to the People of the Jews, who were extreamly wicked and degenerate, through an universal depravation of manners in all Ranks of men from the highest to the lowest, so that they seemed to stand upon the brink of ruine, and to be fatally devoted to it; to add to the terrour and force of these threatnings, God by his Prophet represents to them the infinite danger and extream difficulty of their case, to see if he could startle them by telling them into what a desperate condition they had plunged themselves; being by a long custom of sinning so far engaged in an evil course, that they had almost cut off themselves from a possibility of retreat; so that the difficulty of their change seem'd next to a natural impossibility. Can the Æthiopian change his Skin or the Leopard his Spots? then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil.

The expression is very high, and it is to be hoped somewhat Hyperbolic, and above the just meaning of the words. Which are, I think, only de-designed to signifie to us the extream difficulty of making this change; which is therefore resembled to a natural impossibility, as coming very near it, though not altogether up to it.

And that this Expression is thus to be mitigated, will appear more than probable, by considering some other like passages of Scripture. As, where our Saviour compares the difficulty of a rich Man's Salvation to that which is naturally impossible, viz. to a Camel's passing through the Eye of a Needle: Nay, he pitcheth his expression higher, and doth not only make it a thing of equal but of greater difficulty; I say, unto you, it is easier for a Camel to go through the Eye of a Needle, than for a rich Man to enter into the Kingdom of God. And yet when he comes to explain this to his Disciples, he tells them that he only meant that the thing was very difficult, how hard is it for those that have riches to be saved? and that it was not absolutely impossible, but speaking according to humane probability: with men this is impossible but not with God.

And thus also it is reasonable to understand that severe passage of the Apostle, Heb. 6. 4. It is impossible for them that were once enlightened, if they fall away, to renew them again to Repentance. It is impossible, that is, it is very difficult.

In like manner we are to understand this high Expression in the Text, Can the Ethiopian change his Skin or the Leopard his Spots? then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil; that is, this moral change of men, settled and fixed in bad habits, is almost as difficult as the other.

From the words thus explained two things will properly fall under our Consideration.

First, The great difficulty of reforming vicious habits or of changing a bad course, to those who have been deeply engaged in it and long accustomed to it.

Secondly, Notwithstanding the great difficulty of the thing, what ground of hope and encouragement there is left that it may be done. So that notwithstanding the appearing harshness of the Text, the result of my discourse will be, not to discourage any, how bad soever, from attempting this change, but to put them upon it, and to perswade them to it; and to remove out of the way that which may seem to be one of the strongest objections against all endeavours of men very bad, to become better.

I. First, The great difficulty of reforming vicious habits, or of changing a bad course, to those who have been deeply engaged in it and long accustomed to it. And this difficulty ariseth, partly from the general nature of habits indifferently considered whether they be good, or bad, or indifferent: partly, from the particular nature of evil and vicious habits; and partly, from the natural and judicial consequences of a great Progress and long continuance in an evil Course. By the consideration of these three particulars, the extreme difficulty of this change, together with the true causes and reasons of it, will fully appear.

1. If we consider the nature of all Habits, whether good, or bad, or indifferent. The custom and frequent practice of any thing begets in us a Faculty and easiness in doing it. It bends the powers of our Soul, and turns the stream and current of our animal spirits such a way, and gives all our faculties a tendency and pliability to such a sort of actions. And when we have long stood bent one way, we grow settled and confirmed in it; and cannot without great force and violence be restored to our former state and condition. For the perfection of any habit, whether good, or bad, induceth a kind of necessity of acting accordingly. A rooted habit becomes a governing Principle, and bears almost an equal sway in us with that which is natural. It is a kind of a new nature superinduced, and even as hard to be expelled as some things which are Primitively and Originally natural. When we bend a thing at first it will endeavour to restore it self; but it may be held bent so long till it will continue so of it self and grow crooked; and then it may require more force and violence to reduce it to its former straightness than we used to make it crooked at first. This is the nature of all habits, the farther we proceed the more we are confirmed in them: and that which at first we did voluntarily, by degrees becomes so natural and necessary that it is almost impossible for us to do otherwise. This is plainly seen in the experience of every day, in things good and bad, both in lesser and greater matters.

2. This difficulty ariseth more especially from the particular nature of evil and vicious habits. These, because they are suitable to our corrupt nature, and conspire with the inclinations of it, are likely to be of a much quicker growth and improvement, and in a shorter space, and with less care and endeavour, to arrive at maturity and strength, than the habits of grace and goodness. Considering the propensity of our depraved nature, the progress of vertue and goodness is up the hill, in which we not only move hardly and heavily, but are easily roll'd back: but by wickedness and vice we move downwards; which, as it is much quicker and easier, so it is harder for us to stop in that course, and infinitely more difficult to return from it.

Not but that at first a sinner hath some considerable checks and restraints upon him, and meets with several rubs, and difficulties in his way; the shame and unreasonableness of his vices, and the trouble and disquiet which they create to him: But he breaks loose from these restraints, and gets over these difficulties by degrees: and the faster and farther he advanceth in an evil course the less trouble still they give him, till at last they almost quite lose their force, and give him little or no disturbance.

Shame also is a great restraint upon sinners at first, but that soon falls off: and when men have once lost their innocence, their modesty is not like to be long troublesome to them. For impudence comes on with vice, and grows up with it. Lesser vices do not banish all shame and modesty, but great and abominable crimes harden mens foreheads and make them shameless. Were they ashamed (saith the Prophet) when they committed abomination, nay they were not ashamed, neither could they blush. When men have the heart to do a very bad thing, they seldom want the face to bear it out.

And as for the unreasonableness of vice, though nothing in the World be more evident to a free and impartial judgment, and the sinner himself discerns it clearly enough at his first setting out in a wicked course:

-----Video meliora, proboque, Deteriora sequor.

He offends against the light of his own mind, and does wickedly when he knows better: yet after he hath continued for some time in this course, and is heartily engaged in it, his foolish heart is darken'd, and the notions of good and evil are obscured and confounded, and things appear to him in a false and imperfect light: His lusts do at once blind and byass his understanding; and his judgment by degrees goes over to his inclinations; and and he cannot think that there should be so much reason against those things for which he hath so strong an affection. He is now engaged in a Party, and factiously concerned to maintain it, and to make the best of it; and to that end, he bends all his wits to advance such principles as are fittest to justify his wicked practices; and in all debates plainly favours that side of the Question which will give the greatest countenance and encouragement to them. When men are corrupt and do abominable works, they say in their hearts there is no God; that is, they would fain think so. And every thing serves for an Argument to a willing mind; and every little objection appears strong and considerable, which makes against that which men are loth should be true.

Not that any man ever satisfied himself in the Principles of Infidelity, or was able to arrive to a steady and unshaken persuasion of the truth of them, so as not vehemently to doubt and fear the contrary. However, by this means many men though they cannot fully comfort, yet they make a shift to cheat themselves; to still their Consciences and lay them asleep for a time, so as not to receive any great and frequent disturbance in their course from the checks and rebukes of their own minds. And when these restraints are removed, the work of iniquity goes on a-main, being favoured both by wind and tide.

3. The difficulty of this change ariseth likewise from the natural and judicial consequences of a great progress and long continuance in an evil course. My meaning is, that inveterate evil habits do partly from their own nature, and partly from the just judgment and permission of God, put men under several disadvantages of moving effectually towards their own recovery.

By a long custom of sinning mens Consciences grow brawny, and seared as it were with a hot iron; and by being often trampled upon they become hard as the beaten road. So that unless it be upon some extraordinary occasion, they are seldom awakened to a sense of their guilt. And when mens hearts are thus hard, the best counsels make but little impression upon them. For they are steel'd against reproof, and impenetrable to good advice; which is therefore seldom offered to them, even by those that wish them well, because they know it to be both unacceptable, and unlikely to prevail. It requires a great deal of good nature in a very bad man, to be able patiently to bear to be told of his faults.

Besides, that habitual wickedness is naturally apt to banish consideration, to weaken our resolution, and to discourage our hopes both of God's grace and assistance, and of his mercy and forgiveness, which are the best means and encouragement to repentance.

Sin is a great enemy to Consideration; and especially when men are deeply plunged into it, their condition is so very bad, that they are loth to think of it and to search into it. A vicious man is a very deformed sight, and to none more than to himself; and therefore he loves to turn his Eyes another way, and to divert them as much as he can from looking upon himself. He is afraid to be alone, lest his own mind should arrest him, and his Conscience should take the opportunity to call him to an account. And if at any time his own thoughts meet with him, and he cannot avoid consideration, he is ready to say as Ahab did to Elijah, Hast thou found me, O my enemy! and is as glad to shake it off as a man is to get rid of a Creditor, whom because he knows not how to satisfy, he cares not to speak with him. Consideration is the great troubler and disturber of men in an evil course, because it would represent to them the plain truth of their case; and and therefore they do all they can to keep it off, as those who have improvidently managed their affairs, and been ill husbands of their estates, are loth to make up their accounts, lest by that means they should be forced to understand the worst of their condition.

Or if consideration happen to take them at an advantage, and they are so hard prest by it that they cannot escape the sight of their own condition, yet they find themselves so miserably entangled and hamper'd in an evil course, and bound so fast in the chains of their own wickedness, that they know not how to get loose. Sin is the saddest slavery in the World; it breaks and sinks mens Spirits, and makes them so base and servile that they have not the courage to rescue themselves. No sort of slaves are so poor spirited as they that are in bondage to their lusts. Their power is gone, or if they have any left they have not the heart to make use of it. And though they see and feel their Misery, yet they chuse rather to sit down in it, and tamely to submit to it, than to make any resolute attempt for their Liberty. What the Prophet says of Whoredom and Wine is proportionably true of other vices, they take away the heart. Every lust that we entertain deals with us as Dalilah did with Sampson, not only robs us of our strength but leaves us fast bound: so that if at any time we be awakened to a sense of our condition, and try to rescue our selves from it, we find that our strength is departed from us, and that we are not able to break loose.

And as long custom and continuance in sin deprives us of our strength, so it discourageth our hopes, both of God's grace and assistance, and of his mercy and forgiveness. For why should men expect the continuance of that grace which they have so often received in vain? After so many provocations, how can we look the offended Majesty of God in the Face? how can we lift up our eyes to heaven with any hopes of mercy and forgiveness there? Despair doth almost naturally spring from an evil Conscience; and when men are thoroughly awakened to a sense of sin, and of the infinite evil of it, as they cannot easily forgive themselves, so they can hardly believe that there is goodness enough any where to forgive them.

But besides these disadvantages, which are natural and consequent upon a vicious course; by the just judgment of God, his Spirit is withdrawn from them, and they are given up to their own hearts lusts, to commit all iniquity with greediness. And then there is hardly any thing left, either to restrain them in their evil course, or to recover them out of it.

And not only so, but by the just permission of God, as men grow worse and more wicked, the Devil hath a nearer access to them and a more immediate power over them. So the Scripture tells us, that wicked men are led captive by Satan at his pleasure, and that the evil one works and acts in the Children of disobedience: They are as it were possessed and inspired by him. And what can be expected from this cruel and malicious enemy of mankind, but that he will continually be pushing them on from one wickedness to another. till he drive them first into despair, and then, if God permit him, into eternal perdition?

And what a forlorn state is this? when men are thus forsaken of God, and left without check, blindly and headily to follow the sway of their own tempers, and the bent of their own corrupt hearts? when they are continually exposed to temptations strongly inviting them to evil; and God lets the Devil loose upon them to manage those temptations with his utmost skill, and to practise all his arts and wiles upon them? In these circumstances men almost infallibly run into sin, as sure as men wander in the dark, and are in danger of falling in slippery places, and of being entangled when

when they continually walk in the midst of snares cunningly laid for them. It is not in men thus disabled and entangled, to order their own steps, and to restrain their inclinations and passions in the presence of a powerful temptation. At the best, we need God's direction to guide us, his continual grace to uphold us, and to guard and preserve us from evil; and much more do we stand in need of it, when we have brought our selves into these wretched circumstances; but then alas! how little reason have we to hope for it?

Blind and miserable men! that in despite of all the merciful warnings of God's word and providence, will run themselves into this desperate state, and never think of returning to a better mind, till their retreat is difficult almost to an impossibility. I proceed to the

II. Head of my Discourse, which was to shew that the case of these persons, though it be extremely difficult, is not quite desperate; but after all, there is some ground of hope and encouragement left that they may yet be reclaimed and brought to goodness. Indeed humanely speaking, and according to all appearance and probability, the thing seems to be very hopeless, and next to an impossibility; but yet what our Saviour says concerning the difficulty of a rich man's Salvation will reach also to this case, though much more difficult; those things which are impossible with men are possible with God.

And this will appear, if we consider that even in the worst of men there is something left which tends to reclaim them, to awaken them to consideration, and to urge and encourage them to a vigorous resolution of a better course: And this accompanied with a powerful assistance of God's grace, which when sincerely sought is never to be despaired of, may prove effectual to bring back even the greatest of sinners.

1. There is left, even in the worst of men, a natural sense of the evil and unreasonableness of sin; which can hardly be ever totally extinguished in humane nature. For though the habits of great vices are very apt to harden and stupify men. so that they have seldom a just sense of their evil ways, yet these persons are sometimes under strong convictions, and their consciences do severely check and rebuke them for their faults. They are also, by fits, under great apprehension of the danger of their condition, and that the course which they are in, if they continue in it, will prove fatal to them, and ruine them at last: Especially, when their consciences are thoroughly awakened, by some great affliction, or the near approach of death and a lively sense of another World. And the apprehension of a mighty danger will make men to look about them, and to use the best means to avoid it.

2. Very bad men when they have any thoughts of becoming better are apt to conceive some good hopes of God's grace and mercy. For though they find all the causes and reasons of despair in themselves, yet the consideration of the boundless goodness and compassions of God (how undeserved soever on their part) is apt to kindle some sparks of hope, even in the most desponding mind. His wonderful patience, in the midst of our manifold provocations, cannot but be a good sign to us, that he hath no mind that we should perish, but rather that we should come to repentance; and if we do repent, we are assured by his promise, that we shall be forgiven. He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall have mercy. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

3. Who knows what men thoroughly roused and startled may resolve, and do? And a mighty resolution will break through difficulties which seem insuperable. Though we be weak and pitiful Creatures; yet nature when it is mightily irritated and stirr'd will do strange things. The resolutions of men upon the brink of despair, have been of an incredible force : and the Soul of man in nothing more discovers its divine power and original, than in that spring which is in it whereby it recovers it self when it is mightily urged and prest. There is a sort of resolution which is in a manner invincible, and hardly any difficulty can resist it or stand before it.

Of this there have been great instances in several kinds. Some by an obstinate resolution, and taking incredible pains with themselves, have mastered great natural vices and defects. A Socrates and Demosthenes, who almost exceeded all mankind in those two things for which by nature they seemed to be least made, and most unfit. One, in governing of his passions, and the other in the mighty force and power of his eloquence.

Some, that by intemperance have brought themselves to a Dropsie, which hath jult set them upon the brink of the grave, by a bold and steady purpose to abstain wholly from drink for a long time together, have rescued themselves from the jaws of death.

Some that had almost ruined themselves by a careless and dissolute life, and having run themselves out of their estates into debt, and being cast into prison, have there taken up a manly resolution to retrieve and recover themselves ; and by the indefatigable labour and study of some years, in that uncomfortable retreat, have mastered the knowledge and skill of one of the most difficult Professions, in which they have afterwards proved great and eminent.

And some, in the full career of a wicked course, have by a sudden thought and resolution, raised in them and assisted by a mighty grace of God, taken up presently and made an immediate change from great wickedness and impiety of life to a very exemplary degree of goodness and vertue.

The two great encouragements to vertue which Pythagoras gave to his Scholars were these ; and they were worthy of so great a Philosopher ; first, Choose always the best course of life, and custom will soon make it the most pleasant. The other was this, that Power and Necessity are Neighbours and never dwell far from one another. When men are prest by a great necessity, when nature is spurr'd up and urged to the utmost, men discover in themselves a power which they thought they had not, and find at last that they can do that which at first they despaired of ever being able to do.

4. The grace and assistance of God when sincerely sought, is never to be despaired of. So that if we do but heartily and in good earnest resolve upon a better course and implore the help of God's grace to this purpose, no degree of it that is necessary shall be wanting to us. And here is our chief ground of hope. For we are weak and unstable as water ; and when we have taken up good resolutions do easily start from them. So that fresh supplies, and a continued assistance of God's grace is necessary to keep up the first warmth and vigour of our resolutions, till they prove effectual and victorious. And this grace God hath promised he will not deny to us, when we are thus disposed for it ; that he will give his Holy Spirit to them that ask it ; that he will not quench the smoking flax, nor break the bruised reed, until he bring forth judgment unto victory.

All that now remains is to apply this to our selves : And we are all concerned in it : For we shall all find our selves comprehended under one of these three Heads : Either we are of the number of those few happy Persons, who by the influence and advantage of a good education were never engaged gaged in a bad course : Or, of those who have been drawn into vice, but are not yet far gone in it : Or, of those who have been long accustomed to an evil course, and are grown old and stiff in it.

The first of these have great cause to thank God for this singular felicity, that they were never ensnared and intangled in vicious habits, that they have not had the trial of their own weakness under this miserable slavery, that they never knew what it was to be out of their own power, to have lost their liberty and the Government of themselves. When we hear of the miserable servitude of the poor Christians in Turkey, we are apt, as there is great reason, to pity them, and to think what a blessing of God it is to us that we are not in their condition : And yet that slavery is not comparable to this, either for the sad nature, or the dismal consequences of it ; or for the difficulty of being released from it. And let such persons, who have been thus happy never to have been engaged in an evil course, preserve their innocency with great tenderness and care, as the greatest Jewel in the world. No Man knows what he does, and what a foundation of trouble he lays to himself, when he forfeits his innocency, and breaks the peace of his own mind ; when he yields to a Temptation, and makes the first step into a bad course. He little thinks whither his lusts may hurry him, and what a monster they may make of him before they have done with him.

2. Those who have been seduced, but are not yet deeply engaged in an evil course, let them make a speedy retreat, lest they put it for ever out of their power to return. Perhaps their feet only are yet ensnared, but their hands are at liberty, and they have some power left, whereby with an ordinary grace of God they may loose and rescue themselves. But after a while their hands may be manacled, and all their power may be gone ; and when they are thus bound hand and foot, they are just prepared, and in danger every moment, to be cast into utter darkness.

3. As for those, who are gone very far and are grown old in vice, who can forbear to lament over them ? for they are a sad spectacle indeed, and the truest object of pity in the World. And yet, their recovery is not utterly to be despaired of ; for with God it is possible. The spirit of God, which hath withdrawn himself, or rather hath been driven away by them, may yet be persuaded to return and to undertake them once more, if they would but seriously resolve upon a change, and heartily beg God's assistance to that purpose. If we would take up a mighty resolution, we might hope that God would afford a miraculous grace to second it, and make it effectual to our recovery. Even in this perverse and degenerate Age in which we live, God hath not been wanting to give some miraculous instances of his grace and mercy to sinners, and those perhaps equal to any of those we meet with in Scripture, of Manasses, or Mary Magdalen, or the penitent Thief ; both for the greatness of the offenders, and the miracle of their change : To the end that none might despair, and for want of the encouragement of an example equal to their own case, be disheartened from so noble an enterprise. I am loth to put you in mind how bad some have been, who yet have been snatched as Firebrands out of the Fire ; and that in so strange a manner, that it would even amaze a Man to think of the wonder of their recovery : those who have sunk themselves into the very depth of infidelity and wickedness, have by a mighty hand and out-stretched arm of God been pluckt out of this horrible Pit. And will we still stand it out with God, when such great Leaders have given up the cause, and have surrendered and yielded up themselves willing Captives to the Grace of God ? that omnipotent grace of God, which can easily subdue the stoutest heart of Man, by letting in so strong a light upon our minds, and pouring such terrible convictions into our consciences, that we can find no ease but in turning to God.

I hope there are none here so bad, as to need all the encouragement to repentance which such examples might give them: encouragement I say to repentance: for surely these examples can encourage no Man to venture any farther in a wicked course: they are so very rare, and like the instances of those who have been brought back to life after the sentence of death seemed to have been fully executed upon them.

But perhaps some will not believe that there have been such examples; or if they have, they impute all this either to a disturbed imagination, or to the faint and low spirits of Men under great bodily weakness, or to their natural cowardize and fear; or to I know not what foolish and fantastical design of compleating and finishing a wicked life with an hypocritical death. Nothing surely is easier than to put some bad construction upon the best things, and so flurr even repentance it self, and almost dash it out of countenance by some bold, and perhaps witty saying about it. But oh that Men were wise; oh that Men were wise! that they understood, and would consider their latter end! Come, let us neither trifle, nor dissemble in this matter; I dare say every man's Conscience is convinced, that they who have led very ill lives have so much reason for repentance, that we may easily believe it to be real. However, of all things in the world, let us not make a mock of repentance; that which must be our last sanctuary and refuge, and which we must all come to before we die, or it had been better for us we had never been born. Therefore, let my counsel be acceptable unto you, break off your sins by repentance, and your iniquities by righteousness: And that instantly, and without delay; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. If we have been enslaved but a little to a vicious course, we shall find it a task difficult enough to assert our own liberty, to break these bonds in sunder and to cast these cords from us: But if we have been long under this bondage, we have done so much to undo our selves, and to make our case desperate, that it is God's infinite mercy to us that there is yet hope. Therefore, give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and while you look for light, he turn it into darkness and the shadow of death. I will conclude with that encouraging invitation, even to the greatest of sinners to repentance, from the mouth of God himself, Isa. 55. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your Soul shall live: seek the Lord while he may be found; and call upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy, and to our God for he will abundantly pardon.

To him let us apply our selves, and humbly beseech him, who is mighty to save, that he would stretch forth the right hand of his power for our deliverance, from this miserable and cruel bondage of our lusts: and that as the rain cometh down from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud; so he would grant that his word may not return void, but accomplish his pleasure, and prosper in the thing to which he sent it; For his mercy sake in Jesus Christ, To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honour and glory now and for ever. Amen.

The Necessity of the Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures

Matthew xxiii. 13.

Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites ; for ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against Men ; and ye neither go in your selves, neither suffer ye them that are entring to go in.

THE Scribes so often mentioned in the Gospel, were the great Doctors among the Jews, the Teachers and Interpreters of the Law of God. And because many of them were of the Sect of the Pharisees, which above all others pretended to skill and knowledge in the Law, therefore it is that our blessed Saviour does so often put the Scribes and Pharisees together. And these were the men of chief Authority in the Jewish Church ; who equalled their own unwritten word and traditions with the Law of God : Nay, our Saviour telis us, they made all the Commandments of God of none effect by their Traditions. They did in effect assume to themselves infallibility ; and all that opposed and contradicted them they branded with the odious name of Hereticks. Against these our Saviour denounceth this Wo here in the Text, Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites ; for ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against Men, &c.

All the difficulty in the words is what is here meant by shutting up the Kingdom of Heaven against Men : St. Luke expresseth it more plainly, Ye have taken away the key of knowledge, ye entred not in your selves, and them that were entring in, ye hindered. By putting these two expressions together we shall the more easily come at the meaning of the Text, Ye have taken away the key of knowledge, and have shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against Men. This Metaphor of the key of knowledge, is undoubtedly an allusion to that known custom among the Jews in the admission of their Doctors. For to whomsoever they gave Authority to interpret the Law and the Prophets, they were solemnly admitted into that office by delivering to them a Key and a Table-Book. So that by the key of knowledge, is here meant the interpretation and understanding of the Scriptures ; and by taking away the key of knowledge, not only that they arrogated to themselves alone the understanding of the Scriptures, but likewise that they had conveyed away this key of knowledge, and as it were hid it out of the way, neither using it themselves as they ought, nor suffering others to make use of it.

And thus they shut the Kingdom of Heaven against Men ; which is very fitly said of those who have locked the door against them that were going in, and have taken away the key. By all which it appears that the plain meaning of our Saviour in these Metaphorical expressions is, that the Scribes and Teachers of the Law, under a pretence of interpreting the Scriptures, had perverted perverted them and kept the true knowledge of them from the People: Especially those Prophecies of the Old Testament which concerned the Messias. And by this means the Kingdom of Heaven was shut against men: And they not only rejected the truth themselves, but by keeping men in ignorance of the true meaning of the Scriptures, they hindered many from embracing our Saviour's Doctrine, and entering into the Kingdom of Heaven, who were otherwise well enough disposed for it.

Having thus explained the words, I shall from the main scope and design of them observe to you these two things.

1. The Necessity of the knowledge of the holy Scriptures in order to our eternal Salvation. It is called by our Saviour the key of knowledge, that which lets men into the Kingdom of Heaven.

2. The great and inexcusable fault of those who deprive the People of the knowledge of the holy Scriptures. They shut the Kingdom of Heaven against Men, and do what in them lies to hinder their eternal Salvation; and therefore our Saviour denounceth so heavy a Woe against them.

I shall speak briefly to these two Observations; and then apply them to those who are principally concerned in them.

I. First, I observe hence the Necessity of the knowledge of the holy Scriptures in order to our eternal Salvation. This is by our Saviour called the key of knowledge, that which lets men into the Kingdom of Heaven.

Knowledge is necessary to Religion: It is necessary to the Being of it; and necessary to the life and practice of it. Without Faith (says the Apostle) it is impossible to please God: Because Faith is an act of the understanding, and does necessarily suppose some knowledge and apprehension of what we believe. To all acts of Religion there is necessarily required some act of the Understanding; so that without knowledge there can be no devotion in the service of God, no obedience to his Laws. Religion begins in the Understanding, and from thence descends upon the heart and life. If ye know these things (says our Saviour) happy are ye if ye do them. We must first know God, before we can worship him; and understand what is his will, before we can do it.

This is so very evident, that one would think there needed no discourse about it. And yet there are some in the World that cry up Ignorance as the Mother of Devotion. And to shew that we do not wrong them in this matter, Mr. Rusworth in his Dialogues (a Book in great vogue among the Papists here in England) does expressly reckon up Ignorance among the Parents of Religion. And can any thing be said more absurdly and more to the disparagement of Religion, than to derive the pedigree of the most excellent thing in the World from so obscure and ignoble an Original; and to make that which the Scripture calls the beginning of wisdom, and the excellency of knowledge, to be the Off-spring of Ignorance and a Child of darkness? Ignorance indeed may be the cause of wonder and admiration, and the mother of folly and superstition: But surely Religion is of a nobler Extraction, and is the issue and result of the best wisdom and knowledge; and descends from above, from the giver of every good and perfect gift, even the father of lights.

And as knowledge in general is necessary to Religion, so more particularly the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures is necessary to our eternal Salvation. Because these are the great and standing Revelation of God to mankind; wherein the Nature of God, and his Will concerning our duty and the terms and conditions of our eternal happiness in another World are fully and plainly declared to us.

The

The Scriptures are the Word of God ; and from whence can we learn the Will of God so well as from his own mouth ? They are the great instrument of our Salvation ; and should not every man be acquainted with that which alone can perfectly instruct him what he must believe, and what he must do that he may be saved ? This is the testimony which the Scripture gives of it self, that it is able to make men wise unto salvation : And is it not very fit that every man should have this wisdom, and in order thereunto the free use of that Book from whence this wisdom is to be learned ?

II. Secondly, I observe the great and inexcusable fault of those who keep men in Ignorance of Religion, and take away from them so excellent and necessary a means of divine knowledge as the Holy Scriptures are. This our Saviour calls taking away the key of knowledge, and shutting the Kingdom of Heaven against Men. That is, doing what in them lies to render it impossible for men to be saved. For this he denounceth a terrible Wo against the Teachers of the Jewish Church : Though they did not proceed so far as to deprive men of the use of the Holy Scriptures, but only of the right knowledge and understanding of them. This alone is a horrible impiety, to lead men into a false sense and interpretation of Scripture, but much greater to forbid them the reading of it. This is to stop knowledge at the very Fountain-head ; and not only to lead men into Errour, but to take away from them all possibility of rectifying their mistakes. And can there be a greater sacrilege, than to rob men of the Word of God, the best means in the World of acquainting them with the Will of God and their duty, and the way to eternal happiness ? To keep the people in Ignorance of that which is necessary to save them, is to judge them unworthy of eternal life, and to declare it does not belong to them, and maliciously to contrive the eternal ruine and destruction of their Souls.

To lock up the Scriptures and the service of God from the people in an unknown tongue, what is this but in effect to forbid men to know God and to serve him ; to render them incapable of knowing what is the good and acceptable will of God ; of joyning in his worship, or performing any part of it, or receiving any benefit or edification from it ? And what is, if this be not, to shut the Kingdom of Heaven against men ? This is so outrageous a cruelty to the souls of men, that it is not to be excused upon any pretence whatsoever : This is to take the surest and most effectual way in the world to destroy those for whom Christ died, and directly to thwart the great design of God our Saviour, who would have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. Men may miscarry with their knowledge, but they are sure to perish for want of it.

The best things in the World have their inconveniencies attending them, and are liable to be abused ; but surely men are not to be ruined and damned for fear of abusing their knowledge, or for the prevention of any other inconvenience whatsoever. Besides, this is to cross the very end of the Scriptures, and the design of God in inspiring men to write them. Can any man think that God should send this great light of his Word into the world, for the Priests to hide it under a Bushel ; and not rather that it should be set up to the greatest advantage for the enlightening of the world ? St. Paul tells us, Rom. 15. 4. That whatsoever things were written, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. And 2 Tim. 3. 16. That all Scripture is given by inspiration of God ; and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. And if the Scriptures were written for these ends, can any man have the face to pretend that they do not concern the people as well as their teachers? Nay St. Paul expressly tells the Church of Rome, that they were written for their learning, however it happens that they are not now permitted to make use of them. Are the Scriptures so useful and profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness? and why may they not be used by the people for those ends for which they were given? 'Tis true indeed they are fit for the most knowing and learned, and sufficient to make the man of God perfect, and thoroughly furnished to every good work (as the Apostle there tells us.) But does this exclude their being profitable also to the people; who may reasonably be presumed to stand much more in need of all means and helps of instruction than their Teachers? And though there be many difficulties and obscurities in the Scriptures, enough to exercise the skill and wit of the learned, yet are they not therefore either useless or dangerous to the People. The ancient Fathers of the Church were of another mind. St. Chrysostome tells us that, "Whatever things are necessary are manifest in the Scriptures. And St. Austin, that all things are plain in the Scripture, "which concern faith and a good life; and that those things which are necessary to the Salvation of men, are not so hard to be come at, but that as to those things which the Scripture plainly contains, it speaks without disguise like a familiar friend to the heart of the learned and unlearned. And upon these and such like considerations, the Fathers did every-where in their Orations and Homilies charge and exhort the people to be conversant in the Holy Scriptures, to read them daily and diligently and attentively. And I challenge our Adversaries to shew me where any of the ancient Fathers do discourage the people from reading the Scriptures, much less forbid them so to do. So that they who do it now have no Cloak for their sin: And they who pretend so confidently to Antiquity in other cases, are by the evidence of truth forced to acknowledge that it is against them in this. Though they have ten thousand Schoolmen on their side, yet have they not one Father, not the least pretence of Scripture, or rag of Antiquity to cover their nakedness in this point.

With great reason then does our Saviour denounce so heavy a Wo against such teachers. Of old in the like case God by his Prophet severely threatens the Priests of the Jewish Church, for not instructing the people in the knowledge of God, Hosea 4. 6. My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee; thou shalt be no more a Priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the Law of thy God, I will also forget thy Children. God, you see, lays the ruine of so many Souls at their doors, and will require their blood at their hands. So many as perish for want of knowledge, and eternally miscarry by being deprived of the necessary means of Salvation, their destruction shall be charged upon those who have taken away the key of knowledge, and shut the kingdom of heaven against men.

And it is just with God to punish such persons, not only as the occasion, but as the Authors of their ruine. For who can judge otherwise, but that they who deprive men of the necessary means to any end, do purposely design to hinder them of attaining that end? And whatever may be pretended in this case; to deprive men of the Holy Scriptures, and to keep them ignorant of the service of God, and yet while they do so, to make a shew of an earnest desire of their Salvation, is just such a mockery, as if one of you that is a master should tell his prentice how much you desire he should thrive in the world, and be a rich man, but all the while keeps him ignorant of his trade in order to his being rich; and with the strictest care imaginable conceals from him the best means of learning that whereby alone he

(By what hath been discoursed upon this Argument, you will easily perceive where the Application is like to fall. For the Wo denounced by our Saviour here in the Text against the Scribes and Pharisees, falls every whit as heavy upon the Pastors and Teachers of the Roman Church. They have taken away the key of knowledge with a witness; not only depriving the people of the right understanding of the Scriptures, but of the very use of them: As if they were so afraid they should understand them, that they dare not suffer them so much as to be acquainted with them.

This Tyranny that Church hath exercised over those of her Communion for several hundreds of years. It grew upon them indeed by degrees: For as by the inundation of Barbarous Nations upon the Roman Empire the Romans lost their Language by degrees, so the Governours of that Church still kept up the Scriptures and the service of God in the Latin tongue; which at last was wholly unknown to the common people. And about the ninth and tenth Centuries, when by the general consent of all their own Historians gross darkness and ignorance covered this part of the world, the Pope and the Priests took away the key of knowledge, and did (as I may so say) put it under the door for several Ages; till the Reformation fetched it out again, and rubbed off the rust of it.

And I profess seriously that hardly any thing in the world, was ever to me more astonishing, than this uncharitable and cruel usage of the people in the Church of Rome. And I cannot tell which to wonder at most, the insolence of their Governours in imposing upon men this senseless way of serving God, or the patience shall I call it, or rather stupidity of the people in enduring to be so intolerably abused. Why should reasonable Creatures be treated at this rude and barbarous rate? As if they were unworthy to be acquainted with the Will of God; and as if that which every man ought to do, were not fit for every man to know: As if the common people had only Bodies to be present at the service of God, but no Souls; or as if they were all distracted and out of their wits, and it were a dangerous thing to let in the light upon them.

But to speak more distinctly. There are two things we charge them withal, and which they are not able to deny. Their performing the publick service of God in an unknown Tongue; and depriving the People of the use of the Scriptures. And I shall first tell you what we have to say against these things, and then consider what they pretend for them.

1. As for their performing the service of God in a tongue unknown to the People. And I begin with St. Paul, who in his first Epistle to the Corinthians hath a whole Chapter on purpose to shew the unreasonableness of this thing, and how contrary it is to the edification of Christians. His discourse is so plain and so well known, that I shall not particularly insist upon it. Erasmus, in his Annotations upon this Chapter, breaks out, (as well he might) into admiration at the practice of the Church of Rome in his time. Hac in re mirum quam mutata sit Ecclesie consuetudo: "It is wonderful (says he) how the custom of the Church is altered in this matter. St. Paul had rather speak five words with understanding; and so as to teach others, than ten thousand in an unknown tongue. Why does the Church doubt to follow so great an Authority, or rather how dares she to dissent from it?

As for the practice of the ancient Church let Origen bear witness. "The Grecians (saith he) in their prayers use the Greek, and the Romans the Latin tongue; and so every one according to his Language prayeth unto God, and praiseth him as he is able.

And not only in Origen's time, but for more than the first six hundred years, the service of God was always performed in a known Tongue. And this the learned men of their own Church do not deny. And Cardinal Cajetan (as Cassander tells us) said it was much better this Custom were restored; and being reproved for saying so, he said he learned it from St. Paul. And Bellarmino himself confesseth that the Armenians, Egyptians, Ethiopians, Russians, and others do use their own Language in their Liturgies at this day.

But it is otherwise now in the Church of Rome, and hath been for several Ages. And it seems they lay great stress upon it, not only as a thing of great Use, but Necessity. For Pope Gregory the VII. forbids the Prince of Bohemia to permit to the People the celebration of divine Offices in the Sclavonian Tongue; and commands him to oppose them herein with all his Forces. It seems he thought it a cause worthy the fighting for: and that it were much better the People should be killed, than suffered to understand their prayers.

But let us reason this matter a little calmly with them. Is it necessary for men to understand any thing they do in Religion? And is not prayer one of the most solemn parts of Religion? And why then should not men understand their Prayers as well as any thing else they do in Religion? Is it good that people should understand their private Prayers? (that we thank them) they allow: and why not publick as well? Is there less of Religion in publick Prayers? Is God less honoured by them? or are we not as capable of being edified and of having our hearts and affections moved and excited by them? Where then lies the difference? The more I consider it the more I am at a loss what tolerable reason any man can give why People should not understand their publick devotions as well as their private. If men cannot heartily and devoutly pray alone, without understanding what they ask of God, no more (say I) can they heartily and devoutly join in the publick Prayers which are made by the Priest without understanding what they are. If it be enough for the Priest to understand them, why should not the Priest only be present at them? unless the people do not meet to worship God, but only to wait upon the Priest. But by saying the Priest understands them, it seems it is better some body should understand them than not; and why is not that which is good for the Priest good for the People?

So that the true state of the Controversie is, whether it be fit that the people should be edified in the service of God; and whether it be fit the Church should order things contrary to edification? For it is plain that the service of God in an unknown tongue is useless and unprofitable to the People: Nay, it is evidently no publick service of God, when the Priest only understands it. For how can they be said to be Publick Prayers if the people do not joyn in them? And how can they joyn in that they do not understand? and to what purpose are Lessons of Scripture read, if People are to learn nothing by them? And how should they learn when they do not understand? This is as if one should pretend to teach a man Greek, by reading him Lectures every day out of an Arabick and Persian Book, of which he understands not one syllable.

II. As to their depriving the people of the use of the Holy Scriptures. Our blessed Saviour exhorts the Jews to search the Scriptures; and St. Paul chargeth the Christians that the word of God should dwell richly in them; And the ancient Fathers of the Church do most frequently and earnestly recommend to the People the reading and study of the Scriptures: How comes the case now to be so altered? Sure the word of God is not changed; that certainly abides and continues the same for ever.

I shall by and by examine what the Church of Rome pretends in excuse of this Sacrilege. In the mean time I do not see what considerable Objections can be made against the People's reading of the Scriptures, which would not have held as well against the writing and publishing of them at first in a Language understood by the People: As the Old Testament was by the Jews, and the Epistles of the Apostles by the Churches to whom they were written, and the Gospels both by Jews and Greeks. Were there no difficulties and obscurities then in the Scriptures, capable of being wrested by the unstable and unlearned? Were not people then liable to error, and was there no danger of Heresie in those Times? And yet these are their great Objections against putting the Scriptures into the hands of the People. Which is just like their arguing against giving the Cup to the Laity from the inconvenience of their beards, lest some of the consecrated Wine should be spilt upon them: As if errors and beards were inconveniencies lately sprung up in the world, and which mankind were not liable to in the first Ages of Christianity.

But if there were the same dangers and inconveniencies in all Ages, this Reason makes against the publishing of the Scriptures to the people at first, as much as against permitting them the use of them now. And in truth all these objections are against the Scripture it self: And that which the Church of Rome would find fault with if they durst, is that there should be any such Book in the world, and that it should be in any bodies hands, learned or unlearned; for if it be dangerous to any, none are so capable of doing mischief with it as men of wit and learning. So that at the bottom, if they would speak out, the quarrel is against the Scriptures themselves. This is too evident by the counsel given to Pope Julius the III. by the Bishops met at Bononia to consult about the establishment of the Roman See: Where among other things they gave this as their last advice, and as the greatest and weightiest of all That by all means as little of the Gospel as might be, especially in the Vulgar Tongue, should be read to the people; and that little which was in the Mass ought to be sufficient: neither should it be permitted to any mortal to read more. For so long (say they) as men were contented with that little, all things went well with them; but quite otherwise, since more was commonly read. And speaking of the Scripture, they give this remarkable testimony and commendation of it; This in short is that Book which, above all others, hath raised those tempests and whirlwinds which we were almost carried away with. And in truth, if any one diligently considers it, and compares it with what is done in our Church, he will find them very contrary to each other, and our Doctrine not only to be very different from it, but repugnant to it. If this be the case, they do like the rest of the Children of this world prudently enough in their Generation: Can we blame 'em for being against the Scriptures, when the Scriptures are acknowledged to be so clearly against them? But surely no body that considereth these things would be of that Church, which is brought by the undeniable evidence of the things themselves to this shameful confession, that several of their Doctrines and Practices are very contrary to the Word of God.

Much more might have been said against the practice of the Church of Rome in these two particulars, but this is sufficient.

I shall in the second place consider, what is pretended for them. And indeed what can be pretended in justification of so contumelious an affront to mankind, so great a Tyranny and cruelty to the Souls of men? hath God forbidden the people to look into the Scriptures? No; quite contrary. Was it the practice of the ancient Church to lay this restraint upon men; or to celebrate the service of God in an unknown Tongue? our adversaries themselves have not the face to pretend this. I shall truly represent the substance of what they say in these two points.

I. As to the service of God in an unknown tongue they say these four things for themselves.

1. That the people do exercise a general devotion, and come with an intention to serve God; and that is accepted, though they do not particularly understand the prayers that are made, and the lessons that are read.

But is this all that is intended in the service of God? does not St. Paul expressly require more? that the understanding of the people should be edified by the particular service that is performed? And if what is done be not particularly understood, he tells us the People are not edified, nor can say Amen to the prayers and thanksgivings that are put up to God; and that any man that should come in and find people serving of God in this unprofitable and unreasonable manner would conclude that they were mad.

And if there be any general devotion in the people, it is because in general they understand what they are about; and why may they not as well understand the particular service that is performed, that so they might exercise a particular devotion? So that they are devout no farther than they understand; and consequently as to what they do not understand, had every whit as good be absent.

2. They say, the prayers are to God, and he understands them; and that is enough. But what harm were it, if all they that pray understood them also? Or indeed how can men pray to God without understanding what they ask of him? Is not prayer a part of the Christian worship? and is not that a reasonable service? and is any service reasonable that is not directed by our understandings, and accompanied with our hearts and affections?

But then what say they to the Lessons and Exhortations of Scripture, which are likewise read to the People in an unknown tongue? Are these directed to God, or to the people only? And are they not designed by God for their instruction; and read either to that purpose or to none? And is it possible to instruct men by what they do not understand? This is a new and wonderful way of teaching, by concealing from the people the things which they should learn. Is it not all one, as to all purposes of edification, as if the Scriptures were not read, or any thing else in the place of them? as they many times do their Legends, which the wiser sort among them do not believe when they read them. For all things are alike to them that understand none; as all things are of a colour in the dark. Ignorance knows no difference of things; it is only knowledge that can distinguish.

3. They say that some do, at least in some measure, understand the particular prayers. If they do, that is no thanks to them. It is by accident if they are more knowing than the rest; and more than the Church either desires or intends. For if they desired it, they might order their service so, as every man might understand it.

4. They say that it is convenient that God should be served and worshipped in the same Language all the world over. Convenient for whom? For God? or for the People? Not for God surely. For he understands all other Languages as well as Latin, and for any thing we know to the contrary likes them as well. And certainly it cannot be so convenient for the People, because they generally understand no Language but their own; and it is very inconvenient they should not understand what they do in the Service of God. But perhaps they mean that it is convenient for the Roman Church to have it so; because this will look like an argument that they are the Catholic tholick or universal Church, when the Language which was originally theirs shall be the universal Language in which all Nations shall serve God ; and by this means also they may bring all Nations to be of their Religion, and yet make them never the wiser ; and this is a very great convenience, because knowledge is a troublesome thing, and ignorance very quiet and peaceable, rendring men fit to be governed, and unfit to dispute.

II. As to their depriving the people of the Scriptures, the summ of what they say may be reduced to these three Heads.

1. That the Church can give leave to men to read the Scriptures. But this not without great trouble and difficulty : there must be a License for it under the hand of the Bishop or Inquisitor, by the Advice of the Priest or Confessor, concerning the fitness of the Person that desires this Privilege ; And we may be sure they will think none fit, but those of whom they have the greatest confidence and security : And whoever presumes to do it otherwise, is to be denied absolution ; which is, as much as in them lies, to damn men for presuming to read the Word of God without their leave.

And, whatever they may allow here in England, where they hold their people upon more slippery terms, yet this privilege is very rarely granted where they are in full possession of their power, and have the people perfectly under their Yoke.

2. They tell us they instruct the people otherwise. This indeed were something if they did it to purpose ; but generally they do it very sparingly and slightly. Their Sermons are commonly made up of feigned stories and miracles of Saints, and exhortations to the worship of them, (and especially of the blessed Virgin) and of their Images and Relicks. And for the truth of this I appeal to the innumerable Volumes of their Sermons and Posits in print ; which I suppose are none of their worst. I am sure Eraſmus says that in his time in several Countries the People did scarce once in half a year hear a profitable Sermon to exhort them to true piety. Indeed they allow the people some Catechisms and Manuals of devotion ; and yet in many of them they have the conscience and the confidence to steal away the second Commandment in the face of the eighth.

But, to bring the matter to a point, if those helps of instruction are agreeable to the Scriptures, why are they so afraid the people should read the Scriptures ? if they are not, why do they deceive and delude them ?

3. They say that people are apt to wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction, and that the promiscuous use of them hath been the great occasion of Heresies. It cannot be denied to be the condition of the very best things in the world, that they are liable to be abused : health and light and liberty, as well as knowledge. But must all these be therefore taken away ? This very inconvenience of peoples wresting the Scriptures to their own ruin St. Peter takes notice of in his days ; but he does not therefore forbid men the reading of them, as his more prudent Successours have done since. Suppose the reading of the Scriptures hath been the occasion of Heresies ; were there ever more than in the first Ages of Christianity ? and yet neither the Apostles nor their Successours ever prescribed this remedy. But are they in earnest ? must not men know the truth for fear of falling into Errour ? Because men may possibly miss their way at noon-day, must they never travel but in the night, when they are sure to lose it ?

And when all is done, this is not true, that Heresies have sprung from this cause. They have generally been broached by the learned, from whom the Scriptures neither were, nor could be concealed. And for this I appeal to the History and Experience of all Ages. I am well assured the ancient Fathers were of another mind. St. Chrysostom says, If men would be conversant in the Scriptures and attend to them, they would not only fall into errors themselves, but rescue those that are deceived: And that the Scriptures would instruct men both in right opinions and a good life. And St. Hierome more expressly to our purpose. That infinite evils arise from the Ignorance of the Scriptures; and that from that cause the most part of Heresies have come.

But if what they say were true, is not this to lay the blame of all the ancient Heresies upon the ill management of things by our Saviour, and his Apostles, and the holy Fathers of the Church for so many Ages, and their imprudent dispensing of the Scriptures to the people? This indeed is to charge the matter home; and yet this consequence is unavoidable. For the Church of Rome cannot justify the piety and prudence of their present practices, without accusing all these.

But the thing which they mainly rely upon as to both these practices is this. That though these things were otherwise in the Apostles times, and in the Ancient Church, yet the Church hath power to alter them according to the exigence and circumstances of time. I have purposely reserved this for the last place, because it is their last refuge; and if this fail them they are gone.

To shew the weakness of this pretence, we will, if they please, take it for granted, that the Governours of the Church have in no Age more power, than the Apostles had in theirs. Now St. Paul tells us, 2 Cor. 10. 8. that the Authority which the Apostles had given them from the Lord, was only for edification but not for destruction: And the same St. Paul makes it the business of a whole Chapter to shew that the performing the publick service of God, and particularly Praying in an unknown Tongue, are contrary to edification; from which premises the conclusion is plain, That the Apostles themselves had no Authority to appoint the service of God to be performed in an unknown Tongue; and surely it is Arrogance for the Church in any Age to pretend greater Authority than the Apostles had.

This is the summ of what our Adversaries say in justification of themselves in these points. And there is no doubt, but that men of wit and confidence will always make a shift to say something for any thing: and some way or other blanch over the blackest and most absurd things in the world. But I leave it to the judgment of mankind whether any thing be more unreasonable than to tell men in effect, that it is fit they should understand as little of Religion as is possible; that God hath published a very dangerous Book, with which it is not safe for the people to be familiarly acquainted; that our blessed Saviour and his Apostles and the ancient Christian Church for more than six hundred years were not wise managers of Religion, nor prudent dispensers of the Scriptures; but like fond and foolish Fathers put a knife and a sword into the hands of their Children, with which they might easily have foreseen what mischief they would do to themselves and others. And who would not chuse to be of such a Church which is provided of such excellent and effectual means of Ignorance, such wise and infallible methods for the prevention of knowledge in the people, and such variety of close shutters to keep out the light?

I have chosen to insist upon this Argument, because it is so very plain, that the most ordinary capacity may judge of this usage and dealing with the souls of men; which is so very gross that every man must needs be sensible of it; because it toucheth men in the common rights of human nature, which belong to them as much as the light of heaven, and the air we breathe in.

It requires no subtilty of wit, no skill in Antiquity, to understand these Controversies between us and the Church of Rome. For there are no Fathers to be pretended on both sides in these Questions: They yield we have Antiquity on ours: And we refer it to the common sense of Mankind, which Church, that of Rome or Ours, hath all the right and reason in the world on her side in these debates? And, who they are that tyrannize over Christians, the Governours of their Church or ours; who use the people like sons and freemen, and who like slaves; who feed the Flock of Christ committed to them, and who take the Childrens bread from them? Who they are that when their Children ask bread, for bread give them a stone; and for an egg a serpent; I mean the Legends of their Saints instead of the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make men wise unto salvation: And who they are that lie most justly under the suspicion of Errours and Corruptions, they who bring their Doctrine and Practices into the open light, and are willing to have them tryed by the true touchstone, the Word of God; or they who shun the light, and decline all manner of tryal and examination? and who are most likely to carry on a worldly design, they who drive a trade of such mighty gain and advantage under pretence of Religion, and make such markers of the ignorance and sins of the people; or we whom malice it self cannot charge with serving any worldly design by any allowed Doctrine or Practice of our Religion? for we make no money of the mistakes of the people, nor do we fill their heads with vain fears of new places of torment to make them willing to empty their purses in a vainer hope of being delivered out of them. We do not like them pretend a mighty bank and treasure of Merits in the Church, which they sell to the people for ready money, giving them bills of Exchange from the Pope to Purgatory; when they who grant them have no reason to believe they will avail them, or be accepted in the other World.

For our parts we have no fear that our people should understand Religion too well: We could wish, with Moses, that all the Lord's people were Prophets: We should be heartily glad the people would read the holy Scriptures more diligently, being sufficiently assured that it is their own fault if they learn any thing but what is good from thence: We have no Doctrines or Practices contrary to Scripture, and consequently no occasion to keep it close from the sight of the people, or to hide any of the Commandments of God from them: We leave these mean arts to those who stand in need of them.

In a word, there is nothing which God hath said to men, which we desire should be concealed from them: Nay, we are willing the people should examine what we teach, and bring all our Doctrines to the Law and to the Testimony; that if they be not according to this Rule, they may neither believe them nor us 'Tis only things false and adulterate which shun the light and fear the touchstone. We have that security of the truth of our Religion, and of the agreeableness of it to the word of God; that honest confidence of the goodness of our Cause, that we do not forbid the people to read the best Books our Adversaries can write against it.

And now let any impartial man judge whether this be not a better argument of a good Cause, to leave men at liberty to try the grounds of their Religion, than the courses which are taken in the Church of Rome, to awe men with an Inquisition; and, as much as is possible, to keep the common people in Ignorance, not only of what their late Adversaries, the Protestants, but their chief and ancient Adversary, the Scriptures, have to say against them.

A man had need of more than common security of the skill and integrity of those to whom he perfectly resigns his understanding ; this is too great a Trust to be reposed in humane frailty, and too strong a temptation to others to impose upon us ; to abuse our blindness, and to make their own ends of our voluntary Ignorance and easie credulity. This is such a folly as if a rich man should make his Physician his heir ; which is to tempt him either to destroy him or to let him die, for his own Interest. So he that trusts the care of his Soul with other men, and at the same time by irrevocable Deed settles his understanding upon them, lays too great a temptation before them to seduce and damn him for their own ends.

And now to reflect a little upon our selves. What cause have we to bless God who are so happily rescued from that more than Egyptian darkness and bondage, wherein this Nation was detained for several Ages, who are delivered out of the hands of those cruel task-masters, who required brick without straw ; that men should be religious without competent understanding, and work out their own salvation while they denied them the means of all others the most necessary to it ; who are so uncharitable as to allow us no salvation out of their Church, and yet so unreasonable as to deny us the very best means of salvation when we are in it.

Our Forefathers thought it a mighty privilege to have the Word of God restored to them, and the publick prayers and service of God celebrated in a known Tongue. Let us use this inestimable privilege with great modesty and humility ; not to the nourishing of pride and self-conceit, of division and faction ; but as the Apostle exhorts, Let the word of God dwell richly in you, in all wisdom ; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts, unto which ye are called in one body ; and be ye thankful.

It concerns us mightily (with which admonition I shall conclude) both for the honour and support of our Religion, to be at better union among our selves, and not to divide about lesser things : and so to demean our selves, as to take from our Adversaries all those pretences whereby they would justify themselves, or at least extenuate the guilt of that heavy charge, which falls every whit as justly upon them as ever it did upon the Scribes and Pharisees, of taking away the key of knowledge, and shutting the kingdom of heaven against men, neither going in themselves, nor suffering those that are entering to go in.

S E R M O N XXXI.

The Parable of the ten Virgins.

Preached before her Royal Highness the Princess Ann of Denmark at Tunbridge-Wells, September the 2d. 1688.

Matthew xxv. 1, 2, &c.

Then shall the Kingdom of Heaven be likened unto ten Virgins, which took their Lamps, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish, &c.

My Design at present is to explain this Parable, and to make such Observations upon it as seem most naturally and without squeezing the Parable to spring from it: And then to make some Application of it to our selves.

Then shall the Kingdom of Heaven be likened unto ten Virgins:

By the Kingdom of Heaven is meant the state and condition of things under the Gospel; By the ten Virgins, those who embraced the Profession of it, which is here represented by their taking their Lamps and going forth to meet the Bridegroom: in allusion to the ancient Custom of Marriages, in which the Bridegroom was wont to lead home his Bride in the Night by the Light of Lamps or Torches.

But this Profession was not in all equally firm and fruitful; and therefore those who preserv'd and continued stedfast in this Profession, notwithstanding all the temptations and allurements of the World, and all the fierce storms and assaults of Persecution to which this Profession was exposed; and being thus firmly rooted in it, did bring forth the fruits of the Spirit and abound in the Graces and Virtues of a good Life; These are the wise Virgins: But those who either deserted this Profession, or did not bring forth Fruits answerable to it, are the foolish Virgins.

And that this is the true difference between them will appear, if we consider how the Parable represents them, vers. 3, 4. They that were foolish took their Lamps, and took no Oyl with them: But the wise took Oyl in their Vessels with their Lamps. So that they both took their Lamps, and both lighted them, and therefore must both be suppos'd to have some Oyl in their Lamps at first, as appears from verse 8. where the foolish Virgins said unto the wise, give us of your Oyl, for our Lamps are gone out. They had it seems some Oyl in their Lamps at first, which kept them lighted for a little while, but had taken no care for a future supply. And therefore the difference between the wise and foolish Virgins did not, as some have imagin'd, consist in this, that the wise Virgins had Oyl, but the foolish had none; but in this, that the foolish had taken no care for a further supply, after the Oyl which was at first put into their Lamps was spent; as the wise had done, who besides the Oyl that was in their Lamps carried likewise a Reserve in some other Vessel, for a continual supply of the Lamp, as there should be occasion; the wise took Oyl in their Vessels with their Lamps.

Now the meaning of all this is, That they who are represented by the wise Virgins had not only embraced the Profession of the Christian Religion, as the foolish Virgins also had done, for they both had their Lamps lighted; but they likewise persever'd in that Profession, and brought forth fruits answerable to it. For by Oyl in their Lamps and the first lighting of them, which was common to them both, is meant that solemn Profession of Faith and Repentance which all Christians make in Baptism: By that farther supply of Oyl, which the wise Virgins only took care to provide, is signified our constancy and perseverance in this Profession, together with the fruits of the Spirit, and the improvement of the Grace received in Baptism by the practice and exercise of all the Graces and Virtues of a good life whereby men are fitted and prepar'd for Death and Judgment, which are here represented to us by the coming of the Bridegroom.

This being plainly the main scope and intention of the Parable, I shall explain the rest of it, as there shall be occasion, under the several Observations which I shall raise from the several parts of it. And they shall be these.

First, I observe the charitable Decorum which our B. Saviour keeps in this as well as in the rest of his Parables; as if He would fain suppose and hope, that among those who enjoy the Gospel and make profession of it, the number of them that are truly good is equal to those that are bad. For our B. Saviour here represents the whole number of the Professours of Christianity by ten Virgins, the half whereof the Parable seems to suppose to be truly and really good, and to persevere in goodness to the end, ver. 1, 2. Then shall the Kingdom of Heaven be likened unto ten Virgins, which took their Lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom: And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

Secondly, I observe how very common it is for men to neglect this great concernment of their Souls, viz. a due preparation for another World; and how willing men are to deceive themselves herein, and to depend upon any thing else, how groundless and unreasonable soever, rather than to take pains to be really good and fit for Heaven. And this is in a very lively manner represented to us in the description of the foolish Virgins, who had provided no supply of Oyl in their Vessels, and when the Bridegroom was coming would have furnished themselves by borrowing or buying of others, vers. 8, 9, 10.

Thirdly, I observe, That even the better sort of Christians are not careful and watchful as they ought to prepare themselves for Death and Judgment:
Whilst

Whilst the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept ; even the wise Virgins as well as the foolish.

Fourthly, I observe further, how little is to be done by us, to any good purpose, in this great work of Preparation, when it is deferr'd and put off to the last. Thus the foolish Virgins did, and what a sad confusion and hurry they were in we may see ver. 6, 7, 8, 9. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold ! the Bridegroom cometh ; go ye out to meet Him. At midnight ; the most dismal and unseasonable time of all other : Then all those Virgins arose, and trimmed their Lamps : and the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your Oyl for our Lamps are gone out : But the wise answered, not so ; lest there be not enough for us and you ; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for your selves. And how ineffectual all that they could do at that time prov'd to be, we find ; vers. 10, 12, 12 ; And whilst they went to buy the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterwards came also the other Virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us : But he answered and said, verily I say unto you, I know you not.

Fifthly, I observe that there is no such thing as Works of Super-erogation, That no man can do more than needs, and is his duty to do, by way of preparation for another World. For when the foolish Virgins would have beg'd of the wise some Oyl for their Lamps, the wise answered, not so, lest there be not enough for us and you. It was only the foolish Virgins that had entertain'd this foolish conceit, that there might be an over-plus of Grace and Merit in others sufficient to supply their want : But the wise knew not of any that they had to spare, but suppos'd all that they had little enough to qualify them for the reward of eternal life ; Not so, say they, μὴ ποτε, lest at any time, lest when there should be need and occasion, all that we have done, or could do, should prove little enough for our selves.

Sixthly and lastly, I observe, That if we could suppose any persons to be so over-good, as to have more grace and goodness than needs to qualify them for the reward of eternal life, yet there is no assigning and transferring of this over-plus of Grace and Virtue from one man to another. For we see, vers. 9, 10. that all the ways which they could think of, of borrowing, or buying Oyl of others, did all prove ineffectual ; because the thing is in its own nature impracticable, that one Sinner should be in a condition to merit for another.

All these Observations seem to have some fair and probable foundation in some part or other of this Parable ; and most of them, I am sure, are agreeable to the main scope and intention of the whole. I shall speak to them severally, and as briefly as I can.

First, I observe the charitable Decorum which our B. Saviour keeps in this, as well as in the rest of his Parables ; as if he would fain suppose and hope, that among those who enjoy the Gospel and make Profession of it, the number of those who make a firm and sincere Profession of it, and persevere in goodness to the end, is equal to the number of those who do not make good their Profession, or who fall off from it.

I shall not be long upon this, because I lay the least stress upon it, of all the rest. I shall only take notice, that our B. Saviour in this Parable represents the whole number of the Professors of Christianity by ten Virgins, the half of which the Parable seems to suppose to have sincerely embraced the Christian Profession, and to have persever'd therein to the last ; The Kingdom of Heaven shall be likened unto ten Virgins, which took their Lamps, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom : And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

And this Decorum our B. Saviour seems carefully to observe in his other Parables: As in the Parable of the Prodigal, Luke 15. where for one Son that left his Father, and took riotous courses, there was another that stayed always with him and continued constant to his duty. And in the Parable of the ten Talents which immediately follows that of the ten Virgins, two are supposed to improve the Talents committed to them, for one that made no improvement of his. He that had five Talents committed to him made them five more, and he that had two gained other two; and only he that had but one Talent, hid it in the earth, and made no improvement of it. And in the Parable which I am now upon, the number of the Professors of Christianity, who took care to fit and prepare themselves for the coming of the Bridegroom, is supposed equal to the number of those who did not.

And whether this be particularly intended in the Parable or not, it may however be thus far instructive to us; That we should be so far from lessening the number of true Christians, and from confining the Church of Christ within a narrow compass, so as to exclude out of its Communion the far greatest part of the Professors of Christianity; that on the contrary, we should enlarge the Kingdom of Christ as much as we can, and extend our charity to all Churches and Christians, of what Denomination soever, as far as regard to Truth and to the foundations of the Christian Religion will permit us to believe and hope well of them; and rather be contented to err a little on the favourable and charitable part than to be mistaken on the censorious and damning side.

And for this reason perhaps it is, that our B. Saviour thought fit to frame his Parables with so remarkable a Byass to the charitable side: Partly to instruct us, to extend our charity towards all Christian Churches, and Professors of the Christian Religion, and our good hopes concerning them, as far as with reason we can: And partly to reprove the uncharitableness of the Jews, who positively excluded all the rest of Mankind, besides themselves, from all hopes of Salvation. An odious temper, which to the infinite Scandal of the Christian Name and Profession, hath prevail'd upon some Christians to that notorious degree, as not only to shut out all the Reform'd Part of the Western Church, almost equal in number to themselves, from all hopes of Salvation under the notion of Hereticks; but likewise to unchurch all the other Churches of the Christian World, which are of much greater extent and number than themselves, that do not own subjection to the Bishop of Rome: And this they do, by declaring it to be of necessity to Salvation for every Creature to be subject to the Roman Bishop. And this Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome over all Christian Churches Bellarmin calls the Sum of the Christian Religion. So that the Roman Communion is plainly founded in Schism, that is, in the most unchristian and uncharitable Principle that can be, namely, that they are the only true Church of Christ, out of which none can be saved: which was the very Schism of the Donatists. And in this they are so positive, that the learned men of that Church, in their Disputes and Writings, are much more inclinable to believe the Salvation of Heathens to be possible, than of any of those Christians whom they are pleas'd to call Hereticks. The Faith of the Church of Rome is certainly none of the best; but one of the greatest and most essential Vertues of the Christian Religion, I mean Charity, I doubt they have the least share of any Christian Church this day in the World.

Secondly, I observe, not from any particular circumstance, but from the main Scope and design of this Parable, How very apt a great part of Christians are to neglect this great concernment of their Souls, viz. a careful and due preparation for another World; and how willing they are to deceive themselves in this matter, and to depend upon any thing else, how groundless and unreasonable soever, rather than to take the pains to be really good and fit for Heaven. And this is in a very lively manner represented to us in the description of the foolish Virgins, who had provided no supply of Oyl in their Vessels, and when the Bridegroom was coming would have furnish'd themselves by borrowing or buying of others, vers. 8, 9, 10. They contented themselves with having their Lamps lighted at their first setting out to meet the Bridegroom, that is, with their being admitted into the Profession of Christianity by Baptism, but either were not stedfast in this Profession, or were not careful to adorn it with the Graces and Virtues of a good life. II.

And the true Reason why men are so very apt to deceive themselves in this matter, and are so hardly brought to those things wherein Religion mainly consists, I mean the fruits of the Spirit and the practice of real Goodness; I say, the true reason of this is, because they are extremely desirous to reconcile, if it were possible, the hopes of eternal happiness in another World with a liberty to live as they list in this present World: They are loth to be at the trouble and drudgery of mortifying their lusts, and governing their passions, and bridling their tongues, and practising all those duties which are comprehended in those two great Commandments of the Love of God and of our Neighbour: They would fain gain the favour of God, and make their calling and election sure, by some easier way than by giving all diligence to add to their Faith and Knowledge the Graces and Virtues of a good life.

For the plain truth of the matter is, men had rather that Religion should be any thing than what indeed it is, viz. the thwarting and crossing of their vicious inclinations, the curing of their evil and corrupt affections, the due care and government of their unruly appetites and passions, the sincere endeavour and the constant practice of all holiness and virtue in their lives: And therefore they had much rather have something that might handsomely palliate and excuse their evil inclinations and practices, than to be obliged to retrench and renounce them; and rather than amend and reform their wicked lives, they would be contented to make an honourable amends and compensation to Almighty God in some other way.

This hath been the way and folly of Mankind in all ages, to defeat the great end and design of Religion, and to thrust it by, by substituting something else in the place of it, which, as they think, may serve the turn as well, having the appearance of as much devotion and respect towards God, and really costing them more money and pains, than that which God requires of them. Men have ever been apt thus to impose upon themselves, and to please themselves with a conceit of pleasing God full as well, or better, by some other way than that which he hath prescribed and appointed for them.

By this means, and upon this false Principle, Religion hath ever been apt to degenerate both among Jews and Christians, into external and little observances, and into a great zeal for lesser things with a total neglect of the greater and weightier matters of Religion; and, in a word, into infinite Superstitions of one kind or other, and an arrogant conceit of the extraordinary traordinary righteousness and merit of these things : In which some have proceeded to that height, as if they could drive a strict bargain with God for eternal life and happiness ; and have treated Him in so insolent a manner, by their Doctrine of the Merit of their Devotions and good Works, as if God were as much beholden to them for their service and obedience, as they are to Him for the reward of them ; which they are not afraid to say they may challenge at God's hands as of right and justice belonging to them.

Nay, so far have they carried this Doctrine in the Church of Rome, as not only to pretend to merit eternal life for themselves, but likewise to do a great deal more for the benefit and advantage of others who have not righteousness and goodness enough of their own : Which was the silly conceit of the foolish Virgins. here in the Parable, as I shall have occasion to shew more fully by and by.

And it is no great wonder that such easie ways of Religion and pleasing God are very grateful to the corrupt Nature of Man, and that men who are resolv'd to continue in an evil course are glad to be of a Church which will assure Salvation to men upon such terms : The great difficulty is, for men to believe that things which are so apparently absurd and unreasonable can be true ; and to perswade themselves that they can impose upon God by such pretences of service and obedience, as no wise Prince or Father upon earth is to be deluded withal by his Subjects or Children. We ought to have worthier thoughts of God, and to consider that He is a great King, and will be obey'd and observ'd by his Creatures in his own way, and make them happy upon his own terms : and that obedience to what he commands is better and more acceptable to him than any other Sacrifice that we can offer, which he hath not required at our hands : and likewise, that he is infinitely wise and good ; and therefore that the Laws, which he hath given us to live by, are much more likely and certain means of our happiness, than any inventions and devices of our own.

Thirdly, I observe that even the better and more considerate sort of Christians are not so careful and watchful as they ought to prepare themselves for Death and Judgment ; whilst the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. Even the Disciples of our Saviour, whilst he was yet personally present with them, and after a particular charge given them from his own mouth, Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation ; yet did not keep that guard upon themselves as to watch with him for one hour. In many things, says St. James, we offend all ; even the best of us : And who is there that doth not, some time or other, remit of his vigilancy and care, so as to give the Devil an advantage and to lye open to temptation, for want of a continual guard upon himself ? But then the difference between the wise and foolish Virgins was this, that though they both slept, yet the wise did not let their Lamps go out ; they neither quitted their Profession, nor did they extinguish it by a bad life : and though when the Bridegroom came suddenly upon them, they were not so actually prepar'd to meet him by a continual vigilancy, yet they were habitually prepar'd by the good disposition of their minds and the general course of a holy life : Their Lamps might burn dim for want of continual trimming, but they had Oyl in their Vessels to supply their Lamps, which the foolish Virgins had taken no care to provide. But surely the greatest wisdom of all is to maintain a continual watchfulness, that so we may not be surpriz'd by the coming of the Bridegroom, and be in a confusion when Death or Judgment shall overtake us. And blessed are those Servants, and wise indeed, whose Lamps always burn bright, bright, and whom the Bridegroom when he comes shall find watching, and in a fit posture and preparation to meet Him.

Fourthly, I observe likewise, how little is to be done by us, to any good purpose, in this great work of Preparation, when it is deferr'd and put off to the last. And thus the foolish Virgins did, but what a sad confusion and hurry they were in at the sudden coming of the Bridegroom, when they were not only asleep, but when after they were awaken'd they found themselves altogether unprovided of that which was necessary to trim their Lamps, and to put them in a posture to meet the Bridegroom: When they wanted that which was necessary at that very instant, but could not be provided in an instant: I say, what a tumult and confusion they were in, being thus surpriz'd, the Parable represents to us at large, vers. 6, 7, 8, 9. and at midnight there was a cry made, Behold! the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all those Virgins arose and trimmed their Lamps, that is, they went about it as well as they could; and the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your Oil, for our Lamps are gone out.

At midnight there was a cry made, that is, at the most dismal and unreasonable time of all other; when they were fast asleep, and suddenly awaken'd in great terrour, when they could not on the sudden recollect themselves, and consider what to do; when the summons was so very short, that they had neither time to consider what was fit to be done, nor time to do it in.

And such is the Case of those who put off their Repentance and Preparation for another World, till they are surpriz'd by Death and Judgment; for it comes all to one in the issue, which of them it be. The Parable indeed seems more particularly to point at our Lord's coming to Judgment, but the case is much the same as to those who are surpriz'd by sudden Death; such as gives them but little, or not sufficient time for so great a work: because such as Death leaves them, Judgment will certainly find them.

And what a miserable confusion must they needs be in, who are thus surpriz'd either by the one or the other? How unfit should we be, if the general Judgment of the World should come upon us on the sudden, to meet that great Judge at his coming, if we have made no preparation for it before that time? What shall we then be able to do, in that great and universal conlternation, when the Son of man shall appear in the clouds of Heaven, with power and great glory; when the Sun shall be darken'd, and the Moon turned into blood, and all the powers of Heaven shall be shaken: when all Nature shall feel such violent pangs and convulsions, and the whole World shall be in a combustion flaming and cracking about our ears: When the Heavens shall be shrivel'd up as a Scroll when it is roll'd together, and the Earth shall be tofs'd from its Center, and every Mountain and Island shall be removed? What thoughts can the wisest men then have about them, in the midst of so much noise and terrour? Or if they could have any, what time will there then be to put them in execution? when they shall see the Angel, that standeth upon the Sea and upon the Earth, lifting up his hand to Heaven, and swearing by Him that liveth for ever and ever that Time shall be no longer; as this dreadful Day is described, Rev. 10. 5, 6. and chap. 6. 15. where Sinners are represented at the Appearance of this Great Judge, not as flying to God in hopes of mercy, but as flying from Him in utter despair of finding mercy with him: The Kings of the Earth, and the Great Men, and the Mighty Men, and the Rich Men, and the Great Captains hid themselves in the Dens and in the Rocks of the Earth; and said to the Mountains and Rocks, fall on us and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb : For the Great Day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand ? The biggest and the boldest Sinners that ever were upon Earth, shall then flee from the face of Him whom they have so often blasphemed and denied ; and shall so far despair of finding mercy with Him in that Day, who would sue to Him for it no sooner, that they shall address themselves to the Mountains and Rocks, as being more pitiful and exorable than He ; to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb : From the wrath of the Lamb, to signify to us that nothing is more terrible than Meekness and Patience when they are thoroughly provok'd and turn'd into Fury.

In such dreadful confusion shall all impenitent Sinners be, when they shall be surpriz'd by that Great and terrible Day of the Lord : And the Case of a dying Sinner, who would take no care in the time of his Life and Health to make preparation for another World, is not much more hopeful and comfortable.

For alas ! how little is it that a sick and dying man can do in such a strait of time ? in the midst of so much pain and weakness of Body, and of such confusion and amazement of Mind. With what heart can he set about so great a Work, for which there is so little time ? With what face can he apply himself to God in this extremity, whom he hath so disdainfully neglected all the days of his Life ? And how can he have the confidence to hope, that God will hear his cries and regard his tears that are forc'd from him in this day of his necessity ? when he is conscious to himself that in that long day of God's Grace and Patience he turned a deaf ear to all his merciful invitations, and rejected the counsel of God against himself. In a word, how can he who would not know, in that his Day, the things which belonged to his peace, expect any other but that they should now be for ever hid from his eyes, which are ready to be clos'd in utter darkness ?

I will not pronounce any thing concerning the impossibility of a Death-bed Repentance : But I am sure that it is very difficult, and I believe very rare. We have but one Example, that I know of, in the whole Bible of the Repentance of a dying Sinner ; I mean that of the penitent Thief upon the Cross : And the circumstances of his Case are so peculiar and extraordinary, that I cannot see that it affords any ground of hope and encouragement to men in ordinary Cases. We are not like to suffer in the company of the Son of God and of the Saviour of the World ; and if we could do so, it is not certain that we should behave our selves towards Him so well as the penitent Thief did, and make so very good an end of so very bad a Life.

And the Parable in the Text is so far from giving any encouragement to a Death-bed Repentance and Preparation, that it rather represents their Case as desperate who put off their Preparation to that Time. How ineffectual all that the foolish Virgins could do at that time did in the conclusion prove, is set forth to us at large in the Parable ; They wanted Oyl, but could neither borrow nor buy it : They would then fain have had it, and ran about to get it ; but it was not to be obtain'd neither by entreaty, nor for money : First they apply themselves to the wise Virgins, for a share in the over-plus of their Graces and Virtues ; the foolish said unto the wise, give us of your Oyl for our Lamps are gone out ; but the wise answered not so ; left there be not enough for us and you : The wise Virgins, it seems knew of none they had to spare : And then they are represented as ironically sending the foolish Virgins to some famous Market where this Oyl was pretended to be sold ; go v. 8.

ye rather ~~to~~ them that sell and buy for your selves: And as dying and desperate v. 9. persons are apt to catch at every twig, and when they can see no hopes of being saved, are apt to believe every one that will give them any; so these foolish Virgins follow the advice; and whilst they went to buy, the v. 10.
Bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut; and afterwards came also the other Virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us; but he answered and said, verily I say unto you, I know you not.

You see how little, or rather no encouragement at all there is from any the least circumstance in this Parable, for those who have delay'd their Preparation for another World till they be overtaken by Death or Judgment, to hope by any thing that they can then do, by any importunity which they can then use, to gain admission into Heaven. Let those consider this with fear and trembling, who forget God and neglect Religion all their Life-time, and yet feed themselves with vain hopes by some Device or other to be admitted into Heaven at last.

Fifthly, I observe that there is no such thing as Works of Super-errogation, v.
that is, that no man can do more than needs, and than is his duty to do, by way of Preparation for another World. For when the foolish Virgins would v. 8. have begg'd of the wise some Oyl for their Lamps, the wise answered, not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: It was only the foolish Virgins that in the v. 9.
time of their extremity, and when they were conscious that they wanted that which was absolutely necessary to qualify them for admission into Heaven, who had entertain'd this idle Conceit that there might be an over-plus of Grace and Merit in others sufficient to supply their want: But the wise knew not of any they had to spare, but supposed all that they had done, or could possibly do, to be little enough to qualify them for the glorious Reward of eternal Life: Not so, say they, μὴ ποτε lest at any time, that is, lest when there should be need and occasion, all that we have done, or could do, should be little enough for our selves: And in this Point they had been plainly instructed by the Bridegroom himself, But ye, when ye have done all, say we are unprofitable servants, and have done nothing but what was our duty to do.

And yet this Conceit of the foolish Virgins, as absurd as it is, hath been taken up in good earnest by a grave Matron, who gives out her self to be the Mother and Mistress of all Churches, and the only infallible Oracle of Truth, I mean the Church of Rome, whose avowed Doctrine it is, that there are some Persons so excellently good that they may do more than needs for their own Salvation: And therefore when they have done as much for themselves as in strict duty they are bound to do, and thereby have paid down a full and valuable consideration for Heaven, and as much as in equal justice, between God and Man it is worth; that then they may go to work again for their Friends, and begin a new Score; and from that time forwards may put the Surplusage of their good Works as a Debt upon God, to be laid up in the Publick Treasury of the Church, as so many Bills of Credit which the Pope by his Pardons and Indulgences may dispense, and place to whose account he pleases: And out of this Bank, which is kept at Rome, those who never took care to have any Righteousness of their own may be supplied at reasonable rates.

To which they have added a further supply of Grace, if there should be any need of it, by the Sacrament of extreme Unction, never heard of in the Christian Church for many Ages; but devised, as it were on purpose, pose, to furnish such foolish Virgins with Oyl as are here described in the Parable.

And thus by one Device or other they have enervated the Christian Religion to that degree, that it hath almost quite lost its true virtue and efficacy upon the hearts and lives of men: And, instead of the real fruits of Goodness and Righteousness, it produceth little else but Superstition and Folly; or if it produce any real Virtues, yet even the virtue of those Virtues is in a great measure spoil'd by their arrogant pretences of Merit and Super-errogation, and is render'd insignificant to themselves by their insolent carriage and behaviour towards God.

VI. Sixthly and lastly, If we could suppose any Persons to be so overgrown with Goodness, as to have more than needs to qualify them for the Reward of eternal Life; yet there can be no assigning and transferring of this over-plus of Grace and Virtue from one man to another. For we see that all the ways that could be thought on of begging, or borrowing, or buying Oyl of others, did all prove ineffectual; because the thing is in its own nature impracticable, that one Sinner who owes all that he hath, and much more to God, should have any thing to spare wherewithal to merit for another.

Indeed our B. Saviour hath merited for us all the Reward of eternal Life, upon the Conditions of Faith and Repentance and Obedience: But the infinite Merit of his Obedience and Sufferings will be of no benefit and advantage to us, if we our selves be not really and inherently righteous. So St. John tells us, and warns us to beware of the contrary Conceit; Little Children, let no man deceive you, he that doth righteousness is righteous, even as He is righteous.

If we do sincerely endeavour to please God and to keep his Commandments in the general course of a holy and virtuous Life, the Merit of Christ's perfect Obedience and Sufferings will be available with God for the acceptance of our sincere though but imperfect Obedience. But if we take no care to be righteous and good our selves, the perfect Righteousness of Christ will do us no good; much less the imperfect righteousness of any other man who is a Sinner himself. And the holiest man that ever was upon Earth can no more assign and make over his Righteousness, or Repentance, or any part of either, to another that wants it, than a man can bequeath his Wisdom, or Learning to his Heir, or his Friend: No more than a sick man can be restored to Health by virtue of the Physick which another man hath taken.

Let no man therefore think of being good by a Deputy, that cannot be contented to be happy and to be saved the same way, that is, to go to Hell and to be tormented there in Person, and to go to Heaven and be admitted into that Place of Bliss only by Proxy. So that these good Works with a hard name, and the making over the Merit of them to others, have no manner of foundation either in Scripture or Reason, but are all meer Fancy and Fiction in Divinity.

7. 13. The Inference from all this shall be the application which our Saviour makes of this Parable, Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh; as if he had said, the design of this Parable is to instruct us that we ought to be continually vigilant, and always upon our guard, and in a constant readiness and preparation to meet the Bridegroom; because we know not the time of his coming to Judgment, nor yet, which will be of the same consequence and concernment to us, do any any of us know the precise time of our own Death. Either of these may happen at any time, and come when we least expect them. And therefore we should make the best and speediest provision that we can for another World, and should be continually upon our watch and trimming our Lamps; that we may not be surpriz'd by either of these; neither by our own particular Death, nor by the general Judgment of the World: Because the Son of man will come in a Day when we look not for Him, and at an hour when we are not aware.

More particularly, we should take up a present and effectual resolution not to delay our Repentance and the reformation of our Lives, that we may not have that great Work to do when we are not fit to do any thing; no not to dispose of our temporal Concernments, much less to prepare for Eternity, and to do that in a few moments which ought to have been the care and endeavour of our whole Lives: That we may not be forced to huddle up an imperfect, and I fear an insignificant Repentance; and to do that in great haste and confusion, which certainly does require our wisest and most deliberate thoughts, and all the consideration in the World.

And we should provide store of Oyl in our Vessels, wherewith to supply our Lamps that they may burn bright to the last; I mean, we should improve the Grace which we received in Baptism, by abounding in the fruits of the Spirit, and in all the substantial Virtues of a good Life; that so an entrance may be ministered to us abundantly into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

By this means, when we are called to meet the Bridegroom, we shall not be put to those miserable and sharking shifts which the foolish Virgins were driven to, of begging, or borrowing, or buying Oyl; which will all fail us, when we come to depend upon them: And though the dying Man may make a hard shift to support himself with these false Comforts for a little while, yet when the short Delusion is over, which will be as soon as ever he is step'd into the other World, he will to his everlasting confusion and trouble find the door of Heaven shut against him, and that notwithstanding all his vast Treasure of Pardons and Indulgences, which have cost him so much, and are worth so little, he shall never see the Kingdom of God.

And lastly, we should take great care that we do not extinguish our Lamps by quitting the Profession of our Holy Religion upon any temptation of advantage, or for fear of any loss or suffering whatsoever. This Occasion will call for all our Faith and Patience, all our Courage and Constancy, Nunc animis opus, Aeneas, nunc pectore firmo.

When it comes to this Trial, we had need to gird up the loins of our minds, to summon all our forces, and to put on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to stand fast in an evil day, and when we have done all to stand.

And now, my Brethren, to use the words of St. Peter, I testify unto you, that this is the true Grace of God wherein ye stand. The Protestant Reformed Religion, which we in this Nation profess, is the very Gospel of Christ, the true ancient Christianity. 1 Pet. 1. 12

And, for God's sake, since in this hour of Temptation, when our Religion is in so apparent hazard, we pretend to love it to that degree as to be contented to part with any thing for it, let us resolve to practise it; and to testify our love to it in the same way that our Saviour would have us shew our love to Him, by keeping his Commandments.

I will conclude all with the Apostle's Exhortation, so very proper for this purpose, and to this present Time, Only let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ, that is, chiefly and above all take care to lead lives suitable to the Christian Religion: And then, as it follows, stand fast in one Spirit, with one Mind, striving together for the Faith of the Gospel: And in nothing terrified by your Adversaries, which to them is an evident token of perdition, but to you of Salvation, and that of God.

Now unto him that is able to stablish you in the Gospel, and to keep you from falling; and to present you faultless before the presence of his Glory with exceeding joy: To the only wise God our Saviour, be Glory and Majesty, Dominion and Power, both now and ever. Amen.
